Contracts: An Analysis for Exhibitors

However, it must be remembered that a fraudulent statement made after a contract is signed has no effect. In order that a theatre owner may successfully plead fraudulent or misrepresenting statements he must show that he relied on such statements when making the contract which he desires to repudiate.

Contract By Correspondence

IT IS well established that a contract made by a series of letters and telegrams is equally as binding as a written or printed contract signed by the contracting parties.

Also, the general principles of the law of contracts are applicable in determining the rights of the litigants and the outcome of legal controversies involving agreements made by correspondence, although many numerous additional complications may be found in this class of contracts. The law relating to this subject is seldom explained. Therefore, few theatre owners are correctly informed of their rights and liabilities.

Usually contracts by correspondence two or more communications and, generally, the first letter, message or telegram contains an offer from one party to do a certain thing at a stipulated price. The most important element is that if the theatre owner simply accepts the offer without modification, a valid contract is made and each party is immediately bound by the agreement.

However, if the theatre owner who receives the proposal fails to accept the offer, or write saying that he will accept the offer if certain changes are made, he is not bound.

For illustration, in a late case (263 Pac. 126), it was shown that a stock company, being desirous of booking an engagement for their dramatic show, sent to the owner of a motion picture theatre a telegram offering a four week bill at stated terms. Several telegrams were exchanged and finally the theatre owner accepted the exact offer made by the stock company. Later litigation developed and the stock company sued the theatre owner for $3,250 damages. Since it was proved that the theatre owner had violated the agreement the court rendered its verdict in favor of the company and stated the following law:

"No contract is complete without the mutual assent of all the necessary parties to all of its terms. So long as the negotiation remains open, neither party is bound; the one may decline to accept or the offer may be withdrawn by the other. The offer of acceptance as modified or added would be a new or counter proposal, and would require an acceptance, according to its terms, before it could be said that a contract had been made. The consent must be mutual, and consent is not mutual unless the parties all agree the same thing in the same sense. . . . In determining whether or not a contract is made by correspondence and telegrams, the entire correspondence must be looked into and, if a bona fide intention of both parties to come to a definite agreement is shown, it should be construed, if possible, as to constitute an agreement rather than to defeat one."

Written Offer Accepted Verbally

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a written offer must be accepted in writing, otherwise a valid and enforceable contract is not completed.

This peculiar situation arose in the recent case of Vit Company v. Standard Company (139 Atl. 615). In this case it was shown that a theatre owner submitted an offer by letter to purchase a definite quantity of merchandise at a stipulated price. The seller immediately wrote an answering letter stating that before he should accept the offer he would obtain offers on the commodity from other purchasers. Afterward letters were exchanged, but the seller did not definitely accept the purchaser proposal. Later the buyer and seller met personally and it seems that the seller intended to orally agree to accept the original proposition submitted by the buyer. Circumstances developed which resulted in the seller refusing to deliver the merchandise, and the buyer sued to recover damages on a breached contract.

It is interesting to observe that the court held the seller not liable, saying:

"Neither set of correspondence shows the two essential elements of a contract, a plain offer and unqualified acceptance. A contract must arise from the acceptance of the last-stated terms, and the acceptance must be identical, in order to bring the minds of the parties together. It is evident from this correspondence that the parties were negotiating to buy and sell, and that each set of letters refers only to proposed understandings which were to be concluded in the future; whereas if a right of recovery is to be shown, the terms of a concluded agreement must appear . . . the ingenious attempt of plaintiff (buyer) to derive contracts out of the correspondence in this case by treating defendant's (seller's) letters as final acceptances on definitely stated terms of offers and then, by spoken words, accepting these acceptances, utterly fails if defendant's (seller's) letters were not in fact acceptances."

Invalid Contracts

ANY CONTRACT is void and unenforceable if its object is illegal. The courts have held that if a contract contains certain important clauses which are in themselves illegal, the other clauses in the contract are not enforceable.

[Mr. Parker will continue his discussion of contract law in the next issue of Better Theatres.]

Avoiding Liability in Injury

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

A 300-POUNDER enters your theatre and seats himself. The seat gives way and the 300-pounder brings suit for personal injuries. A woman catches her coat on a projecting nail in a seat, causing it to rip and sues for property damage. In both instances, one of the most important issues on the trial will be: Was the seat that caused the personal injury or property damage, regularly and thoroughly inspected?

"The owner," says the Supreme Court of Connecticut, "assumes the duty * * * of exercising reasonable care to see that the seats are in reasonably safe condition for its guests. It performs this duty by having its servant examine the seats each day and report their condition, and thereafter repairing the defective ones." By the Supreme Court of Alabama we are told that "such inspection must be sufficiently frequent and thorough to determine the condition and to insure a reasonably safe condition." The rule in these two cases is the same in all the states.

Inability to prove upon the trial of an action for personal injuries, or for property damage, that seats were frequently inspected, is likely to result in a verdict for plaintiff.

Now while the courts insist upon "frequent and thorough" inspection, they never go into details as to how frequently or how thoroughly a seat should be inspected. Nor can they be expected to do so. Having outlined a general duty, they must wait for a specific case to be presented to them, and then determine upon the evidence whether or not a theatre owner has met this duty. However, I believe that the careful observance of the following inspection standards should satisfy any court that all possible precautions have been taken to prevent seat accidents.

How thoroughly should seats be inspected and what to look for in inspecting them? The best rule to follow is to anticipate the happening of seat accidents. Think of the different ways in which a seat may become faulty and of the different ways in which that defective seat may cause injury—then look for these defects in your seats. Look for looseness, rips in the upholstery, splinters. If a seat looks doubtful, have it immediately replaced or repaired, or if this cannot be done at once, have the seat roped off until it can be done.

I recommend the practice in use throughout several circuits, of assigning each usher to the inspection of a certain number of seats. After the last performance, each usher walks through the rows assigned to him and turns up every seat, listening for the squeak which would indicate a possible defect, and looking for any signs of looseness. He turns his flashlight on the upturned seat to detect splinters and projecting nails. If a seat appears to be out of order the usher reports it by row and seat number to the cleaner.

To avoid the shifting of responsibility for repairs, and to provide yourself with a record of inspections, the cleaner should be required to fill out and sign a report giving the location of any defective seats and the steps taken to prevent injury: i.e., replacement, repair or roping off.

"Find the defects in your equipment yourself. Don't let your patrons find them for you!"

Oriental Fantasy . . . a study indicating the romantic and scenic qualities of Paramount's cinematic version of the famous operetta, "Madame Butterfly." Its notability lies in the composition, as to both placement and lighting, effecting a delicately sensitive interpretation of theme. "Madame Butterfly" is a B. P. Schulberg Production directed by Marion Gering and Arthur Jacobson. Art direction is by Wiard Ihnen. Original story by John Luther Long. Dramatization by David Belasco. Screen play by Josephine Lovett and Joseph Moncure March. Music by Giacomo Puccini. Cinematography by David Abel. Cast: Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant, Charles Ruggles, Sandor Kallay, Irving Pichel, Helen Jerome Eddy. The player in this still is Sylvia Sidney.

DECENTRALIZING PRODUCTION WINS SUPPORT AS STIMULUS TO QUALITY

Proponents of Unit System Now Include Such Names as Lasky, Schulberg, Rogers, Schnitzer, Bischoff, and Goldwyn Again

by LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Today's big topic in production circles is the same as the one in the fields of distribution and exhibition: Decentralization.

As in the case of distribution, there are those who still believe in the system of making 40 or 50 or 60 pictures a year through one centralized studio organization, presided over by an executive production head who, no matter how much or how little authority is delegated, is finally responsible for the product of his company. On the other hand, the admitted inferiority of a great deal of product made these past two years under such a system has converted many others to the idea that unit product, in fact as well as in theory, is the answer to the demand for better pictures more economically made.

Names Cited

Entrance in a very substantial way, fully financed, of such former exponents of the mass production method as Jesse Lasky, B. P. Schulberg, Charles R. Rogers, Joseph I. Schnitzer, Sam Bischoff and others has focused much attention upon the subject. Another major executive—the newest of his rank—David O. Selznick of Radio, is now reported to be a convert to the idea of decentralized production. It is said that Sam Katz, prior to his sudden departure from Paramount, had become "sold" on the unit plan after a brief few months in the company's Hollywood studios, and had intended to proceed along such lines as far as consistently possible with next year's Paramount product.

Make no mistake about it: the changed viewpoint is not a matter of "sour grapes" with men like Lasky, Schulberg or Rogers. After carrying the back-breaking, heart-breaking burdens of tremendous production programs, these men look years younger and appear to be far happier now that they can concentrate upon eight pictures a year, and have no concern about any more. Samuel Goldwyn, who last year was induced to take charge of the entire United Artists production program, was a very unhappy man during that period. This year, again devoting his talent and energy strictly to a few Goldwyn productions, he is in better health, better spirits, and the quality of his pictures speaks for itself.

Charles R. Rogers so far has turned in to Paramount consistently successful and high-class pictures. They include "70,000 Witnesses" and "Madison Square Garden"—both currently doing satisfactory business. Pictures underway and in preparation look equally promising. When Mr. Rogers was in charge of the Pathe program for RKO-Pathe, like other large producers, he turned out pictures which ranged from good to bad; he found himself unable to function at his best when he had to try to keep track of half a dozen stories in production and an equal number in preparation.

William LeBaron, who as a unit producer twice won the Photoplay gold medal and last year was given the Academy award for "Cimarron," was anything but successful trying to grind out 60 or more pictures as executive producer for Radio, with the exception of "Cimarron" and possibly one or two others. Today, as a unit producer for Paramount, while still under an executive studio authority, he is able to concentrate his knowledge of show business on one picture at a time, and unless he is compelled to do stories he does not like, with casts and directors who do not suit him, there is reason to believe he may turn out superior product.

It is well known history that Jesse Lasky pioneered much of what was best in motion picture production. Always he has been acknowledged as being eminently qualified as a producer, as a developer of stars, directors and other talent. But his special talent got lost in the vast Paramount machine. The intimate contact was gone, and Mr. Lasky's reputation as a picture maker suffered. There is no logical reason to doubt that, if he has the time to concentrate, he can make just as good pictures as he ever did. Fox has such faith in his ability to do just this thing that the company is erecting a special building on its Westwood lot to house the Lasky staff. He works quite independently of the studio, utilizing and paying for its mechanical and technical facilities only as he requires them.

I talked one day recently very frankly and very intimately with one of the independent producers who was formerly a major mass production executive. I could not help but marvel at his appearance and demeanor in contrast to that when I had last seen him in the executive spot, responsible for an entire season's program for one of the largest companies in the business. He smiled, he relaxed, the telephone rang only once; not a secretary or a yes-man bobbed into his office while we chatted. His new desk was not piled high with scripts and memoranda as was the old desk.

Talent Lost in Mass Machinery Reasserts Itself and Product Improves, Says Independent; Economies Also Effected

The Independent

"I don't know why I couldn't see long ago that the mass production scheme wouldn't work," he observed. "It is all so very clear to me now. I got to the point where I was no good to myself or anyone else. There simply were not enough hours in a day to wade through, even perfunctorily, the matters which should have had my attention. So I carried as much as I could home at night. That isn't any good, either. I'd wake up in the night, for example, thinking about some script I had been reading. I would see a character who didn't seem to fit, and I would wonder how he got into the story, why he was there. Then, if my mind cleared, it would suddenly occur to me that this character belonged in another script I had been reading at the same time. I went to the office next day tired and weary.

"What happens now? I have one script to think of at a time. I can follow that from its original conception right through to the finished picture. I see the daily rushes. I have time to talk with the directors, with the actors, with every one connected with the picture. Perhaps in the evening I have dinner with my director, and over a cocktail or a good piece of steak we relax and plan the next day's work; go over what has been done, build up, eliminate, do everything possible to make for success. We are doing a show together. He can see me and I can see him any time of the day or night we need one another's counsel. He knows what I want; I know what he is striving for every time the camera turns over.

"You may think that an executive in a mass production schedule might turn over considerable authority to subordinates and forget about it. Theoretically he might, but practically, if he takes his job and his responsibilities seriously, he cannot. He is the one who is responsible to New York and the exhibitors for the results. If they are bad, he gets the blame. Hence, if he must take the blame, and he is conscientious, he does his best to keep track of everything. Furthermore, the men under him, knowing it is his responsibility, hesitate to act without consulting him except in minor matters. The result is congestion, delay, or unconsidered decisions made without intimate knowledge of what is going on. This must inevitably reflect in the quality of the product."

UNIT PRODUCTION WINS SUPPORT

Proponents of the mass production system argue that even if there were complete decentralization there ultimately would be no substantial economies effected, that ten independent units, for example, would spend just as much for talent and physical facilities as the same group working under a centralized authority. This is not necessarily the case. In other businesses in this country which have grown to huge proportions, it has been discovered that the overhead, the cost of doing business, does not necessarily increase in direct proportion to the volume of business done. It sometimes becomes so complex, so involved through paper work, reports, committee management, boards, inspectors and whatnot, that the overhead eats up the other advantages which might be obtained through large-scale production. General Motors makes no attempt to manufacture all its cars under one management. The case of Standard Oil splitting up into several units and finding itself making more money is well known.

Economies

Mass production, after all, grew up during the period of enormous expansion and high prosperity when motion pictures could not be made fast enough to supply the demand. Quantity, in many ways, was more important than quality. So big production machines were built to try to keep supply equal to demand. Today, quality is the only thing that can save the business from disaster. Each production must be "hand made," whether it is turned out in a big studio or a little one. Not only must there be good entertainment, but it must be done at a price which will turn a profit with fewer exhibitions and smaller rentals. The public is shopping. It doesn't just go to the pictures any more. The price of admission is a matter of serious consideration in the family budget, and, besides, Mr. Public isn't satisfied to spend his money just to see a picture, or to hear the galloping photographs talk.

Mr. Rogers, for example, bought the story of "70,000 Witnesses" after Paramount's story department had turned it down. When this was brought to the attention of Mr. Schulberg, then executive head of Paramount production, he said: "All right, it is very possible that after studying the story carefully Charlie has hit upon an idea for a screen treatment that we didn't." Rogers came in and told Schulberg how he proposed to treat the story. "Fine," said Schulberg. "I think that will make a good picture. You've got the right idea for handling it." The treatment which had come to Schulberg didn't click. Rogers, with time to study the story, got an idea which did. It was the system. No fault of Schulberg's, no fault of the writers who had worked on it for Schulberg. Rogers just happened, through careful concentration and a keen interest personally in the yarn, to get the correct angle. The picture has been well received by both press and public this fall.

Another of the top hole production executives told me he found himself in the spot where he realized that the only thing he could do, charged with the making of forty or fifty pictures, was to select the five or six which seemed to be the most important, the leaders of his program, and devote most of his attention to them. But, as he says, that did not mean that the other 35 or 40 were not important; in aggregate they were equally vital to the program. But he had to give them little or scant attention, simply because he could not possibly spread his time and talent over such a large area.

"The result," said this executive, "was that executives, actors, directors and others concerned with these other pictures—the major portion of our program—felt neglected, hurt. They sometimes thought I was showing favoritism, devoting most of my time and interest to a certain group who happened to be in charge of the half dozen pictures I had decided were most important. They had reason to feel that way, but you can readily see I was helpless. It was not because I did not want to do just as much for them; it was a physical and mental impossibility."

The independent producer can buy a story after he has read it, become enthusiastic over it, see a way of making it good screen entertainment. But, in the last analysis, he buys it strictly on his own personal judgment. With this large organization, there must be a consensus of opinion, and you can't get any five people to agree upon any story. There are story readers, story committees, production committees, technical experts, sales department reactions, all involved in deciding whether or not to buy a given story or play. Massed together they are pretty much of a jumble. I know of the case of a story which was being considered here by a major studio through this elaborate system; before they could arrive at a decision an independent bought the story for $10,000. Within two weeks the major studio decided it needed the story badly for one of its stars and offered him $50,000 for it! The independent can act more quickly, and in most cases can buy more reasonably.

Another instance is a story now in production by one of these independents. The first story conference was held September 12. The script was completed, final draft made and production started October 17. The producer declared he believed there was a saving in preparation of $50,000 over what it would have cost to get it ready under mass production.

And this doesn't mean any particular inefficiency on the part of the writers, either. A writer or two or three writers are put to work on a story. They bring in a treatment which is unsatisfactory to the production executive. But he hasn't time to sit down, go into details on the matter, work with the writers until it is developed to his satisfaction. All he can say is to try it again, or to put another set of writers on it and see what they can do, then perhaps a third set. Often, when all is said and done, they come back to the original treatment, that or a conglomeration of all of them. Meantime the cost of preparation has mounted tremendously, and possibly a high priced star or director, or both, have been idle, waiting to get under way.

One thing is important, however, if the independent producer, self-financed, is to make a success. The distributing company must make every effort to exploit and sell his picture under just as favorable terms and circumstances as it does the product made by the company, if it is also a producer. There have been many instances in the past when the distributor concentrated on his own product first, got all there was to be had for it, and what was left went to the independent picture.

Financing is an extremely difficult problem today for the independent, just as it is for everyone else. Hence, if this new independently made product for release through major distribution channels is not properly exploited, does not bring its fair return, the new independent production movement is likely to starve in very short order.

The independents also point out to the exhibitor that just because the picture which comes to him has an independent production label on it, that does not mean that it is an inexpensive picture. It must have quality, and quality now costs money, just as it always did and always will. So the exhibitor who wants to encourage such independent production must expect to pay reasonable prices if he expects to get salable product from the independent producer.

FILM "TEST BOOK" USED IN COLLEGE

The use of the motion picture in the instruction of large groups and in the advancement of scientific study gains new impetus with the addition to the curriculum of the elementary courses in psychology at Ohio State University, Columbus, of what may well be called a "motion picture text book." The fundamentals of human behavior, with which such courses concern themselves, are depicted before large student groups via the motion picture screen, which shows experiments in detail, impossible of actual demonstration repeatedly. It is said other universities over the country are adopting similar methods, with the definite possibility, in the not far distant future, of establishing an exchange system of scientific motion pictures.

525 REOPENINGS AND 32 NEW HOUSES IN FIRST 2 MONTHS OF NEW SEASON

Activity in Exhibition Field Reflects Forward Economic Trend in General Business; Gives at Least 2,000 Jobs

Five hundred and twenty-five picture theatres resumed operations, and 32 new houses were opened, during the first two months of the new show season, from August 15 to October 15. While part of this activity was obviously seasonal, it is evident that the film business reacted to an appreciable extent, to the upward economic trend which has been prevalent during recent months in many of the nation's leading industries. It seems safe to assume that optimism prompted the reopening of many of the darkened theatres, many of which had been inactive for as long as two years.

Contributing additional strength to the movement toward normalcy were employment of at least 2,000, or an average of close to four persons per theatre, to man the reopened houses, coupled with a resumption of spending for film and, in some cases, building rentals; salaries; equipment and film accessories, power, sound charges, new parts, redecorating, refurnishing and remodeling.

The number of houses reopened and new projects started both compared favorably with normal times. California opened six new theatres, Texas five and New York four. Texas led in reopenings with 56. Forty-four were reopened in Pennsylvania; 43 in California; 42 in Ohio; 29 in New York; 33 in Minnesota and 31 in Illinois. The openings by states follow:

Alabama	4	Nevada	1
Arizona	2	New Jersey	6
Arkansas	4	New Mexico	1
California	43	New York	29
Colorado	7	North Carolina	5
Delaware	1	North Dakota	14
Florida	7	Ohio	42

Massachusetts	16	Washington	17
Michigan	15	West Virginia	11
Minnesota	33	Wisconsin	20
Mississippi	1	Wyoming	1
Missouri	10
Nebraska	10	TOTALS	525

Figures were compiled from data supplied by the Film Boards of Trade and by correspondents, circuits and other sources. Forty-two states are included. It is believed that in only a few situations were reports not submitted. Theatres which reopened in the two-month period after having been closed for a week or thereabouts for remodeling were not included in the checkup, which was confined to houses were business was suspended for an indefinite period, or for the summer, because of economic conditions.

Warner Brothers, operating principally in the Eastern industrial centers, reported 39 reopenings, more than any other circuit. Herschel Stuart listed 14 for RKO. Other national circuit executives refused to submit data, but reopenings of their properties appear, unidentified, in the national compilation.

One interesting observation is the fact that the reopenings were scattered widely throughout the country and were not as heavily concentrated in the principal cities as might be expected. Three hundred and fifty-seven cities and towns report one reopening each and 29 others reopened two each, a total of 415 of the entire group of 507. Chicago exhibitors reopened 14, largest of any city. Los Angeles had nine; Cincinnati and Minneapolis, 8 each; Philadelphia, 7; Detroit and San Francisco, 6 each; Miami, 5, and there were three each in Hollywood, New Orleans, St. Louis, Cleveland, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Tacoma, Milwaukee.

Opening of 32 new theatres during the early days of the new show season is a significant factor in analyzing the exhibition field and its relation to economic conditions generally. This group is believed to be the largest of any similar period since the depression began. Fourteen states reported new theatres as follows:

California	6	Ohio	1
Iowa	1	Oklahoma	3
Maryland	2	Oregon	2
Massachusetts	2	Rhode Island	1
Michigan	1	Texas	5
Minnesota	1	Wisconsin	2
New York	4	TOTALS	32

New York City, reporting three, and Baltimore, with two, were the only cities in which more than one new theatre was opened in the period surveyed.

MPTOA DROPS U. S. REGULATION PLEA IF COMPANIES ADOPT PLAN

Distributors Acting on Basis Two-Thirds of State Units of Allied and MPTOA Will Ratify Kent Proposals at Meetings

Members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and of Allied States Association will assemble at the Congress hotel in Chicago Monday to act upon Sidney R. Kent's proposals for correcting trade practices.

The plan provides for a standard exhibition contract as an alternative form; creation of a national appeal board to adjust important disputes; elimination of forced selling of shorts, and a committee on arrangements for carrying the proposals into effect. Adoption by the MPTOA, headed by M. A. Lightman, is practically assured, although the Allied stand still is unknown. Allied might project the proposals and decide to continue independently with a campaign for federal legislation. In any event, if enough acceptances by distributors come through prior to the mass meeting, which is scheduled to last until next Wednesday, the MPTOA definitely will abandon any idea of federal regulation and immediately will withdraw the socalled "mental support" offered Allied at a joint conference several weeks ago. Mr. Kent's proposals were drafted recently in conjunction with an Allied and MPTOA joint committee.

Fox and Educational-World Wide definitely have agreed upon adoption of the program. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Universal have signified their intention of going along with a few slight modifications in the contract. United Artists decided Tuesday against the plan and the others are expected to make known their decision by the weekend. Modifications asked by MGM and Universal are not expected to cause dissension among the exhibitors.

Two-Thirds of Units Must Ratify

The distributors, it was learned Wednesday, are approving the program on the basis that two-thirds of the state units of each national organization ratify the proposals. This would indicate that it will be necessary for the Chicago mass meeting to represent the respective units individually instead of representing each association as a national body. Mr. Lightman already has written to all MPTOA state organizations requesting that the matter be presented to their respective directorates for action prior to the mass meeting Monday. The MPTOA national board will convene in special session in Chicago Tuesday.

Allied will observe the following procedure: Affiliated regional associations will send delegations to the two mass meetings where the proposals will be fully explained by those who participated in the conference.

Based on the reports of those attending, the regional associations will vote at meeting shortly thereafter. It is the hope of Allied leaders that there will be a full attendance at the mass meeting and that the affiliated regionals will take separate action before December 15.

"By this method Allied leaders expect first to get a fair cross-section of exhibitor opinion, and, second, the definite and specific approval or rejection of each regional association," it was said.

Abram F. Myers, chairman of Allied, said this week that "the proposals worked out at the recent conferences are too important to be treated lightly. If accepted, it must be in such an unmistakable way that those charged with responsibility thereunder can proceed with full assurance that they are carrying out the will of the exhibitors. If rejected, such action should be taken with full appreciation of the consequences and with the means in sight to pursue a different course. Every leader and every exhibitor should take a position in the open so that there will be no sniping or kibitzing later."

MPTOA Will Keep Up Fight

In the event that two-thirds of the MPTOA state units do not ratify, the national association will not give up the fight for those individual units desiring it. "It is what the MPTOA wants and it is not our intention to lose this opportunity of getting it," said one official. It was learned confidentially that if approval is not forthcoming there is serious doubt that there will be any more cooperation between the two national exhibitor organizations.

Mr. Steffes said the other day that not "in the past 10 years has there ever been a meeting that carried as much importance to the individual theatre owner as the mass meeting in Chicago," which will be followed by a gathering in New York at the Park Central hotel December 1.

A statement issued Monday by Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey and in charge of the New York mass meeting, said:

"Intimations that the Jersey Allied unit is committed to approval of the industry conciliation program, regardless of what action might be taken by other Allied units, are entirely false. This, coupled with the rumors that action on the program by Allied States might lead to a split in the national organization, makes it imperative for Jersey to state its position. Jersey is an integral part of Allied States Association, proud of the fact that it has been a member unit since the inception of Allied, and committed to thorough-going support of President Steffes and Chairman-of-the-Board Myers. Jersey's record of loyalty is such that I can say without hesitation that if a majority of the Allied units find the industry conciliation program unsatisfactory, Jersey will go along with the majority."

Supreme Court Judge Reserves Decision in Paramount Suit

Judge Wasservogel, of the New York supreme court, reserved decision Tuesday following argument of the motion in the case of Relmar Holding Company, Inc., against Paramount-Publix and Film Production Corporation in which the plaintiff asks that the film companies be restrained from using $10,000,000 of its assets to pay bankers' loans, unless provision is made for the security of bondholders.

Wampas Postpones Election To Discuss National Tour

The Western Associated Motion Picture Advertisers did not elect the "baby stars" on Wednesday as planned. Instead, the membership will discuss a plan for general exploitation including personal appearances by the winners on a national theatre circuit.

Hal Roach announced he will offer contracts to the two freelance girl-winners who poll the most votes.

Protection Bureau Plans New Drive

The Copyright Protection Bureau, which now is receiving as many as ten complaints a week from exhibitors charging unfair competition, soon will undertake a nation-wide drive to investigate and correct situations resulting from unauthorized exhibitions or holdovers of pictures.

Despite the fact that there is obviously a great deal of work still to be done by the Bureau, Jack Levin, who is its director of operations, points out that due to the educational work of the Bureau through its divisional managers, Harold L. Groves and Joseph L. Stein, "conditions coming under the purview of the Bureau's work are considerably better now than a few years ago."

Division managers of the Bureau have been meeting frequently with various exhibitor groups throughout the country. "Our men are spending time setting up a prevention bureau rather than a protection bureau," said Mr. Levin. "In meeting with exhibitor leaders we outline a joint method of cooperation, urging them to deal seriously with any member who insists upon running his business in an unfair way—from both the distributor and exhibitor standpoints. We urge exhibitors not to fall for a verbal agreement, since that portion of the deal that cannot be placed in the contract makes it obvious that the exhibitor will be at the short end of the stick, what with the usual changes in the line-ups of the distributor representatives. In our talks with the exhibitor we further convince him 'it doesn't pay'; secondly, this method of square dealing will then entitle him to the complete protection of the industry."

General sales managers of the national distributors at the semi-annual meeting of the Copyright Protection Bureau unanimously decided to continue the same basis of appropriations for the Bureau for its fiscal year ending July 1, 1933.

To coordinate the activities of the Bureau still more closely with immediate film exchange problems in connection with proper exhibition of pictures, and to bring home to the distributors the many important features of the playing time protection service for their copyrights given by the Bureau, a committee consisting of E. C. Grainger of Fox, Paul Lazarus of United Artists, and John Nolan of RKO was appointed to consult with the Bureau.

FOUR SUBSIDIARIES ORGANIZED IN DECENTRALIZING PARAMOUNT

Richards Repurchases Interest in Saenger Circuit, Goldstein in New England; O'Donnell Operates 23 Texas Publix Houses

The management of Paramount is proceeding rapidly in effecting decentralization of Publix theatres, the largest circuit in the country, which at its peak controlled from the home office some 1,200 houses. John Hertz, chairman of the board, declared late in October for local autonomy in the interest of greater economy and efficiency. Sam Katz, as executive vice president, opposed this direct reversal of the corporation's national policy and resigned. Since then the movement has advanced along several lines, crystalizing last week end as follows:

The entire Paramount corporate structure was decentralized into four subsidiaries, each of which exclusively will handle certain departmental functions.

E. V. Richards repurchased an interest in the Saenger Circuit and assumed management of the southern properties of which he was formerly a principal owner.

Nathan Goldstein acquired an interest in and management of the former circuit of Goldstein Brothers in New England.

Reports were current that George Trendle is negotiating for Publix properties in Detroit which he formerly operated.

R. J. O'Donnell assumed operation of 23 Publix theatres in Texas.

Management of the Publix circuit was virtually vested in a triumvirate, headed by Sam Dembow, Jr., and including Dave Chatkin and Milton Feld.

The management established a complete new executive setup for the circuit.

Division managers from the home office and film bookers were sent to the field to localize operation further.

Decision was made to continue budget control in New York in most instances.

Plans were launched for converting the Publix advertising department into a "service unit."

Paramount's policy of decentralization reasserts the power of the individual exhibitor and lends considerable impetus to the trend toward independent operation. The corporation freely admitted that efficiency in operation in anticipation of more favorable economic reactions was the basic factor which prompted the move.

Plans to turn back large blocks of theatres to individuals originally responsible for and identified with their development were expanded late last week to include decentralization of the parent corporate structure itself. Regarding this new move, an official announcement said: "In connection with further reorganization of departmental operations in the interest of greater efficiency and economy, Paramount Publix Corporation formed four new subsidiaries to carry on certain of its operations. The new subsidiaries will be qualified in certain states and the parent company withdrawn, and in addition certain companies formed in certain states for local purposes will be eliminated."

Essentially, the corporate change is similar to the structure at Loew's and RKO, where separate entities carry on production, distribution, exhibition and foreign activities. For the first time, the parent corporation will not directly engage in these activities, but will instead act as a holding company for the four new subsidiaries, which include:

Paramount Pictures Corporation, capitalized at $200,000; Adolph Zukor, president; Emanuel Cohen, vice president; Ralph Kohn, vice president and treasurer.

Paramount Distributing Corporation, $500,000; Adolph Zukor, president; George Schaefer, vice president; Ralph Kohn, vice president and treasurer.

Paramount Productions, Inc., $500,000; Adolph Zukor, president; Emanuel Cohen, vice president; Ralph Kohn, vice president and treasurer.

Paramount International Corporation, $500,000; Adolph Zukor, president; Joseph H. Seidelman and Emil E. Shauer, vice presidents; Ralph Kohn, vice president and treasurer.

All were incorporated in Delaware. The incorporators of all four are: G. W. Haight, Brooklyn, N. Y.; J. H. Ream, Staten Island, N. Y.; E. M. Sellwood, Jr., New Canaan, Conn.

Mr. Schaefer will continue as sales manager in addition to vice president of the new distributing corporation. He was promoted from the ranks following the resignation some months ago of Sidney R. Kent, who joined Fox as president. Emanuel Cohen has been in charge of production in Hollywood and Mr. Shauer and Mr. Seidelman supervise foreign activities.

Saenger Circuit Returned

Next in importance to actual consummation of deals whereby theatres were turned back to E. V. Richards, Nathan Goldstein, R. J. O'Donnell, and, as took place several months ago, to E. J. Sparks, Wilby-Kincey and Ed Dubinsky, is the complete secrecy surrounding terms of the agreements. In current announcements, it was stated by Paramount that the Richards and Goldstein deals included turning over management of properties and "an interest," but nothing further was revealed. It is assumed that in all cases franchises were signed to show all Paramount product over a long period.

Although the company steadfastly refused to divulge the exact relations of either party to profit and losses, the decentralization program is understood to provide for three distinct types of arrangements, including:

Continued ownership and management of Publix properties with localized operation by home office representatives in the field and budgetary control remaining in the home office;

Secondly, deals, which include disposition of about 23 houses in Texas to W. K. Jenkins and John J. O'Donnell; Saenger theatres to E. V. Richards; four in Minnesota to Eddie R. Ruben; about 20 in Massachusetts to Nathan Goldstein and houses along the Atlantic Seaboard, in the South, to Wilby-Kincey. In these arrangements, the new operators obtained an interest, it is understood, and full authority to manage without interference from New York headquarters of Publix. Also, arrangements of this type are reported to provide for a split-up of profits, but no payments are to be made in case of losses in operation; nor will Paramount have control over budgets.

Dembow, Chatkin and Feld Managing Publix Circuit; Aylesworth and Jack Cohn Indorse Trend; Other Developments

Type three embraces outright disposition, which is said to include about 30 theatres in Florida which were turned over to E. J. Sparks some months ago, and a dozen in Kansas City and Missouri which Ed Dubinsky acquired early this fall.

Richards Assumes Management

In announcing the Saenger deal, Paramount said: "Announcement is made by Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix, that E. V. Richards, formerly one of the principal owners of the Saenger Circuit, has once more acquired an interest in the circuit and will immediately assume general management of the theatres involved. Mr. Richards will leave for New Orleans Sunday night (Nov. 20) to assume active theatre operation. He will be accompanied by Mr. Sam Dembow, Jr., acting head of the theatre department of Paramount Publix, who will turn the business over to him, and will confer with executives in the territory." The statement concluded with an explanation that this move is part of the decentralization policy.

Mr. Richards, one of the first large independent circuit operators, developed the powerful Saenger properties with Julian Saenger. Located principally in Louisiana and Mississippi, the circuit rapidly expanded into Florida, Tennessee, Virginia, Texas and Arkansas. When the houses were sold to Publix Mr. Richards' group withheld control and management of a few theatres, strategically located in Louisiana, which Saenger practically dominated.

Mr. Dembow announced consummation of the Goldstein deal. He said: "Arrangements have been completed with Nathan Goldstein, one of the owners of the former Goldstein Brothers' Circuit in New England, by which Mr. Goldstein acquires an interest in those theatres. Prior to its sale to Paramount Publix the circuit was under the management of Mr. Goldstein, who once more assumes the function of general manager of those theatres in New England which comprised the circuit originally."

Mr. Goldstein will make his headquarters in Springfield, Mass., operating the 20 properties which are scattered throughout the Bay State. Samuel Goldstein was interested with his brother in the original circuit.

Trendle Reported Negotiating

Unconfirmed reports in New York this week said Publix is negotiating to return a group of Detroit theatres to George Trendle, who formerly operated the properties with John Kunsky. Mr. Trendle is understood to have conferred recently in Chicago with John Balaban, under whose direction the theatres are operated as part of the midwest division. The deal, it is said, would be similar to the Saenger and Goldstein arrangements.

R. J. O'Donnell, president of a new company at Dallas, and William K. Jenkins, a Publix division manager, took over active management of the 23 Texan theatres which Publix agreed some weeks ago to dispose of on a partnership basis. Theatres involved are at Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio,

HOLD YOUR HORSES!
THE BLANKS ARE COMING!

Here's good news for you exhibitors who are champing at the bit, eager to begin reporting on "What the Picture Did for Me".

The first supply of report blanks went forward to theatre men this week. Many already have received them; to those of you who still are awaiting them the word is: They're on the way. But don't let that stop you from writing in for your supply; from the number of requests received this week we know you couldn't be stopped anyway. So just address "What the Picture Did for Me", Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York.

It's YOUR department.

Decentralizing of Paramount Brings Four Subsidiaries

Austin, Galveston and El Paso, and in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

There have been no new developments in negotiations whereby Publix will turn back management of its New Jersey group to Walter Reade. Mr. Reade formerly operated the houses.

The deal with E. J. Sparks, which included about 30 of his former properties in Florida, was closed earlier in the year, and arrangements whereby Eddie R. Ruben is already operating four in Minnesota were concluded last month. Also, Wilby-Kincey Circuit resumed operation some time ago of a group in the Southern tier of Atlantic Seaboard states.

Duties of Executives Increased

Paramount's home office in New York remains silent concerning a successor to Sam Katz, who resigned suddenly late last month after differences with Mr. Hertz over decentralizing the circuit. Since then executive duties formerly performed by Mr. Katz have been delegated to other officers. Mr. Schaefer's distribution activities have been increased; Mr. Dembow, Dave Chatkin and Milton Feld were given additional responsibilities in the theatre division, while the scope of executive duties of Leo Spitz has also been widened.

Changes in the home office advertising department of Publix are now being worked out in order "to convert the present set-up into a service unit primarily giving information and advice to all theatres." Evidently, houses disposed of in partnership deals are included.

Mr. Chatkin and Mr. Feld already have commenced their new duties as New York contacts for the field, dividing the country between them as follows: Mr. Chatkin is in charge of New England, New Jersey, Comerford sub-division in Pennsylvania and New York, Atlantic States, Texas, Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky. Mr. Feld has been assigned supervision over Broadway runs, New York City, upper New York State, Detroit, Toledo, Chicago, Great States division in Illinois, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Los Angeles, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Northwest, Iowa and Nebraska.

Mr. Dembow, in addition to other duties, including general supervision of the entire circuit, will continue to contact directly all partnership and affiliated groups. His title is "acting head of the theatre department."

In order further to facilitate the functioning of the decentralized units, and to "make the home office essentially an organ of service and information to the field," Messrs Dembow, Feld and Chatkin will make frequent visits to the territories to hold conferences with divisional executives on the ground. In a message to the divisional directors, Mr. Dembow said: "The new set-up is not designed to curtail the latitude and initiative of you and your associates, but is designed primarily to eliminate all waste motion insofar as your necessary contacts with the home office are concerned."

The division directors started working in the field several days ago to effect localized operation at once, without budgetary control. John Balaban, with headquarters in Chicago, is in charge of B and K theatres in Chicago; Famous Players Canadian; Great States Theatres in Illinois, and Publix Detroit properties. Harry Katz operates Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky divisions, from New York. Martin J. Mullin is in charge of New England, with headquarters at Boston and he will be assisted by Samuel Pinanski. John J. Friedl and L. J. Ludwig have the Northwest division; George Walsh the Comerford circuit, and G. Ralph Branton the Northwest.

Leon Netter continues in charge of bookings, handling all booking and buying that need be done in New York, and serving as adviser to bookers in the field. The personnel department remains under supervision of Chester Stoddard. Personnel records will continue to be kept at the home office and all executives in the field have been directed to dispatch a record of changes to New York at once. Listings are available to the field for assistance in obtaining manpower.

Aylesworth and Cohn Comment

In the meantime, from quarters other than those in the Paramount building, came statements supporting the current decentralization movement. M. H. Aylesworth, president of the RKO companies, said: "The widespread discussion concerning the benefits of decentralized theatre operation finds the RKO circuit in the position of standing as an example of the benefits which accrue from the system." Mr. Aylesworth's brief observation was amplified by Herschel Stuart, an RKO theatre executive, who said: "There will be no decentralization of RKO theatres. There is no need for it, because the company's theatres are now being operated by district managers with the home office acting only as a service department."

Jack Cohn, vice president of Columbia, one of the few producer-distributors which does not operate theatres, favors the new trend. Theatre decentralization, he believes, will benefit the entire industry. Mr. Cohn cited widespread advantages accruing to both theatre and distributor under the increase in local film buying resulting from decentralization.

Meanwhile, Fox and Warners engage in some decentralizing on a small scale. Fox West Coast, operated with other Fox properties by Skouras Brothers, divided the Rocky Mountain division into four instead of three districts. Headquarters for the first, second and third districts will be in Denver, while number four will be handled out of Salt Lake. The districts are under direction of Frank Culp, Dave Davis, C. U. Yeager and Max Golden, respectively, while Frank H. Ricketson is division manager.

Warners relinquished title to the Strand and Morrison, at Alliance, Ohio, both houses reverting to original owners. The circuit recently turned back to the owners the Palace at Canton, and the Olympic, Steubenville, both in Ohio.

Loew Escapes Death When Plane Crashes in Africa

Arthur M. Loew, head of the foreign department of MGM, had a narrow escape from death in an airplane crash last week, near Victoria Falls, Rhodesia, Africa, in the course of a world tour by air. Captain James Dickson, pilot, was killed instantly when the plane cracked up in attempting a takeoff. The plane, belonging to Hal Roach, was known as the "Spirit of Fun."

Mr. Loew and Joseph Rosenthal, his companion, were bruised but uninjured. The group was en route from Johannesburg to Cairo when the accident occurred. Mr. Loew is expected to continue his journey by train and boat, following receipt of cables from his mother, Mrs. Marcus Loew, urging him to abandon the air trip.

Wingart Joins Fox Film As Publicity Manager

Earl Wingart joined Fox Film last Monday as publicity manager under Charles E. McCarthy, director of advertising and publicity. Hereafter, the Fox publicity department will be separated from the advertising department, with Gabe Yorke continuing in charge of advertising.

Mr. Wingart handled similar duties under Mr. McCarthy at Paramount. He resigned that post recently, following Mr. McCarthy's resignation as Paramount publicity director several weeks ago.

Ufa Profit $6,960,000

Ufa, German producing company, reports at Berlin a profit of $6,960,000 for the year ended May 31, a decrease from the profit of the previous year, which reached $7,296,000. During the year, Ufa received from foreign subsidiaries $2,640,000, an increase of 50 per cent over the previous year. The dividend total was $432,000, or four per cent, which compares with a total of $621,000 or six per cent for the previous year.

CROSS-STOCK AND LICENSE PACTS TO BE DISSOLVED IN RADIO GROUP

RCA, General Electric and Westinghouse Reach Agreement and Government Calls Off Two-Year Antitrust Suit

The far-reaching agreements and complicated inter-company stock holdings of Radio Corporation of America, General Electric and Westinghouse will be dissolved. The managements of the three companies so agreed on Monday and immediately the United States Government called off the antitrust suit which the Department of Justice has had pending for two years against these and other important corporations. Federal prosecutors had been ready to go to trial Monday, following a series of postponements to which the government had consented in order to permit the working out of an agreement which would liquidate present cross interest agreements.

A statement sent immediately to stockholders by David Sarnoff, president, said that RCA will continue to function in the broadcasting, manufacturing and entertainment fields, including motion pictures.

That part of the antitrust suit which had been filed against General Motors, General Motors Radio Corporation, American Telephone & Telegraph and Western Electric, of the 14 defendants, was dismissed Monday morning by Judge Nields at Wilmington. A consent decree was then signed by RCA, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, General Electric Company and the United States Government.

The suit against A. T. & T. and Western Electric was dismissed because these two defendants several months ago changed their cross-licensing arrangements with RCA and General Electric from an exclusive to a non-exclusive basis. Motion picture producer and exhibitor licenses always have been non-exclusive.

4,000 Patents Involved

The decree, which directs dissolution of the patents cross-licensing agreements involving 4,000 patents, is expected to result in a sweeping realignment of the entire electrical industry. It directs General Electric and Westinghouse to divorce themselves of any stock interest in Radio Corporation.

The three principal defendants consented to the decree on the stipulation that their consent was not an admission that they had violated the antitrust laws. Prior to presenting the decree to Judge Nields for signing, Warren Olney, Jr., special assistant to Attorney General Mitchell, asked that antitrust charges against four of the defendants be dismissed. The charges were dropped, Mr. Olney said, because subsequent to the filing of the Government's amended petition, on March 7, General Motors Radio had been dissolved and agreements linking General Motors and General Motors Radio with other defendants had been terminated and the agreements involving AT&T and Western Electric had been modified so as to meet objections complained of by the government.

International contracts which the three principal defendants have with Marconi Wireless, of Great Britain, Sans Fils Company, of France, and Trans-Radio, of Germany, for joint interests in South America, are to be modified within two and a half years, according to terms of the decree. At the end of that time, the companies are to report to the Attorney General and the United States district court in Wilmington, and if negotiations have not been successful, the case will be placed on the next ensuing trial list.

The decree enjoins RCA, Westinghouse and General Electric from attempting to restrain trade by means of patent licenses, or similar devices, in violation of the Sherman antitrust laws.

Under the terms of the settlement, which in effect requires the separation of RCA, Westinghouse and General Electric, RCA acquires rights to license manufacturers of radio and sound equipment under its own and AT&T patents.

General Gets RCA Building

An indebtedness of more than $17,000,000 due General Electric is being settled by RCA by turning over to that company the RCA Building at 51st street and Lexington avenue, New York, at its present book value of $4,745,000, and by the issuance of ten-year debentures totaling $4,255,000 to G. E. and Westinghouse. The debentures will bear no interest for the first year; they will bear from 2 to 5 per cent interest, depending upon earnings, the succeeding four years, and 5 per cent the remaining five years. After 1934, debentures will be redeemed at the rate of $255,000 each year until maturity.

A readjustment of obligations to Rockefeller Centre, Inc., is being made by RCA by a reduction in the amount of broadcasting and office space it will take when it moves to Radio City. In return for this concession it will turn over to Rockefeller Center 100,000 shares of "A" preferred stock at $50 par value a share.

Present patent licenses continue and RCA acquires the right to grant licenses under all the patents in the present pool, as well as to new inventions, until 1955. All the licensing rights previously were owned by General Electric and Westinghouse. In addition, under the new plan, RCA acquires the right to license manufacture of transmitting apparatus and tubes and, in return, Westinghouse and General Electric acquire the right to manufacture radio receiving sets, but agree to pay 5 per cent royalties to RCA. Under the previous arrangements, RCA was obligated to purchase radio transmitters and tubes from the two electric companies.

The consolidated balance sheet of Radio Corporation and subsidiaries, as of Oct. 31, 1932, after giving effect to changes as ordered in the consent decree, shows total assets of $108,922,709. Current assets, including $25,592,452 cash and marketable securities, at market, amounted to $39,595,425 and current liabilities were $5,492,347, while earned surplus amounted to $10,322,100, according to RCA.

At the close of the fiscal year December 31, last, total assets were $117,061,156, cash and marketable securities were $24,529,866, current assets amounted to $45,415,701 and current liabilities totaled $24,661,626, while earned surplus aggregated $11,327,789, according to the Wall Street Journal.

Consolidated income account of Radio Corporation and subsidiaries, for ten months ended Oct. 31, 1932, follows: Gross income from all sources $56,225,293; costs and expenses $51,530,682; interest $1,093,029; depreciation $3,714,251; amortization of patents $500,000; federal taxes $50,000; net loss $662,669; preferred A dividends $343,020; deficit $1,005,689; surplus at beginning of year $11,327,789; earned surplus, as of Oct. 31, 1932, $10,322,100, RCA reported.

After the terms of the consent decree became known Monday, RCA common sold at 5⅝, off 1¾ points. Westinghouse sold at 29, up ⅜ and General Electric was off ¼ at 16⅜.

RCA Will Continue to Function As Heretofore in Broadcasting, Manufacturing and Entertainment Fields, Says Sarnoff

The home office of RCA, in a lengthy statement to newspapers in explanation of the consent decree said in part:

"The broad, constructive purposes of the new arrangements and agreements through which Radio Corporation emerges as a complete self-contained unit covering the entire field of radio development, were explained in a letter to stockholders by David Sarnoff, president. In separating from General Electric and Westinghouse Electric, it was made clear that Radio, through its established subsidiaries, and with their present personnel, will continue to function as heretofore in trans-oceanic communication, ship-to-shore communication, radio manufacturing, broadcasting, and in the entertainment field.

"In addition, it is stated that Radio now receives patent rights and licenses for manufacture and sale of radio devices useful in other than the generally recognized lines of radio business. Because of the great variety of purposes to which the vacuum tube is now being adapted, these additional rights will enable Radio to extend its manufacturing business into new phases of the electronic art.

"An interval of two and one-half years is provided for adjusting the business of Radio to its new status. Under the decree, Owen D. Young and Andrew W. Robertson may continue as members of the board of Radio during the next five months. The relationship of Mr. Young to Radio Corporation as a member of its board and chairman of its executive committee remains unchanged.

"Arrangements are made for the change of patent rights in the entire radio field from an exclusive to a non-exclusive basis."

"The suit challenged the legality of the exclusive character of the cross-license agreements under which the radio rights under patents of General Electric, American Telephone and Telegraph, Westinghouse, and others, were brought together in the Radio Corporation of America and which, at the time, were deemed essential by these companies for the development of the art."

Stock Disposition

The letter which Mr. Sarnoff forwarded to stockholders further explained the newly developed situation as follows, in part:

"Under the program of readjustment, General Electric and Westinghouse will divest themselves within three months, by a ratable distribution to their stockholders, of substantially one-half of the stock they now hold in Radio Corporation, and within three years they will distribute or otherwise dispose of it all. Pending final disposition of their RCA stock, General Electric and Westinghouse cannot exercise voting rights thereon. Under the decree, proxies for voting their RCA stock are to be given to the members of Radio's executive committee for ordinary corporate purposes and, as the court may direct, for all other purposes. Officers and directors of General Electric and Westinghouse will withdraw from the boards and committees of Radio Corporation and its subsidiaries."

Mr. Olney, for the Government, said General Electric held almost 4,000,000 shares of the

Double Features Losing On Coast

Double showing of feature motion pictures continues to lose ground along the Pacific seaboard, with exhibitors in Los Angeles preparing to launch a campaign aimed at Fox West Coast circuit, which is said to be in favor of continuing the practice. Meanwhile, officials of the Independent Motion Picture Theatre Owners, operating in Los Angeles territory, will study the effect of barring doubles in Chicago and Detroit, and it is hoped to persuade Fox West Coast officials to fall in line in a general decree prohibiting their showing locally.

Reports from Portland, Seattle and San Francisco indicate a marked decrease in double billings in preference to singles with comedies and newsreel. However, for the first time in local history, a downtown first-run, the Orpheum, in San Francisco, has turned to double features. In Detroit there is a possibility that theatre owners will cancel their pledge to refrain from using two films. The Allied States organization, headed by H. M. Richey, has taken an adverse stand because, it is claimed, some exchanges are insisting upon fourth and fifth run houses maintaining a 15-cent minimum admission. Mr. Richey said that if they continue this policy without making an adjustment of prices on prior runs, he will recommend that the Allied board lift the dual ban and also the ruling against giveaways, both of comparably recent origin. Exchange managers are understood to be prepared to continue their present position.

Chicago continues with its recent city-wide ban against double bills. Some 20 anxious exhibitors have been running a trailer announcing that the new policy is in conformity with the "regulations of the Film Board of Trade and the producers."

Agreement Ends Radio Group Suit

common stock in RCA and Westinghouse, something over 2,500,000 shares, a controlling interest.

"How to dispose of such large amounts of stock presented a problem," he said. "It was evident to the Government that all this stock could not be thrown on the market within a short time. The Government was not particularly interested in how it was disposed of, so long as it was actually disposed of, and disposed of in such a manner as to make the Radio Corporation wholly independent of the other two companies.

"Now as to the contracts with foreign companies and governments. The defendants have indicated their willingness to change all of these contracts to meet the objection of the Government and the Government understands in a number of instances they have already successfully negotiated for that purpose, with the other companies to the contract. The defendants have, however, requested time to complete their negotiations and have represented that if they were forbidden by the decree now to no longer recognize those contracts, they would be in serious danger of being sued abroad for breach of contracts by the other parties to them."

The legal representatives of the parties in court were:

For the Government: District Attorney Leonard E. Wales, Mr. Olney, John Lord O'Brian, assistant to the attorney general; Hammond E. Chaffetz, special assistant to the attorney general.

For RCA: Charles Neaves, Manton Davis, Charles F. Curley, Otto Schairer, Robert D. O'Callaghan.

For General Electric: Thurlow M. Gordon, H. Allen MacDuffie.

For Westinghouse: Donald C. Swatland, Harold Smith.

Continuing, Mr. Sarnoff's letter to stockholders, said: "The new agreements provide in general that during the interim period of two and one-half years General Electric and Westinghouse are not free to manufacture radio devices under their newly acquired rights, except insofar as each of them may operate under its own patents.

"Radio under the new arrangements retains rights which will enable it to continue to grant licenses to other manufacturers, not only under its own patents but also under radio and other patents of General Electric and Westinghouse, and AT&T, and to retain royalties received under such licenses. Radio continues to be the sole organization empowered to grant licenses to others under the radio patents of all the companies with which it was formerly associated, including until 1955, the patents of AT&T and the two electric companies.

"The new arrangements prevent the disruption of the existing licensing situation and avoid the necessity of other radio manufacturers negotiating separate license agreements with General Electric, Westinghouse, and AT&T. All licenses heretofore granted by Radio to other manufacturers will remain in full force and effect and the consequent technical advantages to the radio industry arising from such licensing will be preserved. The Radio Corporation will be in position to license others under the patents on new inventions of all of the companies mentioned.

"General Electric and Westinghouse previously owned all rights, including rights to retain royalties under RCA patents, in all fields outside of radio purposes. Under the new agreements, Radio reserves licenses under its own patents, with the right to license others thereunder, in all fields, and to retain the royalties therefrom."

Van Beuren Loses One Gibbons Suit; Rice Action Pends

A New York municipal district court has awarded judgment in the amount of $1,000 in favor of Floyd Gibbons, author, against the Van Beuren Corporation. The action was a test case to determine whether a writer may claim compensation for work submitted but not used.

Mr. Gibbons testified that Amedee J. Van Beuren requested a summary of negotiations between the Vatican and Premier Mussolini which resulted in the Lateran Treaty. He said his suggestions were not used and that he received no remuneration for his work. A witness testified that $5,000 would be a "fair fee" for the service, and a jury voted $1,000, a municipal court maximum.

The action is separate from the pending suit of Mr. Gibbons against the Van Beuren Corporation for $60,500, for an uncompleted part of an Adventure series of short subjects he was to make for Van Beuren. Lewis Innerarity, attorney for Mr. Van Beuren, refused to comment on the judgment.

Justice Cohn issued an order late last week in New York supreme court instructing Mr. J. Van Beuren as well as the Van Beuren Corporation to show cause November 29 why they should not be adjudged in contempt of court. The order was granted on petition of attorneys for Grantland Rice, based on alleged refusal of Mr. Van Beuren on November 14 to continue with an examination before trial in an action instituted by Mr. Rice against Mr. Van Beuren, the Van Beuren Corporation and Grantland Rice Sportlights, Inc., in connection with the assets of that company.

The petition of Mr. Rice in the contempt proceedings charges that Mr. Van Beuren "wilfully and deliberately disobeyed the order of Justice Gavegan by refusing to continue the examination before trial, thereby impairing and impeding the rights and remedies of the plaintiff." Mr. Rice appends to his contempt plea "a recital of defaults, delays and obstructions" since Mr. Van Beuren was first served with papers seven months ago and says:

"Finally, however, examination proceeded. Then, as the official court stenographer's minutes indicate, the witness, Van Beuren, in flagrant violation of the court's order, brazenly walked out of the hearing which was incomplete."

The petition says further:

"I respectfully submit that testimony given by the witness, Van Beuren, thus far upon the examination before trial reveals so many contradictions and inconsistencies with his own prior testimony as to supply a reason for his running out of the examination even in direct violation of the court order."

Mr. Rice asks that "the reasonable value of the legal services" entailed by the contempt order, which are fixed at $500, be assessed "against Van Beuren and the Van Beuren Corporation in addition to the statutory fine." The petition also asks Mr. Van Beuren be directed to show cause why he should not submit to examination forthwith.

The contempt proceedings against Mr. Van Beuren grew out of suit brought by Grantland Rice over Sportlights assets. In that suit, Mr. Rice charges that "Van Beuren unlawfully transferred and conveyed to the Van Beuren Corporation the sum of $20,000 out of the funds of Grantland Rice Sportlights, Inc." The complaint further states that "by reason of the unlawful conveyance and transfer, as aforesaid, Van Beuren and the Van Beuren Corporation disposed of, without consideration, assets of the defendant Grantland Rice Sportlights, Inc., to the extent of $8,000 to the individual benefit and profit of the defendants, A. J. Van Beuren and the Van Beuren Corporation."

Invited to comment on the signing of the contempt order, Mr. Innerarity, of Hulbert and Heermance, counsel for Mr. Van Beuren, said:

"We have nothing to say."

Brandt, in Split With Hammons, Quits World Wide

Joe Brandt, president of World Wide Pictures, feature producing unit of Educational, resigned on Monday as a result of differences of opinion with reference to company policy with E. W. Hammons, chairman of the board of directors of World Wide and president of Educational.

The formal announcement of the resignation followed conferences between the two executives last Sunday, when the withdrawal of Mr. Brandt was determined. Mr. Brandt declared following the announcement that he had no immediate post in view. Mr. Hammons has not as yet named a successor to Mr. Brandt, but he indicated that he has an individual in mind for the executive position.

Commenting on the resignation, Mr. Hammons refused to divulge the exact nature of the "differences" which led to the break, but said the withdrawal was amicable. They parted, he said, "the best of friends, each with a high regard for the other. But no organization can have two bosses."

Mr. Brandt entered the World Wide organization, in the post he has just left, last May, after having sold his interest in Columbia Pictures, of which he was president, to Harry Cohn, who immediately assumed that position. The executive personnel of World Wide underwent numerous changes almost immediately following the entrance of Mr. Brandt. The changes also affected the personnel of the Educational exchanges over the country, which function as the distributing outlet for the World Wide feature product.

Joe Goldberg, general sales manager of World Wide, and Phil Dunas, Midwest district manager for Educational-World Wide, will leave the organization on or about December 3, Mr. Hammons said Tuesday. Successors will be named from within the organization, he indicated.

Ballance Leaves Paramount

Harry G. Ballance, with Paramount for many years, part of the time in charge of distribution in the South, has resigned. His place has been taken by Oscar Morgan, Philadelphia manager, for whom no successor has been named as yet.

RKO Roxy Prices From 40c to $1.50; To Open Dec. 29

With deep pride in what had been achieved in the theatres of Radio City, and a promise of performances outdoing anything of their kind yet presented, S. L. Rothafel this week made formal announcement, at luncheons to the press, of the openings of the RKO Roxy and Radio City Music Hall. The latter, exclusively devoted to stage extravaganza, will open December 27, while the first performance in the former house, now become the second in New York to bear Mr. Rothafel's nickname, will occur on December 29.

Although the RKO Roxy is referred to as the motion picture theatre in the Rockefeller Center development, it will present "complementary" stage entertainment, said Mr. Rothafel, who will direct operations of both Radio City theatres. This plan is recalled as the original intention, which, however, was later changed to a policy excluding stage entertainment.

"We now find," Mr. Rothafel disclosed, "that under present conditions complementary entertainment will be necessary. It will be a mixture of popular vaudeville and Chauve Souris."

Film booking arrangements, he said, will not force use of RKO Radio product exclusively, while the length of the run of a picture will be determined only by its capacity to draw. Prices for the RKO Roxy will be between 40 cents and $1.50, including, as Mr. Rothfel put it, "war tax."

Both the film theatre and the Music Hall will enjoy the advantages of an extensive production department, with Erno Rapee as music director, Robert Edmond Jones as art director, and Florence Rogge, Martha Graham and Russell Markert in charge of dancing.

Metro's "Studio Train" Dedicated

MGM's department of publicity presented its new "traveling studio" to the motion picture industry at a reception in New York Friday night. Executives of MGM and Electrical Research Products and of other leading distributors attended the dedication, at which Major Edward Bowes presided. The studio "trackless train" will take to the road within one week, manned by a crew which includes publicity men, a cameraman and sound technicians. Edward Carrier will be in charge of the expedition, which will spend the next two or three years touring principal countries of the world to publicize Metro product and build goodwill for the industry by the showing of "institutional" subjects, one of which features Will H. Hays.

Howard Dietz, Metro's advertising director; William R. Ferguson, in charge of exploitation, and Mr. Carrier have been supervising construction of the "studio" for the past 18 months.

GOVERNMENT WATCHING SITUATION IN CENTERS OF ZONING DISPUTES

Coast Independents in Quandary Over Effects of Decrees; Expect System of Competitive Bidding for Pictures

Issuance of a new consent decree last week in federal court at Los Angeles involving local zoning and protection highlighted a new series of developments which indicate that the United States Government is closely watching the situation in those territories where there have been signs of dispute over protection.

Clarifying and amplifying a consent decree entered in the same court Aug. 21, 1930, Judge Harry A. Hollzer has signed a consent decree in the federal district court in Los Angeles covering the entire subject of zoning, protection and clearance, with particular reference to practices of Fox West Coast theatres and the Pacific Coast area. The decree is primarily designed to prohibit discrimination against independent theatres. It also specifically prohibits any two distributors from joint action in establishing zones or protection systems, but further declares that nothing in the decree shall be construed to prohibit any individual company from bargaining with or selecting its own customers.

Another clause declared it is not to be construed as holding illegal any reasonable system of zoning, protection, clearance or other plan which hereafter may be adopted as general practice. Under its terms, however, whatever plan is put into operation would have to be done individually by each distributor, and in every case it would be mandatory that the same terms be given all exhibitors.

The consensus among defendant major companies is that the decree will have no particular effect upon the present system, while independent exhibitors seem to be at sixes and sevens as to whether the decree will help or hurt them. It is pointed out that in some cases the regulations provided are almost impossible of practical application, as in a thickly populated area like Metropolitan Los Angeles there are houses which come within provisions of two or more zones, and heretofore special regulations had to be set up for them, now impossible under the new decree.

It is expected that the antitrust suits, aggregating more than $3,000,000, which have been filed by independents against Fox West Coast and large distributors, will be dropped if the consent decrees filed last week and in 1930 are obeyed. The 1930 decree dealt with the question of abandoning compulsory block booking by local distributors. The case will not be brought into court unless either party acts in violation of either consent decrees.

A system of competitive bidding for pictures, irrespective of price admission scales, is now expected to be inaugurated by Los Angeles distributors. A similar buying plan is being used in Detroit and other cities.

Filing of the current decree in Los Angeles was more or less a perfunctory matter, as it was handled largely from Washington by John Harlen Amen, special assistant to the attorney general, who has acted for the Department of Justice in other such matters. Defendants were Fox West Coast Theatres, Fox Film, MGM, Paramount Publix, United Artists, Vitagraph and First National. Universal, Radio, Columbia, and Warners were not mentioned. The suit and resultant consent decree were said to have been the outgrowth largely of complaints made to the Department of Justice regarding allegedly unfair discrimination against certain independents in Southern California.

Existing zoning and protection practices and their relation to zoning pacts in effect heretofore are under close scrutiny by the bureau of investigation of the Department of Justice, it was learned in Kansas City this week. The inquiry is nationwide and for the attorney general. In Kansas City the investigation thus far is limited to zoning, while in other distribution centers the scope may be wider, it is intimated.

On trustworthy authority, it is said the Government desires to determine, first, whether any agreement exists between first-runs and distributors and also between other theatres and distributors; second, whether this agreement, if it exists, is monopolistic or tends toward monopoly.

Decision to continue prosecution of alleged unfair circuit competition in booking and protection demands was reached at the annual Allied regional convention at Seattle, attended last week by 80 independent exhibitors.

From Cleveland it is learned that under the newly approved and adopted protection plan exhibitors may play double features without losing their protection classification, provided the pictures so double featured are not downtown first-run pictures.

According to the plan, subsequent run houses for which pictures are available either on the 37th or the 57th day following termination of the first run, must go back to the 63d day in the event of double featuring. This applies only to pictures which have had a first-run.

Evasions relative to admission prices, giving away premiums, admittance of more than one person for one admission price, and exhibition of more than one feature picture on the same program under certain conditions, are subjected to severe penalties as set forth in the Cleveland protection agreement, by a board of arbitration set up to handle each case individually. This board is not permanent in nature, and may arbitrate only the evasions set forth in this agreement. Penalty is loss of protection over a period of time stipulated by the arbitration board. The Cleveland plan goes into effect with pictures released locally on January 1, and continues for two years.

As a result of a recent conference at Kalamazoo, Mich., between Michigan Allied's "unfair protection" committee and representatives of the Butterfield circuit, the Butterfield group has taken suggested compromises under consideration. It is believed that approximately 35 situations in the state are affected.

In New Orleans a federal suit is pending against United Amusements, while in Seattle it is understood that Department of Justice agents are investigating recent complaints of independent exhibitors that they could not get pictures.

An immediate decision on whether the state may investigate trade practices of producers and distributors in Wisconsin has been requested of the United States district court at Madison by Fred M. Wylie, deputy attorney general. The court issued a temporary order last March restraining the state to "maintain the status quo." In May an application of the companies for an interlocutory injunction was argued. No decision has been announced. "However, the object of the motion picture producers and circuits to prevent investigation of their practices has been effectually accomplished for seven months," Mr. Wylie charged, "and the effect of these practices soon will have extended for a full year because of the seasonal contracting."

In New York it is understood that independent exhibitors again last week protested to distributors against alleged "unreasonable and unwarranted protection" in the Metropolitan zone.

Although zoning and protection are not covered in the proposals drafted by Sidney R. Kent for correcting certain industry practices, and now being considered by distributors and Allied and MPTOA groups, it is believed they will soon be taken up as a side issue.

Mr. Kent has indicated that he favors the zoning and protection plan adopted at Cleveland a few months ago, by which the exhibitors draft their own requirements.

UNIVERSAL SEEKS NEW PEARL WHITE

Universal is preparing a search for a girl. The search will be nationwide, and the qulifications are exacting, for the girl must possess beauty, poise, acting ability, and, above all, courage and daring. Briefly, the girl must be the closest possible counterpart of the Pearl White of 1914, for Carl Laemmle, Jr., plans production of a modern version of "Perils of Pauline," the famed and successful serial of the dear old "movie" days. One of the three earliest and financially most profitable serials, the other two having been "Adventures of Kathlyn" and "Million Dollar Mystery," Pearl White's "Perils of Pauline" appeared April 11, 1914, simultaneously with the publication in the Hearst newspapers of the serial story. The Eclectic Film Company produced it, with Paul Panzer and Crane Wilbur in support, and history records that it did more for the purse of the producers than it did for the Hearst circulation figures.

Universal has purchased the motion picture rights and Henry McRae, serial supervisor, is giving the thriller a modern dress. Pearl White, who has been living quietly in Paris for several years, is expected in this country soon, and will be asked to act as a judge.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

The Bitter Tea of General Yen

(Columbia)

Drama

Against the background of revolution-torn China, "The Bitter Tea of General Yen" tells a story of what happens when the conflicting ethical philosophies of the modern world run smack up against the age-old traditions of the unfathomable Orient. Well mounted and marked by fine individual performances on the part of Nils Asther, Barbara Stanwyck and Walter Connelly, the picture nevertheless takes a long time to tell its story.

Here's an outline. Arriving in China to be married, Megan Davis after a trip into the besieged Chapei section of Shanghai is practically kidnapped by General Yen. In his luxurious isolated stronghold, she is made quite comfortable while Yen endeavors to break down the barriers that separate the races. When Schultz inadvertently hints that his woman, Mah Li, is having an affair with Captain Li, Yen decides to deal out the customary Oriental punishment. However, upon Megan's pleading Mah Li is turned over to her as a hostage. Then Yen determines that Megan must answer for the treachery with her life.

Megan turns on the full power of missionary doctrines, which seem to arouse in Yen an understanding of life that he never knew before, and his apparent conversion draws Megan closer to him. But the general can't fully pull himself away from the tenets of his ancestors and drinks his poisoned tea as Megan kneels at his feet.

Probably the best way to stimulate patron interest would be by minimizing the war angle—a feature that most patrons have seen enough of in such pictures as "Shanghai Express" and "The Roar of the Dragon," and instead playing up the mysterious fascination of the white race for things Oriental. Inasmuch as about 90 per cent of the action concerns Barbara Stanwyck and Nils Asther and practically all the rest of it only including Toschia Mori, Richard Lou and Walter Connelly, you have a startling feature on which to base your patron appeal by playing up the two leads as prototypes of an age-old misunderstanding.

While the picture includes battles, bandits, bomb dropping airplanes, destruction of part of the city by fire and explosion, and a sensational capture of a treasure train, the main trend is the drama of conflicting creeds. As such, it is almost completely adult fare.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story by Grace Varinz Stone. Adaptation by Edward Paramore. Directed by Frank Capra. Photographed by Joseph Walker. Release date still to be determined. Running time, 80 minutes.

Rock-a-Bye

(RKO Radio)

Domestic Drama

The success of "Rock-a-Bye" in your theatre will depend largely upon the type of people who go to make up your audiences. The story is another treatment of that old question, how much can a woman want another woman's husband, even though she is unaware of the fact that he is married. Woven into the basic idea is Judy Carrol's love for children—and if she was able to get one, either by adoption or one of her own, how she would train it to avoid the pitfalls that marked her own life.

At times, such as in the beginning, when Judy's character is being established, the picture is vivid in realistic drama; then it shifts to angles which are intended to create deep audience sympathy for the character. Still, these scenes are punctuated by some ribald comedy, done in a highly histrionic fashion by Snooks and at times descending to slapstick variety. Thus in the first part and through the middle of the picture there is a line of hilarity breaking in on the drama and pathos of a woman who is denied her greatest desire.

Romance enters when Judy decides to do the play, "Rock-a-Bye," the type of story which her manager De Sola is trying to keep her away from, because it is to reminiscent of her own actual past. However, her flaming ambition brings her into close association with the playwright, Pell, who, despite the fact that his own divorce is pending, falls head over heels in love with this sometimes ranting demon and sometimes angelic cherub. As a climax Pell's mother pleads with Judy to forget Jake when a son is born to him and his estranged wife—a thing which Judy does after some tensely dramatic scenes that portray her in a noble, self-sacrificing role.

Building better than average business will depend upon how deftly you handle the story and the leading characters. Primarily it is a woman's picture. This line, supplemented by the glamor of Constance Bennett, to which should be added the appeal of Paul Lukas and the rising popularity of Joel McCrea, looks to be the strongest method of approach. If your patrons are well enough acquainted with the Jobyna Howland line of comedy, it may be wise to give her name more than ordinary prominence.

Because of its theme, "Rock-a-Bye" is strictly an adult feature. Even though a two-year-old child, June Filmer, is featured quite prominently in the early and middle sections of the picture, the picture will be quite over the heads of the younger patrons.

The first reels of the picture are such a kalaediscopic combination of drama, romance, comedy and suspense creating scenes that the tense climactic sequences seem to be rather long drawn out and caused the preview audience to do some noticeable squirming. Whether this sagging of interest will be evident in your theatre depends upon how you prepare your patrons as to what to expect.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Speed Demon

(Columbia)

Melodrama

"Speed Demon" is the kind of picture that should set youngsters to cheering and probably remind lots of the grown-ups that the technique that thrilled them when they were kids has not been entirely forgotten by some producers.

It's one of those racing serio-melodramas, boasting a young, ambitious, but easily led hero; a heroine who fills the contrasting role in the way she is expected to fill it; the poor old man who is staking his hopes for the future on a new fangled speed boat; a cop who is always funny when he tries to be serious; a ruthless villain and his gang of rum-runners, and a series of eye-blinking outboard motor boat races that are alive with excitement.

Then, for the human interest angle, there is a boy who has left an orphan asylum to run the cop ragged, and for no good reason, as far as Speed's character or financial responsibility is concerned, to become his ward. There's also the typical romance with its misunderstandings, between the hero and the heroine.

Speed, after much wheedling, is permitted to drive Torrance's new speedster and comes through with a performance that tops the favorite's. Langard and Stenner try to get Speed to throw the big race, with Pete, although he has become a little swell-headed, much to Jean's and the Captain's chagrin, indignantly refusing. A race, and Speed just about to win, precedes the inevitable smash up, and Speed is ruled off the track because he has been drinking. He falls heir to Catfish and gets a job from Langard as a rum-runner. Catfish brings Speed and Jean together again and another race, which is interrupted by the villain's gang kidnapping the kid and Speed rescuing him, amidst high heroics. In the final race Speed dashes to victory, love and a good reputation.

Various comedy and drama interludes serve as build-up for the main theme, which, unless they are continually looking for an epic, should make them realize that they have been entertained with a lot of good old-fashioned hokum that is exciting.

While not the kind of picture that demands any great campaign, it affords ample opportunity for many snappy exploitation gags on the salt water speedboat racing—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story and screen play by Charles R. Condon. Directed by D. Ross Lederman. Photographed by Ben Kline. Release date, Nov. 5, 1932. Running time, 65 minutes.

Tess of the Storm Country

(Fox)

Drama

The appearance of Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor, the screen's most famous romantic couple, here, as always, offers the exhibitor unusual marquee possibilities. In this instance, in particular, the pair will form the best selling point for the showman, since the story is cut to an elderly pattern, almost appearing a sentimental melodrama of the nineties.

Do not neglect the origin of the story, however. Written by Grace Miller White, it has been done on the screen before and should in itself have a certain popular appeal by name only. Miss Gaynor and Farrell do their work well in their usual style, carrying the romantic element in expected fashion and in a manner which should have a definitely effective reaction from the run of patronage. Farrell comes into the picture a bit late, the earlier sequences being in the nature of introductory matter, the whole moving at a decidedly faster pace the moment he makes an appearance.

The two stars are well supported by Dudley Digges, able character performer, who may not be very well known, but will certainly be found effective; Claude Gillingwater, in a difficult, unsympathetic role as the grouchy father of Farrell, and Peppy, a tiny but brilliantly trained monkey which supplies much of the comedy and steals the spotlight completely whenever he appears. The remainder of the support is satisfactory.

Digges and his daughter, Miss Gaynor, leave the sea to settle on the rocky New England coast. Immediately they run afoul of the mean Gillingwater, who burns their home, tosses them out. Miss Gaynor spurns Farrell, but when Digges is arrested, accused of the murder of a friend of Farrell, who was riding with a game warden, Farrel comes to her aid and brings his sister, June Clyde, about to have a child by the young man who was killed. Janet cares for the child. When the baby is dying Janet brings it to the church for baptism, during the performance of the ceremony on a wealthy infant. Miss Clyde breaks down, goes to her child, and Farrell and Miss Gaynor are completely reconciled, as her father is freed.

The film has a certain atmospheric effectiveness, with shots of fishermen illicitly netting in the fog and mist, with night and storm shots on the rocky coast contributing to the complete picture. Experience undoubtedly will indicate to all exhibitors the value of concentration on the Gaynor-Farrell combination in selling the picture. Indicate something of the stormy sea and coast setting, convey the idea of Janet in the title role of Tess, of the trials and tribulations experienced by Tess and her seafaring father, both feeling "stranded" on land, meeting obstacles of human intolerance which they never before had known. Indicate Farrell doing his utmost to atone for the ugliness of his father.

This is a picture for the family to see, and emphasis on that point in the advertising should certainly do no harm. Play up the starring combination, indicate the theme and origin, and the film should perform satisfactorily.—Aaronson, New York.

Kongo

Drama

Metro has adapted the elderly stage play by Chester De Vonde and Kilbourn Gordon, revolving about the maniacal revenge wreaked by a crippled white man in the depths of the African Kongo. There is, fortunately, a certain impression of authenticity in the sets, which contributes measurably to the entertainment.

The exhibitor is here presented with the opportunity for indulging in lobby displays and a selling campaign which is in keeping with the story's locale. The jungle is the exclusive setting. The addition of the application in the story of the weird and superstition-ridden religious practice of the native blacks, and the important part it plays in the screen narrative, afford a further opportunity for appropriate displays. It would be advisable, perhaps, to "pile it on thick" in an effort to capitalize fully on the atmosphere of the film.

The selling angle may be based to good advantage on the revenge theme, the story of the warped mind which, buried among blacks, plots a cruel vengeance upon the man who wronged him, with the daughter of that man, an African trader, as the means of the revenge. When Walter Huston is cast as the white man in evil-appearing makeup and a nasty scar, and when Lupe Velez plays the native girl who lives with him, and Conrad Nagel offers the role of the broken doctor, who regains his self-respect in an effort to save the object of Huston's vengeance, then the exhibitor certainly has something to sell his patrons from the popular standpoint. He has something to splash upon his marquee in large lettering. In addition, Forrester Harvey, Cockney-accented henchman of Huston, offers a neat bit of comedy now and again, and Virginia Bruce, blondely attractive, is capable as the girl who by a ruse is taken from a convent by Huston, and degraded almost to the point of insanity.

There is, of course, much in the nature of the old "hokum" in atmospheric effect in the film, but the players handle themselves with confidence, the story has been developed with a certain starkness which adds to its strength, and from the popular viewpoint the picture should be found entertaining.

It would be advisable, then, to rely heavily on the atmosphere of the picture and the cast names, of undoubted strength, for the major appeal, not forgetting, at the same time, the revenge angle. It is a bit too raw-meaty for the youngsters, but should be good for a reasonable result from the ledger viewpoint.—Aaronson, New York.

Sherlock Holmes

(Fox)

Mystery Drama

Clive Brook is an authentic-appearing Sherlock Holmes, with speech, mannerisms and dress true to the tradition of the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's famed master sleuth. The dress, it would seem, is a bit on the exaggerated side, with the heavy checked tweeds, the high stock and weighty overcoat hardly in keeping with the story, which brings Holmes and his deductive genius into a strictly modern setting of 1932. However, it serves to preserve the traditional Holmes made famous on the stage by William Gillette.

The exhibitor does not need to be told what to do with a Sherlock Holmes played by Clive Brook in fine style. But he may be informed that the modern London setting brings the method of the American racketeer into the scope of the criminality of Moriarty, who imports international criminals, including a Chicago gangster, to introduce the storekeeper "shake-down" into London. The illustrious "pineapple" with its explosive tendencies and the high-powered car and machine gun come to London. Tell the patrons you have Sherlock Holmes matching his wits in a final battle with Moriarty and modern gangster methods, smartly blocking the attempt to rob a bank.

The romance gives added interest from the standpoint of the feminine patronage, while the amount of attention which the producers have devoted to Billy, played by Howard Leeds, Holmes' be-buttoned young helper, should aid in holding juvenile attention.

The cast is good. Miriam Jordon, as Holmes' fiancee, is attractive, natural, and worth attention, since she is new to the screen and is in need of exploitation build-up for future appearances. Ernest Torrence is certainly a sufficiently villainous appearing Moriarty, offering in his performance the very incarnation of a distorted, criminal mind bent only on the destruction of society for his own ends. Herbert Mundin, as the London pub keeper who is the object of the shake-down, contributes a notable bit of relieving comedy with his inimitable Cockney accent and manner. Reginald Owen serves as a sufficiently stupid foil for Holmes in the Dr. Watson role.

This is good entertainment, and should prove worth while at the box office from the ledger standpoint of the exhibitor.—Aaronson, New York.

Berlin Medley

(Fox)

Striking

Paced at a good speed, relying for the most part on an atmospheric impression evolved by the masterly editing and cutting of the material, this subject of the Magic Carpet of Movietone series becomes a splendid pictorial impression of a great city. Intimate glimpses of people and activity are blended in a swiftly moving and unified view of motion, carrying the scene from the dawn of early morning and the awakening of the city to the fast paced and pleasure seeking activity of the brightly lit night. The absence of accompanying dialogue is in no-wise damaging to the effect of the whole.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Re: CROOKED CIRCLE.

Gentlemen,-

You are doubtless aware that this picture broke all records at the Hollywood last Thursday-Friday-Saturday. Thursday night, Friday afternoon and night, and Saturday night, the theatre was absolutely packed to capacity, and hundreds were turned away each night. We are bringing this picture back for a return engagement. So much for the drawing power of the picture.

With regard to the entertainment quality of the picture, people went out of their way to tell us how much they enjoyed it, and we know our patrons laughed their heads off over it.

In advertising the picture, we starred Zasu Pitts, saying it was her first full length comedy feature.

Yours very truly,

PREMIER OPERATING CORPORATION LIMITED,

H. Allen

Washington — The additional election night performance given by every first-run theatre boosted receipts considerably for what would have otherwise been a week of poor receipts all around, due to the competition of radio. However, Loew's Palace which ran an election night show reported receipts for that performance away ahead of the same show four years ago. Every other house likewise reported big balance sheets for that night to add to the week's receipts.

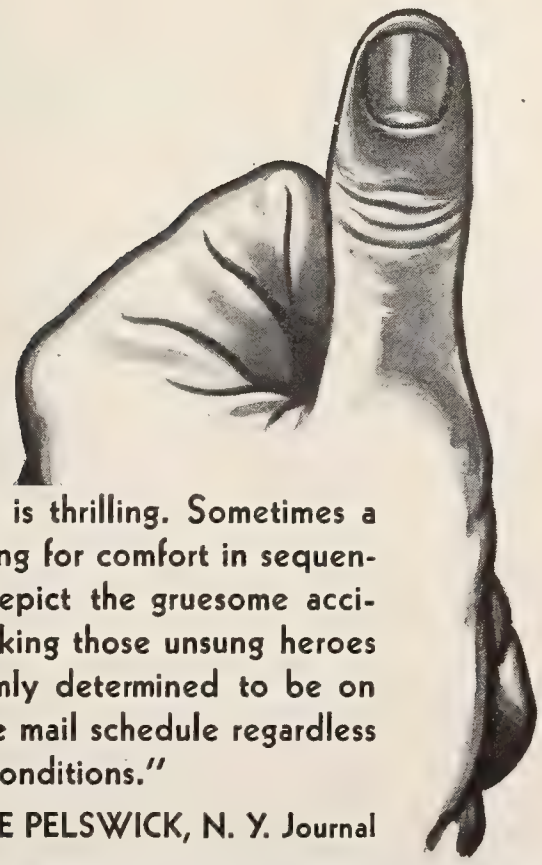
The New York Critics Say "Thumbs Up" On

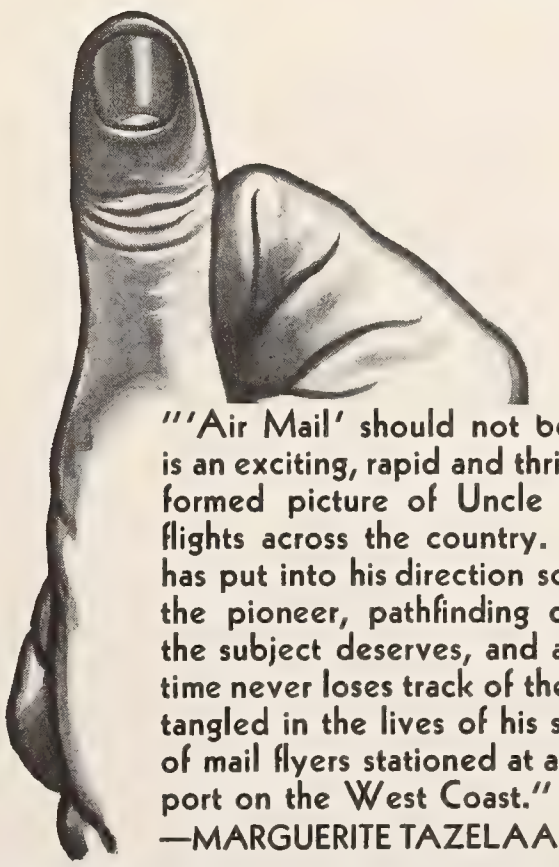
AIR MAIL



"'Air Mail' is a wildly exciting aviation thriller. The men will relish it. The women will gasp. It's a real action movie, reminiscent of the days when movies moved and were less preoccupied with mere conversation."

—BLAND JOHANESON, N. Y. Mirror

"The contact established between the flyers and the airport through radio telephony is portrayed with a dramatic note all its own. The reality of the film is intensified through a series of crack-ups, not one of which is overdone. The perilous 'pony express,' it seems, has its modern counterpart."



—G. J. L., N. Y. Post

"'Air Mail' is thrilling. Sometimes a bit too thrilling for comfort in sequences which depict the gruesome accidents overtaking those unsung heroes who are grimly determined to be on time with the mail schedule regardless of weather conditions."

—ROSE PELSWICK, N. Y. Journal

"'Air Mail' should not be missed. It is an exciting, rapid and thrillingly performed picture of Uncle Sam's mail flights across the country. John Ford has put into his direction something of the pioneer, pathfinding quality that the subject deserves, and at the same time never loses track of the drama entangled in the lives of his small group of mail flyers stationed at a lonely airport on the West Coast."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 144

Bluebook School Question No. 144 was: (A) Tell us what the negative wire of an electric power source has an affinity for. Has it any affinity for anything else? (B) Suppose we have two high voltage electric generators, every part of which is thoroughly insulated from earth. You connect the positive pole of one to the negative pole of the other. Voltage of both generators the same. What will happen? (C) Assuming an electric system to be thoroughly insulated from earth at all points. Voltage of wires, after passing through transformers, 10,000. One of the wires happens to fall to earth. What will happen?"

The following made good: Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, G. E. Doe, S. G. Williams, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, T. Van Vaulkenburg, H. Edwards, Bill Doe, R. J. Arntson, B. Diglah and P. Jackson, W. Broadbent, A. Bailey, S. Howard and D. L. Kuttz, P. K. Daniels and P. L. Day, D. Singleton, Ira Harper, H. D. Schofield, Nic Granby, J. Wentworth, L. G. Gregeson, P. T. Dove, J. Billings, F. Rickey, H. B. Coates, W. Love and S. D. Love, J. Williams, T. D. Lennox and W. L. Tudor, O. Allbright, D. V. Peterson and G. Bragdon, J. L. Hanson and F. Hanson, D. Lambert and T. Davis, B. Wheeler and R. Shuler, D. L. Nonehan and L. B. Bryant, L. Thomas and D. D. Davis, L. T. Tobey, B. L. Banning and L. Jones, D. Little and J. H. Rathburn, F. Harlor and G. Harrison, O. L. Evans, P. L. Davis, D. Anderson, R. D. Conley and S. Maybe, M. D. Oleson and J. B. Malley, L. D. Rubin and M. B. Greig, T. Lambert and T. Davis, N. McGuire and H. Betts, D. Holler and D. R. Peters, D. L. Mason, M. E. Sailor, J. Hendershot, A. Wells, O. L. Daris and M. Simms, R. Singleton and M. L. George, G. K. Berger and H. R. Baldwin, J. Cermac, D. V. Simson, L. D. Thomas, D. L. Blinkendorfer, A. M. Richards, A. Breaston and L. Haber, D. K. Ormie and B. Jones, K. L. Knight, L. D. Samuels and L. L. Delis, L. Grant and R. Geddings, D. Michealson, M. Simms, H. D. and B. L. Palmer, D. U. Granger, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen, H. D. Tyler, A. Geibto, T. Murphy, J. Daniels, T. Taylor and C. Ray, F. F. Franks, D. L. Sinklow, P. L. Jensen and A. Ilks, P. R. Fox and T. Davis, D. L. Wexler, L. W. Richards and D. E. Storey, E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner, M. H. Lonberger, T. M. Vinson, T. McGruder, F. Ferguson, R. L. Mitchel, G. Deckson and L. B. Horne, J. L. Baker and T. Jenkins.

As to Section A, I think we will listen to S. G. Williams. It is rather astonishing the number of men who failed to designate the fact that negative has affinity for the positive of the same power source. Doubtless they knew that fact well enough and were merely careless. I let a number of the old timers of the "school" get past with that, though without that designation the answer was really wrong. Williams says:

"The negative wire of an electric power source has affinity for the positive of the same source, and for nothing else."

That is correct, gentlemen. Learn to be careful and precisely correct. If you were, for example, under examination and that question were asked, and you merely said it had affinity for positive and for nothing else, as many of you did in this case, you should and probably would be marked wrong on that point.

I believe D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant answered at least as well as any one else on Section B. They say: "This presented such an interesting question that we consulted several local electrical men, one of whom is in charge of the generator room in our local light plant (a large plant, by the way). This is what he says about the first propostion: namely, if the positive of one generator be connected to the positive of another, and the negative be connected to the negative of the same machine:

" 'I have never heard of such a stunt being pulled. If it were done, though, I believe each generator would have a circuit completed through the other one and would set up current flow. In other words each generator would have its circuit completed through the other machine, though what amount of resistance would be set up I am not prepared to say. I am inclined to think one machine would burn out its armature; perhaps both of them.'

"This man has agreed to look into the matter of resistance. He says, and I believe he is quite right, that the circuits would certainly be established."

I had never looked at the matter in that light, but after some thought, believe the generator room superintendent is correct. I would like to hear from some of you on this point.

(C) G. E. Doe says, "Since the negative and positive of a generator have affinity for nothing except the opposite polarity of the same generator, and since the insulation is complete, if one wire chance to contact with ground, nothing will happen, the ground, under the condition set forth, offering no path to opposite polarity. This is true regardless of what the voltage may be."

I must again warn you to place your name and the number of the question you are answering at the top of the first page of your answer; also, write any personal letter you may wish to enclose on a separate sheet. Examining the answers has become a very real task, and you must make their handling as easy as you can. If the name and question number are at the top of the first page, they may be properly filed for examination in about one-fourth the time required if this is not done.

New York Brokers Support New Natural Color Film

Natural Color, Inc., is the new organization formed to commercialize the color process which its inventor, Merrill Waide, claims will make possible the production of color negatives at the same cost as black and white.

M. J. Meehan, broker, at 30 Broad Street, New York, and his partner, James F. McConnochie, are sponsoring the new color process. Mr. McConnochie said they would have no statement to make for at least three more months. The stock, he said, will not be offered publicly.

Protector Tubes Invented

Dr. N. M. La Porte of Publix has perfected a new rectifying tube for large projection machines which will be used in 98 projectors of the I-S type throughout the Publix circuit. It is believed that appreciable economy can be effected with the new tube as it can be manufactured for $3, as compared with $60, the cost of the present tube. The new tube has been given a successful tryout at the Paramount in New York over a period of several weeks.

JENKINS' COLYUM

DEAR HERALD:

Three weeks ago we were in the sugar beet section of western Nebraska. Two weeks ago we were in the wheat section of western Kansas. Today we are in the cotton belt of southwestern Oklahoma.

Bob Browning, who manages Enid's four theatres for Griffith Brothers, is quite a boy. Bob used to sell brushes and play professional baseball up in North Dakota, and Fargo hasn't forgotten him yet. Bob has made the Aztec theatre in Enid a household word with every family within 50 miles. When they think of Enid they think of the Aztec before they think of the courthouse. When you want to go to Enid don't inquire for Enid; just ask any of the natives where the Aztec theatre is and they can tell you. That's the kind of a manager Bob is. Bob said he was very glad to see us, and we told him he could prove that by a two years' subscription to the HERALD. He proved it. Bob has some assistant managers who impressed us as being mighty snappy young fellows and important factors in the Griffith organization.

C. J. Hartman has closed one of his theatres in Carnegie. C. J. says he is expecting a drop this winter after the cotton crop has been marketed and the banks have collected the most of the money. Right now his business is holding up fairly well. With only one theatre in a town like Carnegie and a manager like C. J. it would seem that there should be plenty of bread and butter, with an occasional T-bone steak for his family even in the most stringent times. C. J. says he is glad to note that the HERALD is going to reinstate the department, "What the Pictures Did for Me," and he promises to report regularly to it. He used to be one of the prominent contributors to that department, and many exhibitors came to rely on his reports.

J. R. Smith of the Royal theatre at Mountain View recently has taken over the management of the theatre on a percentage proposition. If energy, backed by a knowledge of the business, will make the theatre a success, J. R. is the boy who can put it over. We liked his appearance. He's a level-headed chap with energy to spare and that's an asset in this business that some people don't have. J. R. is now a full-fledged member of the HERALD family in good standing, and that's another asset.

Down here in this cotton belt they are playing "Cabin in the Cotton" and packing them in everywhere we have gone. It is one picture out of a hundred that was properly titled. It is a title that means something to these cotton folks, and boy, how they eat it up. And now, if they'd make a picture for the corn and alfalfa belt and would title it "Pigs in the Clover" or "The Sows Are in the Corn," they'd go for it like a cat for warm milk, but as long as they continue to give 'em "Her Royal Bed," "The Million Dollar Legs," "Her Wedding Night," "Freaks," "Merrily We Go to Hell" and pictures with such titles, the depression will still be on. The man who thought of "Cabin in the Cotton" as a title should have his salary raised and should receive the thanks of every exhibitor in this cotton belt. They can't make pictures exclusively for Broadway and get away with them. Somebody out in Hollywood ought to get hep to that pretty soon.

J. J. Hale of the Palace theatre at Hobart says he has no complaint to offer. He says his business has held up very well and he isn't expecting any very great slump when winter comes. The Palace is a very comfortable theater with excellent sound and we have listed Mr. Hale as a very popular manager, and that spells a lot for the show business.

Our old friend Pat Duffy still operates the Rialto at Mangum. Pat says that most people take him to be Irish and that he doesn't object to it a bit. Pat says that Ireland is where the policeman and shillalahs come from and if it weren't for policemen and shillalahs what would Chicago do? There you are. What would she do? Pat has got it figured out just right. Not only that, but he's got the show business down pretty fine, too.

A. R. Patterson of the Wollam theatre at Walters is a pretty busy man. He is cashier of Walters' prominent bank as well as manager of their popular playhouse.

F. J. Jameson of the Majestic theatre at Temple was running a matinee for Sears and Roebuck when we called. This institution gives out free tickets and pays Mr. Jamison for running the show, and did he have a jam? Boy, you couldn't get in or out. We didn't get to visit with Mr. Jamison much because he was busy handling the jam, but he invited us to come back and spend the night at his home some time when we could have a real visit. Well, now, listen to that invitation, will you?

We had only very short visits with Fred P. Hoenscheidt of the Rialto and Sug theatres at Chickasha, and W. T. Spears of the New Empire and Rex at Altus. Both of these gentlemen had engagements to meet and we didn't want to delay them. Better luck next time we hope.

Eddie Kadane manages the Romona and Grand here in Frederick. The Romona is a beautiful theatre, as fine as one will find in most towns of 50,000 people. It took nerve to build a theatre like the Romona in a town of 4,000, but Eddie has got nerve. Not only that, but he's got a knowledge of the business. We believe it will be a success.

Glen D. Thompson operates the theatres in Healdton and Wilson, and Glen is what we'd call an operator. He knows the business backwards and sideways, and if Glen don't make a go of it then voting for Roosevelt hasn't cured this depression. Glen has never lost out yet.

How about those reports to "What the Pictures Did for Me"? Are you going to send in? If you don't, then stop kicking. Come on; be a good sport with the rest of the boys.

THE GROWING GENERATION

THE SHOWMAN WHO CAN solve the problem of the growing generation, insofar as it concerns the box office, will earn for himself a deep, deep niche in the Hall of Fame. Don't jump to hasty conclusions; we are not referring to kiddie business, but rather, a more important part of your community. The "in-between" children bordering from the classification above "kiddies" up to the "teens."

IT SEEMS THAT CHILDREN develop a keen interest in certain activities which carries them over a period of years. Then the interest starts to lag and finally they drift away from that which held their attention for a brief portion of their childhood days.

A close study of this problem revealed to this writer a definite parallel in theatre admissions among this same age period. Theatres made a strong play for the so-called kiddie business, which we might designate as between the ages of seven to twelve. During those years the children took great delight in participating in theatre clubs, give-aways, contests, etc. They even worked with the managers of the theatres in organizing different groups; went out and helped publicize the various events designed to attract the seven to twelve generation.

THEN THEY ARRIVE AT the exalted age of twelve. The age when most theatres, for some unaccountable reason, labeled them adults and charged them accordingly. What happened? They stopped coming to the movie house as frequently as before for the simple and obvious reason that they could hardly expect their mothers and fathers to agree with the theatres and let them pay an adult admission.

At twelve years and up to sixteen and seventeen years of age they are still minors in every sense of the word. They have no added source of income that would permit them to increase their spending money, and so, instead of coming to the movies two, three or four times a week, they have to be satisfid with not more than once a week and in many cases not even that often.

SO LONG AS THEATRES continue to set that twelfth birthday as the deadline for the lower admission, so long will this remain a most important problem. Which leads us to ask you to decide on one of two plans, or, with slight alterations, a combination of both definitely aimed at keeping the older children as steady patrons.

FIRST CHANGE YOUR CHILDREN admission scale to include all those up to sixteen years of age. The second is suggested by D. C. Taylor, manager of the Westwood Theatre, Westwood, California. He solves the problem by issuing to each student over twelve years of age, attending school, an identification card which, when presented at the box office, entitles two students to admission for the price of one. Thus, he explains, at his scale of prices, the cost to these students is only two and a half to five cents more than the usual children's ticket until they left school entirely. His use of the identification card was principally to keep older boys and girls, who left school, from using this two-for-one privilege.

Mr. Taylor's suggestion is good because it opens up numerous other slants along the same lines. It can be worked out so that the identification card can entitle the holder to a children's ticket and thereby avoid the objectionable two-for-one angle which so many showmen are not in favor of.

REGARDLESS OF HOW YOU work out this problem in your own situation, the fact remains that thousands of growing children are being kept away from movie theatres because they cannot afford to pay adult prices. We gain nothing by sticking stubbornly to old-fashioned ideas regarding the age when children stop being children. We are facing facts, and those facts speak quite eloquently when they say that you are losing a lot of good admissions.

There is no reason why we must take it for granted that children over twelve are not as interested in motion pictures as they were before that birthday. And you cannot expect children between the ages of twelve and sixteen, still attending school and still dependent on their parents for maintenance, to increase the cost of their movie entertainment from ten or fifteen cents up to twenty-five, thirty or thirty-five cents.

Those who have taken the trouble to analyze the situation are fully aware of the thousands of children within the classification under discussion who might be attracted back to the theatre if they could continue under the same prices they enjoyed before their twelfth birthday. Mr. Taylor's plan—or experiment if you will—proved highly successful. It can be just as successful for you.

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

This one bears repetition. In fact, several Lobby Laff suggestions recently were about this same gag. Pity the poor manager who must handle muggs like this.

How about some more Lobby Laff ideas, boys? Dick must have the idea before he can illustrate it.

BILL WHYTE AGAIN TIED UP WITH FAIR GROUNDS IN SUFFOLK

Last year about this time we reported that Bill Whyte, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, R. I., N. Y., tied-up with the promoters of the Suffolk County Fair, held each year at Riverhead, for the setting up of a Rest Tent, from which drinking water and cups were served patrons through the courtesy of Prudential Theatres.

This fall Whyte again arranged for another Rest Tent and the privilege of plastering the grounds with window cards on current attractions. As you can see from the accompanying photo, one of the theatre's ushers was on hand to care for the comfort of those who stopped at the tent. Programs were passed out to the visitors.

In return for running a trailer for the Fair Association, which cost but $1.75, it was arranged to have a featured band play at the theatre one night during the week. This was announced over a "mike" at the grand stand the first day of the racing program, at which time the attractions at the theatre were also mentioned.

Another good publicity stunt resulting from this tie-up was an arrangement made with the promoters of the auto races to have several well known drivers, including Fred Frame, Billy Winn and others, attend a theatre party. Publicity was also given this gag through the public address system at the fair grounds.

Local theatre and the circuit in general profited through the courtesies extended Fair patrons by Whyte and his staff and the stunt bids to become an annual occurrence. It certainly proved an excellent opportunity to advertise Prudential good will to a host of people.

New Yorkers in Milwaukee

The new Fox-Midwesco set-up in Milwaukee finds a number of former New York theatre men in the ranks. Herman Starr is holding down the job of supervisor of the southern district; Lew Preston, former Randforce man in Brooklyn, is in charge of the northern division; Ralph Walsh is acting as Milwaukee supervisor; Christy Welbert has been named assistant to the publicity department, and Fred Stein is the new booker for the circuit.

FLEISCHMAN ISSUED TIMELY HERALD FOR PRE-ELECTION TRADE

The returns for the recent election were all in long before this appears in type, but it's not too late to let Round Tablers know that M. L. Fleischman, manager of the New Garden Theatre, Richmond Hill, issued a timely herald prior to Election Day.

Printed on green stock, in red ink, the words "Vote, Elect, Garden" appeared in large type at the head of the herald. It read: "Vote for and Elect the Garden theatre of Richmond Hill for all your motion picture entertainment. Our platform has been and always will be the finest pictures obtainable from the major producers in the world." More institutional copy followed, ending up with an announcement that election returns would be read from the stage.

KRENDEL SENDS CLUB EXAMPLES OF ZELIG'S STRIKING POSTER ART

We are indebted to Dan Krendel, manager of Paramount Windsor Theatres, Ltd., Windsor, Canada, for sending in a couple of examples of poster work turned out by his poster artist, Harry Zelig, who has been doing some splendid work for Krendel at the Capitol and for other houses on the circuit.

Detailed information concerning color schemes of the two posters reproduced here are lacking, but we can guess that both were strikingly effective. On "Sign of the Cross" a flittered cross was pictured suspended from a chain with, as you may see, title painted above and names of featured players inserted at either side. The head of Bela Lugosi in character make-up was featured in the poster on "White Zombie."

Thanks to Dan for sending along the photos, which, he tells us, he snapped himself back-stage. Not bad for an amateur, Danny, and we'll be looking for others to show your fellow Club members what's going on at the Capitol.

KRIM GAVE PATRONS EXOTIC ATMOSPHERE ON JUNGLE PICTURE

Patrons received quite an eyeful of jungle atmosphere when Mac Krim, manager of the Lasky Theatre, Detroit, Mich., exploited "Bring 'Em Back Alive," according to the accompanying photo and several other snapshots we have at hand.

The display arranged in the lobby one week prior to opening consisted of a combination of wax and real figures. You'll have no trouble making out the wax ones; the local colored population was drawn upon for the supporting cast, which consisted of two females and a number of boys dressed in animals skins and masks. Eighteen heads, representing as many different animals, were worn by the boys, and two "Tarzan Boys" lent further atmosphere to the jungle scheme. Those practically unadorned wax figures of Mac's certainly injected some sort of s. a. to the ensemble.

During the rush hour the boys who wore the heads and the two "Tarzan Boys" all paraded through the business district with a caliope in their van and stopped traffic, which gained Mac a whole lot of publicity for his show. A worthwhile effort on his part, we are sure all will agree, and we'll be looking for further evidence of his work.

Goetz's Hallowe'en Party

Joe Goetz, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Cincinnati, and one of Clem Pope's fast stepping theatre helmsmen, recently stirred up a lot of neighborhood good-will by staging a Hallowe'en party. He arranged a particularly elaborate foyer for the affair.

SWEETEN BOX OFFICE WITH CANDY MATINEES!

Here's a swell idea to work with your showing of RKO's "Orphan Annie," and it possesses plenty of b.o. appeal for the kiddies. So much so that we are recommending it to you for your serious consideration.

A candy outfit out in Chicago is sponsoring a special "Orphan Annie" candy bar. As near as we can learn you can buy these bars cheap enough to warrant giving them away to every kiddie who attends the special matinees.

Inasmuch as the "Orphan Annie" cartoon strip is now so universally popular, the showing of the picture is bound to attract widespread interest in your community. If this is the case then we urgently advise you to capitalize on the picture, viz., the younger generation and stock up on the candy bar gag, which sounds like a natural to us.

If you want to find out about the candy drop a line to D. J. Horrell of the Shotwell Manufacturing Co., Chicago, Ill. They'll be glad to tell you about the whole tie-up and furnish you with advertising material, etc. Follow this up, boys, it ought to mean some extra money when you show the picture.

EVIDENCE THAT JOHN TREWHELA IS ON GOOD TERMS WITH NEWSPAPER

The value of friendly cooperation between newspaper and theatre is brought to our attention from a glance at several tear-sheets containing mention of John Trewhela and the Fox-Judith Theatre, Lewistown, Mont., in which is ample evidence that John and the newspaper boys have reached the perfect understanding sought by every showman.

It is nothing unusual for Trewhela to crash a column on the front page with a few paragraphs about some interesting little slant on himself or theatre; nor are the other pages in the news and amusement sections complete without a number of well handled stories on the same subjects.

It all reverts to the oft-discussed preparation of stories and managers' approach to the city editor. Apparently Trewhela has never tried to brow-beat a newspaper man into accepting some piece of tripe with no news value; rather, he has consistently picked out some slant that carried reader appeal, for after all the newspaperman's job is to sell news, not tripe. At least that's the way we sum up the situation and John's policy is one to be widely recommended.

PRATT ENGINEERED EFFECTIVE WINDOW ON NEW ATTRACTION

The Barthelmess film "Cabin in the Cotton" has certainly proved a natural for Club members down among the cotton-growing states. They've got fields of cotton down there; they know just how a cabin ought to look; they can get a loan of a whole bale or two of cotton, and add many other little gags that a northern Round Tabler might never think of.

Here's a little snap-shot of a window arranged by Clyde M. Pratt, manager of Hall Industries Rialto Theatre down in Kingsville, Texas. We had to crop off a section of the window that held some attractively arranged stalks of cotton and a card advertising the picture in order to get proper proportions, but we kept the miniature cabin, negro mammy, truck load and bales of cotton intact, if it's possible for readers to discern these.

It must have made a very attractive display. Henry Hall, of Hall Theatres, set a bonus for managers who exceeded their regular quotos and Pratt advises us that his stunt put him on the receiving end; hence he wants to pass the word along the line. Thanks for your word concerning F. D. Nance, Clyde, and we'll hope to hear from this enterprising showman again.

GOLD - - GOLD - - GOLD ! ! !

Through a co-operative tie-up with about a dozen local merchants you can engineer a successful "Gold Night" that in nine cases out of ten will double your business.

Each of the participating merchants pledge themselves for five dollars a week for a given number of weeks. On the night selected as "Gold Night" this money is distributed in the theatre among the patrons and if you are a good master of ceremony you will be able to inject a lot of good, harmless laughs into your distribution.

One manager we know of failed to sell the merchants on this idea and put up fifty dollars himself. He did not have a kick to register, since he increased business for his theatre by about one hundred and fifty dollars the first night and over two hundred the second. And brother, that's making money in anyone's language.

LERNER NOW SKIPPER OF S. A. THEATRE AND IS DOING A FINE JOB

The last time we heard from Phil Lerner he was managing the Tivoli Theatre of Varieties, Cape Town, Africa. Subsequently, we heard he was transferred to a number of other houses and now word comes from Phil, himself, that he's holding forth as the skipper of the Capitol Theatre, a brand new, first class talkie house in Wynberg, South Africa.

Phil Lerner

Up to the time our Club heard from him, Lerner had put in ten busy weeks on his new assignment, putting over advertising stunts, creating attractive lobby displays and doing other things to swell the box office. For one thing, we note that he has a most versatile and accommodating staff and is making the most of this talent.

Smart Showmanship

One portion of the accompanying photo shows Lerner and his whole "family" and the other will give you a good idea of how his boys and girls go to bat for him when "atmosphere" is required. In this instance the doormen acted as police officers on guard at the entrance to a court room, a display fashioned to exploit "Trial of Mary Dugan." The regulation uniforms were obtained through the courtesy of the local Head Constable.

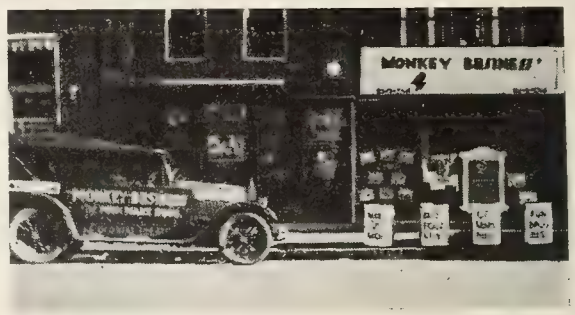
A couple other snap shots at hand show that the doormen and usherettes respectively doubled as Chinamen and Chinese girls when Phil exploited "Chinese Bungalow," in this instance doing their bit toward a street bally and making a good job of it.

Among a few heralds at hand is one issued in connection with the showing of a picture that featured horse-racing. The front cover of what appeared to be an official program stated that the "Wynberg Turf Club" would hold "A Three Days' Meeting." The inside spread gave details of the "unlimited value of entertainment stakes."

For "Dynamite" he had a man dressed to represent a laborer walk along the street with a sack thrown over his shoulder. The sack was labelled "Caution — Dynamite — Capitol." On "Swingin' High" he used a farm wagon, pulled by a team of horses, to bally a swing, which was rigged up in regulation style to seat an attractive girl.

We also note that he has been using cards to send out personal messages to prospective theatre patrons. These were headed "Imagine I Am Talking To You Personally," plugged a number of pictures and bore a small photo of Lerner in the upper right hand corner.

Another herald discloses that he has been using what is known in this country as Amateur or Opportunity Night. Local talent was sought among the younger element of his community and awards were made to each successful boy and girl in their respective classes.



It may be a long way from South Africa to U. S. A. but it's just a little jaunt as far as showbusiness is concerned, considering similarity of show-selling methods, for it appears that Lerner's ways are very much alike. It's interesting to get a slant on what's going on in far away lands and we hope he'll come through with more.

HERMAN WOOD WON DOORMAN'S PRIZE OFFERED BY FIRM

Theatre employees other than managers are encouraged to make efforts to increase business among the New England houses under the supervision of General Manager Samuel Kurson, according to a report on the recent activities of Herman E. Wood, who holds down the dual role of advertising man and doorman at the Colonial Theatre, Belfast, Me., a house managed by Marshall E. Quint.

It may be a little late to broadcast returns on "Monkey Business," when there's a brand new Marx Bros. picture already making the rounds, but we can't go wrong dishing out a few words of praise for work done by Wood in earning a circuit medal for best work done among doormen attached to about 10 theatres.

It's out of the question to show his display to good advantage in the accompanying illustration owing to lack of sharpness in the small snapshot; likewise, the snap of Wood himself is too dark to be recognized in a reproduction. As near as we can make out, he placed four large barrels on the sidewalk in front of the theatre, placarding them with separate signs that read from barrel to barrel, "Many Barrels of Fun—The Four Marx Bros.—Mon-Key-Bus-Iness. The snapshot also shows that an auto with appropriate copy was used to ballyhoo the picture about town and adjacent territory.

That's about all we can tell you about Wood right now, except that in addition to acting as ad man and doorman he does his bit with vocal numbers and tap dancing. Quite a handy guy around a theatre, we should think, and we wish him success in his climb up the ladder.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN WILL PRESENT—

Three first prizes of $50 each and three second prizes of $20 each for the best examples of newspaper advertising, exploitation, ballyhoo or publicity stunt, and the most effective lobby display and/or theatre front, on any one or more of the six reissued Chaplin comedies, with equal awards in case of a tie.

The prizes will be awarded, if possible, in time for Christmas as the contest will close at midnight, December 17th. And who will turn up their nose at a nice fifty-dollar check just when the good old shopping list looks like a bugaboo?

No real showman will book one of these Chaplin knockouts without giving it the sort of build-up and campaign it deserves. They will surely recognize its immense box-office possibilities and sell it accordingly. In any event, whoever gets behind one of these marvelous shorts ought to send in the details of what they accomplished and see if it doesn't rate one of the prizes.

Come on, boys; tell us how you advertised, exploited and sold Charlie Chaplin to your community. The judges will give every entry a square deal and, as in all past contests, the winners were showmen who never thought their material stood a chance. Maybe you'll get the same break—plus a Christmas check—plus national publicity, for your ability to make Chaplin's reissues from RKO exchanges mean something at the box office.

RUSSELLS HAVE FINE THEATRE DOWN SOUTH IN BLUEGRASS STATE

We have before us a couple of picture post cards of what is described as the "finest equipped and most beautiful little 700-seat house in America," which is taking in considerable territory. However, close examination of the cards disclose patent reasons why the Russell family's claim that the house named after them and located down South in Maysville, Ky., suh, occupies a distinctive niche in the show-world.

To all appearances John Eberson, or some likewise inspired designer of motion pictures theatres, had a finger in the architectural pie, for the side walls and ceiling have all the Eberson "atmosphere" tricks such as twinkling stars, a moon, rainbow, Spanish garden effect and, even though we can't see 'em, we'll bet there's some white pigeons poised in the upper regions. The other card, showing an exterior view of the front, bears additional evidence of the Spanish motif, with its Mission style columns at either side, dormer windows, red tile, etc.

Even if we can't reproduce the colored cards to support evidence of the above claim, we can, at least, show a photo of the Ford V-8 the Russells use to ballyhoo their theatre and attractions. You may see for yourselves that heart-shaped cards were strung, in this instance, on twine running from the front to standards erected on the top.

Another small photo shows what must be the very beautiful and attractive curtain in this theatre, especially decorated for "Gala Fall Opening." The words, "Where the Stars Shine," were written in script and surrounded by large star-frames to hold enlarged photos of the many prominent players appearing in coming attractions. We can guess that the effect was striking.

Thanks to the Russells, which, according to the letterhead, includes Lillian Armstrong Russell, president; J. Barbour Russell, Jr., manager, and James B. Russell, secretary and treasurer, for sending along the above.

PRESTON CELEBRATED 50TH ANNIVERSARY WITH DOUBLE TRUCK

Rounding out the half-century mark in life, many years of which were spent in show-business, is something to make a bit of noise about and Bill Preston, manager of the State Theatre, Quincy, Mass., did it to the tune of a double truck cooperative ad.

Streamed across the two pages in large type the head read: "Manager William Preston Observes 50th Birthday on Wednesday, October 9th." The bank of the main head told the rest of the story: "Popular State Theatre Manager Through Cooperation of These Local Merchants to Present Gifts to Theatre Patrons on Wednesday, October 19th." Plumb in the center portion of the spread, surrounded by a big black horseshoe, was a photo of Bill himself. Flanking the horseshoe appeared his biography. Side and bottom portions of the double truck were devoted to anniversary ads contributed by the merchants, generally carrying congratulations to Preston on the occasion of his 50th birthday.

The above was a home run for Preston, if we know our co-ops, and now we'll add our congratulations to the many others. Bill is apparently a young man of 50 years and here's hoping he puts over many other similar deals while he is in showbusiness. We'll be on the lookout for other examples of his aggressive work at the State.

WE OFTEN WONDER!

By LOU SYLVESTER

—and it's not always bills that make it a "worry" as well as petty cash box. Those I.O.U.'s will always turn up when an ambitious, but careful, boss makes his unexpected check-up.

We are informed by Al Zimbalist, who is one of Warner zone manager Harry Kalmine's assistants over in New Jersey, that Clem Murphy, manager of the Branford Theatre, Newark, and his very able coworker, Walter Leach, put over a good publicity stunt on "Blessed Event" a short time ago.

One week prior to opening Murphy arranged to stop the show for half a minute, bring up the lights and have newsboys travel through the aisles distributing miniature "Town Tattlers," a regular exchange accessory on the picture.

While the accompanying photo does not do justice to the very attractive front, it may serve to show that "front page" atmosphere was extensively carried out—reproduction of Winchell's column, flashy newspaper headlines, cutouts, use of Winchell's picture, etc. Newspaper and other advance publicity was stepped up for the occasion.

Murphy's stunt is interesting and we're sure that other Club members will find an opportunity to make use of it. Thanks to Zimbalist for passing it along, and we'll be looking for more news concerning Harry Kalmine's lieutenants over in New Jersey. They're a hard-working crew and always have some extra good tricks up their sleeves.

MADDEN PROMOTED FREE THEATRE AD IN NORFOLK PAPER

Just to let his fellow Club members and friends know that J. J. Madden, manager of the Granby Theatre, Norfolk, Va., hasn't by any means lost his knack of promoting free space, we're recording the fact that he recently secured a two-column by 10-inch deep ad in a Norfolk labor newspaper in return for four pairs of guest tickets.

It's been some little time since we last heard from showman Madden and it's good to learn that he's still hitting the ball. With the new season in full swing we'll be expecting more news from his neck of the country.

HUNTER SCHWARTZ!

A. H. Schwartz, well-known theatre magnate of Brooklyn and Queens, N. Y., and also famous as an exponent of hunting, big game fishing, wrestling, wood-chopping, and a few other strenuous hobbies, recently outpointed a ferocious black bear in the Adirondack jungles adjacent to his mountain lodge.

Pursuing the animal as relentlessly as he ever stalked a choice theatre site, Mr. Schwartz, after a week's exposure to dangerous elements of the country, successfully tracked down Bruin and with a few well-placed running shots emerged the victor over the enraged beast. The hide will adorn the trophy room at the commodious Schwartz estate at Cedarhurst, L. I.

DIDN'T TAKE LOUIS ORLOVE LONG TO GET GRATIS AD IN PAPER

We can see by a newspaper ad that the enterprising Louis Orlove, manager of the Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, has already found his way 'round his newly adopted neighborhood.

In a two-column ad, six inches deep, it was announced that the Modjeska would be host to South Side boys and girls at a big Halloween party, at which time they would have an opportunity to meet Mr. Orlove, the new manager, and participate in various contests for valuable gifts. The ad and five cents was good for admission.

The important part about the ad mentioned above aside from publicity, is that it was given absolutely gratis to Louis, and he doesn't even advertise in the paper. Maybe the fact that Louis hasn't given the boys an ad had something to do with the paper's generosity, or then, again, maybe the editor classed the event as news and decided it was worth some space as an all-around good will builder. Anyway, Louis secured some free advertising. More power to him.

IT TOOK AN ANIMAL PICTURE TO RETURN YOVIN TO HIS CLUB

It's been some little time since we last heard from J. A. Yovin, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Tacony, Pa., and it took "Bring 'Em Back Alive" to awaken him to the fact that his name has been missing from the Club roll calls.

The small photo herewith show a part of a sidewalk display of 15 cages of wild animals, consisting of anything from Indian pheasants to monkeys. The party in the center, wearing the hat, is D. Gatz, Yovin's assistant, who was directly responsible for all the foliage gathered to cover the entire front. Yes, the boys managed to dig up some poison ivy along with the rest of the stuff, which wasn't so comforting. A ballyhoo wagon, attended by two ushers dressed in African hunting costumes, also helped the excellent returns secured on this picture. Some very attractive set pieces, made from three-sheets and hidden in the foliage placed along the sidewalk, lent further atmosphere to the setting. One of the ushers indulged in a few "monkeyshines" to help matters along.

We're mighty glad to get a line on Round Tabler Yovin and his crew again and hope that with the new season in full swing he'll again become the consistent contributor of yore. At any rate, he's started the ball rolling again and that's a good sign. We'll be checking up on him from now on.

DEFEAT THAT DECEMBER SLUMP WITH SOME REAL SHOWMANSHIP!

Here Is a Wide Selection of Business Stimulants to Build Up Box Office Receipts During an Unusually Dull Period!

by JACK JACKSON

FROM Thanksgiving to New Years is always a precarious period in show business. The well known "seasonal spirit," coupled with the display of holiday merchandise and "splurge" advertising by all business houses, create an urge to shop that is a serious menace to box office receipts. This year a general shortage of money makes the situation more acute than ever before and makes it necessary to plan more carefully and execute more thoroughly if we are to successfully counteract the opposing influences and keep our daily receipts from suffering. The job ahead becomes still more exacting due to the necessity of curtailing advertising budgets to a point closely approximating those of June, 1932.

The give-away of turkeys, ducks, geese and chickens has always been a sure fire business builder preceding Christmas. Right now your butchers and chain store dealers are looking for ways and means of encouraging sales for the Christmas period and by contacting them immediately you should be able to promote a number of live turkeys, geese, ducks, etc., in return for a card in your lobby advising your patrons when the awards are to be made and giving the cooperating concern credit for participating. A ballyhoo crate can be erected for display on the sidewalk with a card on give-away. If you are able to promote a perambulating ballyhoo this might also help to build up interest on the nights preceding Christmas. The birds should be given away two days before Christmas to allow time for preparation. A screen trailer of one frame advising the give-away and the cooperation mention can also be given in return for quantity merchandise.

The above idea has many ramifications and can also apply to special complete dinner baskets.

The give-away of a live baby properly advertised in the papers; in your lobby; on your screen and on your theatre front will stimulate no end of interest and should bring banner attendance on the night of the give-away. The live baby, of course, is a pig. You can secure these baby pigs for a very nominal sum from farmers in your community; wholesale meat dealers or from the local butcher, in return for the advertising you are able to give.

For some night before Christmas many houses will find it profitable to stage a pumpkin pie eating contest. A local baker will willingly contribute the pies for stage mention and there are surely dozens of kinds that will enter this contest and compete for awards of passes to your theatre.

In those theatres where lobby space permits, a tie-up with the domestic science class of the high school with prizes for the best plum puddings, pumpkin pies, Christmas cakes, salads, etc., can be conducted with passes to the theatre as awards. This would create no end of comment in the schools from which the entries are secured. On the eve of the prize award the product of the entries should be displayed in the lobby, judges to make their decisions and awards to be made off stage. At the close of the contest the entire display should be sent to some worthy charitable organization and should result in a good newspaper story. The advance publicity and word of mouth advertising you can secure from this stunt, to say nothing of the goodwill among the teachers of the domestic science classes, is only limited by the amount of ingenuity and effort you put into it.

The awarding of 6 to 10 ft. silk penants to the various high school football teams has always resulted in good attendance at theatres participating in this activity. Contact the athletic bodies of the various schools in your town at once and see if you can't arrange for a presentation to each of the schools on separate nights immediately before or after the Christmas period making each night an event for the particular school to whom the award is given. By doing a thorough job of this and getting in touch with leaders of the student body, a committee from the school will be appointed to properly decorate your lobby and stage with pennants and colors. These, of course, to be returned to the owners following the performance. The student body will be glad to put their cheer leaders, the glee club and possibly the school band in your theatre for this event. The athletic group, faculty, band and glee club are to be your guests, the balance of the students to attend at the regular admission or special admission prices.

At this period of the year many high school and junior college classes are planning special parties for the Holiday Season and by contacting the leaders of these groups it is practically certain that these parties will be held at your theatre. Presumably, concessions will have to be made and these concessions should depend on the number to be in attendance. Let them have a real show—let them take your stage for a few minutes, sing their high school or college songs. The enthusiasm generated by such activity is certain to find hearty response with the balance of your audience.

In some instances you will find student bodies anxious to secure funds for some special activity. If these are encountered, discuss with your district manager the advisability of making a special concession on one night of the week and allowing the student body to sell tickets. In the event of entering into this, you must be sure that the student body's sale is cut off two days before the night of the show so as to guarantee that the regular business at your box office will not be hurt. The accounting should be held the night the sale is stopped. All details of activities of this kind should be in writing and properly acknowledged by school authorities.

Amateur reviews recruited from Dancing Schools, Music Teachers, Band Instrument Stores, etc., can also be promoted during this period and should add materially to box office receipts. Again, you must do a thorough job, insist upon rehearsals and surround the show with the best production the facilities of your theatre afford.

The seasonal decoration of your lobby will do much to generate an enthusiastic atmosphere and create interest for Christmas. Corn stalks, autumn foliage, pumpkins, etc., can be had for the asking. Send your ushers out and ornament your lobby appropriately.

Florists are interested in the sale of chrysanthemums and other cut flowers. Tie-ups with the theatre are particularly appropriate. Make it for a full week's display, using the stage and lobby to full advantage.

We are indebted to Jack Jackson, publicity chief of George Walsh's Comerford-Publix Division, for the opportunity of revamping his latest bulletin and presenting it to our many members and readers via the Club pages.

We were greatly impressed by the wide range of activities and suggestions and feel reasonably certain that it will help many a theatre over this dull period.

Some portions had to be rewritten but, on the whole, it still remains the work of Jackson who is well qualified to make sensible suggestions. "CHICK"

HOLIDAY TRAILERS AND SHORTS

To live up to the spirit of the season you will want some appropriate short subjects for the holiday week and, of course, proper trailers with which to greet your patron.

Due to the limited number of prints placed in each exchange, holiday subjects, or any shorts that tie in with Christmas and New Year's, must be dated far in advance. If your booking is handled through another source, get busy and see that they get you set with what you want.

Trailers are necessary and should be secured from whatever company making the type best suited to your type of house and patronage. Most of the trailer companies will be sending out announcements regarding this and will describe in detail the various trailers they are offering. See that you pick the best and have it on hand well in advance of the holidays.

DECEMBER CAN BE PROFITABLE!

The possibilities of a kiddie matinee Christmas morning at regular admission prices is another feature that should not be overlooked. If you can promote pieces of candy, pop corn, etc., do so and watch the dimes come rolling in.

It might be possible to prevail on your staff to contribute their services to a special matinee for orphan children and charity wards for the Saturday succeeding or preceding Christmas, allowing all the inmates of these institutions to see the show without charge. If this is done, contact your Rotary, Kiwanis, Chamber of Commerce and other civic bodies, prevailing on their members to provide auto transportation to and from the theatre. If you can get the proper support in back of this it will result in reams of publicity and generate an abundance of goodwill that could not be secured in any other manner. This activity is particularly applicable to the Christmas period.

The holding of a canned goods matinee with the food stuffs received turned over to charitable organizations is another avenue of securing immeasurable publicity and goodwill.

An immediate canvass should be conducted to encourage merchants, heads of industrial plants, factories, etc., to hold theatre parties for employees on special nights the week preceding Christmas. Practically every employer of labor is anxious to give some little gift to those who comprise the personnel of his establishment. The shortage of money and consequent poor business during the past year makes it almost essential that these business men curtail their Christmas employee awards to a positive minimum and you can be of real service by suggesting a party at your theatre. You can extend to him the privilege of displaying a small banner over the section reserved for his employees calling the attention of other patrons to the fact that this is John Doe's Christmas Party. Followed through thoroughly, this is a sure fire attendance getter for Christmas week and sufficient activity along this line will guarantee adequate patronage at all performances regardless of bookings or attractions. There is one instance on record where 14,000 seats were sold in one week on this plan.

Theatres in the smaller towns can prevail on merchants to put into circulation through the medium of a weekly program distributed to your patronage, a "Stop Early" campaign. The program to make prominent mention of your coming attractions; some movie news and the ads of the cooperating merchants. It might be possible to confine this to one merchant or promote through the Chamber of Commerce for the benefit of the community as a whole. All cost to be absorbed by cooperators.

Contact your larger mercantile establishments on a plan to encourage early shopping, giving the cooperators five to ten passes to be awarded to the first customers in their respective stores each day. These passes to be good for the one day only and the cooperating merchant to reimburse you by purchasing an amount of newspaper display space on your attraction, advertising the give-away to a monetary value equal to that of the passes donated.

Contact a prominent department store to hire a Santa Claus to appear at your theatre every night for two weeks or more before Christmas and donate small give-aways to the children. The cooperating merchant is to be accorded the privilege of a toy display, preferably of a mechanical nature, in your lobby with credit card displayed prominently. To get this over, sell the merchant the idea that a good portion of his potential patrons, particularly the men folks, are working days and the only chance they have to bring the children downtown is at night. You are doing him a real favor in donating him this valuable display space and he should compensate you by making prominent mention of the appearance of his Santa Claus and toy display at your theatre in all his display advertising.

It might be possible to interest the more prominent merchants in buying a quantity of cheap giveaways and staging special show for the kiddies (regular admission to be charged) making mention of the cooperators' generosity from stage when the articles are given away and on a lobby card in advance of the performance.

Theatre tickets as premiums on purchases from various merchants would be particularly appropriate at this time and many merchants can be prevailed upon to buy admission tickets at full price to give to customers buying $5.00 or $10.00 in merchandise from their store. The merchants must properly advertise the cooperation to insure maximum results.

Your Chamber of Commerce or Business Bureau might be prevailed upon to put a live Santa Claus on the streets, visiting stores and presenting small prizes, such as, samples of Beech-nut, samples of Life Savers, samples of Peak chocolates and other merchandise that can be secured gratis from manufacturers to the kiddies. Tie in your theatre by giving a limited number of free admissions for children (when accompanied by adults paying full admission price) for some "off" matinee. Limit the number of admissions from 10 to 50 daily, depending on the size of your house.

Contact the leading bank in your community for a Christmas saving bank tie-up to promote early starting of accounts for the 1933 Christmas fund. This is another sure fire idea. Every bank in the country is anxious to start next year's saving accounts with a bang and will willingly consent to the presentation of checks to your customers good for $1.00—the wording of the check making it necessary for the holder to deposit $1.00 each week for the 51 remaining weeks of the year in order to make the first deposit redeemable. This is a natural—the bank to advertise that all of your patrons are receiving these $1.00 checks.

Special discount cards from merchants to be distributed from your theatre in return for mention of the fact in their newspaper advertising. This has been explained so often that every manager is familiar with the details. Be sure that the discount cards distributed to patrons carry mention of the next coming attraction at your theatre. This to be put on by a small changeable rubber stamp which should be an accessory in every theatre.

The Lions, Kiwanis, Rotary, Elks, Eagles, Moose and other civic and fraternal organizations should be contacted for the purpose of promoting a Christmas party of these organizations at your theatre at regular or special reduced prices. The respective bodies can be prevailed upon to sing their organization songs and engage in the other entertainment that is a part of their regular weekly meetings.

Winter style shows, under the sponsorship of newspapers and merchants with local girls acting as models, are particularly appropriate. The merchants cooperating to donate prizes, buy newspaper advertising space, decorate windows, pay for printing and distribution of heralds, etc., in return for your cooperation.

Winter fur shows can be conducted along the same lines and with the same exactions as listed above.

I am detailing here a Post Office tie-up that was mailed into the field last year. Properly followed through this should bring

NOVELTIES AND TOYS!

"Giveaways" for the kids have never been more useful than this season, if the opinion of many showmen all over the country counts. The information was gleaned from much of the Club's correspondence, in which the managers discuss the value of giving the youngsters some sort of inexpensive toy or novelty. If it ties in with some current picture or serial, all the better.

At this particular time of the year, theatres all over the country are on the lookout for novelties, etc., for the holidays. Each year we receive hundreds of requests for information along these lines and for the use of Club members in need of such aid; we have a complete file of all manufacturers and dealers handling material of this kind.

If you will address your inquiries to Club headquarters, we will be delighted to furnish you with a list of companies where you may be able to secure just what you require at prices within reason. This service is for both members and readers of the Club pages. If not a member of the Club, you are asked to use your theatre's letterhead when writing so that we can guard against catalogue bugs who are generally a source of annoyance in scouting around for this type of literature. Also, please specify your position.

MAKE DECEMBER PAY ITS WAY!

day to day newspaper advertising and excellent cooperation from the Post Office officials who should display cards of attractions at your theatre at the Post Office and on the wagons in return for the cooperation.

Contact your Postmaster, convincing him of the service you can be in cooperating on an "mail early" campaign. Sell him the value of the stars appearing at your theatre as attention compellers and convince him of the influence they have with the people of your city. Then go to your newspaper with the Postmaster's permission and arrange for daily space over the Postmaster's signature.

Your next move should then be to secure a good supply of stars' photos that are posed so as to fit the occasion. The large supply available ought to produce the kind you want.

Prevail on your newspaper to conduct a contest over the Postmaster's signature on "Why I Shop Early," giving twenty-five passes weekly to the best answers. Be sure to secure mention of your program in these stories.

After you have performed this service for the Postmaster it will not be difficult to prevail on him to carry cards on the wagons reading "Shop and mail early" says (name of star) "Now playing at ——— Theatre."

Approach him to place a sub-station in the lobby of your theatre with a government paid attendant to sell stamps and accept parcels for mailing. This will bring many people into your lobby, who might prove patrons to your theatre and if not it will at least afford you the opportunity of selling the coming attractions through your advance frames and other display material.

It might even be possible to prevail on the merchants of your town to put out a printed postcard plugging the show and mail early idea with a line on the bottom, "The ——— Theatre program starts at ——— time (mentioning attractions)." This can be done if the merchant is sold on the value of the theatre as a magnet to draw people to the town as mentioned earlier in this letter. The postmaster will grant the lowest possible postal rates on distribution of this post office propaganda.

Contact your traction company or bus lines prevailing on them to offer free rides home to early shoppers (a card advertising your show to be given by the conductors to all passengers boarding cars between 9 and 12 A. M.). This card good for a free ride home if stamped at your box office before a certain hour of the afternoon).

The promotion of Christmas baskets and live fowl give-aways, such as described under the Thanksgiving heading, is again appropriate and in order.

Amateur reviews are particularly seasonal and will bolster box office receipts if properly produced and staged. Give these reviews some novel name to encourage attendance, such as, "Toytown Follies," "Kris Kringle Kapers" or some other trick name that suggests itself to you.

Christmas carol singers, secured through prominent church officials for appearance Christmas Eve and possibly on evenings earlier than Christmas, would also create interest and encourage patronage that might otherwise be missing at your theatre during this season.

If you are able to promote a "Shop Early" campaign through the Chamber of Commerce, a one frame trailer on your screen would be permissible.

The usual canned goods matinee, food matinees, etc., with the proceeds distributed among charitable organizations is a sure fire newspaper space getter at this time and should be capitalized upon to the utmost.

You might set aside one night each week for the four weeks preceding Christmas when a receptacle could be placed in your lobby to receive donations of food for distribution to the poor and needy. This food to be solicited from adult patrons, paying full admission to your theatre, who are anxious to help out the destitute families of your city. This can be made doubly effective by allowing the newspaper to secure the names and addresses of the needy families who are to be benefited by the gifts. Let this be known as a "Poor Shower" and prevail upon the local editor to make the most of the circulation possibility provided through your cooperation.

A discarded toy matinee offers tremendous possibilities of securing healthy newspaper space and building goodwill if conducted along the following lines:

1. Prevail on the fire chief of your city to issue orders that firemen in their spare time are to mend broken and discarded toys that are collected from the more fortunate youngsters and accepted by theatre as admissions.
2. Secure the cooperation of a paint store to donate paint, nails, etc., necessary to make the repairs.
3. Approach your editor with the complete activity and it should result in plenty of free newspaper space. This should carry over a two weeks' period, setting one day each week for free admissions. Arrangements must be made with the Kiwanis, Rotary, Elks or other organizations for the distribution of the mended toys.

A good newspaper publicity stunt can be promoted through having the Mayor of your city undertake the duty of seeing that destitute persons outside public institutions have one Christmas party at your theatre. Let him name twenty (20) people daily, through the editorial columns of the newspaper, who will be guests of the Mayor at the showing of whatever particular picture is playing your theatre.

We have on record at Club headquarters the name of a Chicago company making 5½-ft. collapsible, tissue paper Santa Claus that is almost life-like in appearance and sell for 90c. each. One of these at either side of the stage or around the lobbies would do a lot to promote seasonable spirit.

Lobby space permitting, a tie-up with a merchant for the service of hot coffee and cake, with them paying for the salary of girls, cost of all merchandise, cups, etc., is appropriate.

Again, if lobby space permits, institute a parcel checking service and carry proper mention in your newspaper ads, programs, etc.

Be sure that your lobby has a Christmas tree properly decorated. This is to be promoted from the merchant cooperating on the toy display. You might use a large Christmas tree to further encourage the give-away of major food prizes by putting a large question mark above the tree—"What will you get for Christmas?"—"Gifts awarded every Tuesday and Friday nights." If your theatre goes in for the Thrift or Script Book idea, or any other form of ticket book sales, you can include such ac-

MAKE THIS A REAL CHRISTMAS

Food—Clothes—Toys—For the Poor Kiddies

Don't tell us that you're gonna forget all those poor kiddies in your town this year. Impossible. They're counting on you more than ever to put across that special morning show. You know the kind we mean: the admission price being a can of beans, soup, toys, old garments or anything else for that matter.

Make this the sort of Christmas that the poor youngsters ought to have. Perhaps you are promoter enough to get a couple of hundred baskets of various foods to be distributed via the newspaper and local welfare organizations among the poor.

But, whatever the particular slant you want to inject, DO SOMETHING. Don't let this Christmas roll by without some help sponsored by you and your theatre with the local paper and all organizations and merchants lined up solidly behind you.

The most popular, and certainly most appreciated idea, is the Children's Food Matinee or special adult midnight show. In this way you can be sure of plenty of foodstuff to make up the baskets for distribution the day before Christmas. Anything in the line of food should be the admission, without any limit as to the amount any one person may donate for his or her admission. Potatoes, canned goods, a pound or two of sugar, any vegetable or fruit—in fact, anything they will give, so long as it's fresh and will help achieve your purpose. Selling the newspaper to help publicize a show of this sort ought to be a cinch in the toughest spot on earth; they all soften up for a gag of this kind.

Get busy. Not too much time left for speculation. Set the date and start the news a-circulating around the town.

GET DECEMBER OUT OF THE RED!

tivity any mention here too. Then on the tree a reproduction of a ham lettered—"You might get a ham from Brown's"; reproduction of a pair of shoes lettered—"You might get a pair of shoes from Smith's," etc. The ramifications of this idea are myriad—see how far you can go with it. If advisable put it on twice a week for four weeks.

Those operations fortunate enough to be located in towns where radio stations exist should make particular effort to get free time on the air. This can be done in many ways, but probably the most effective is a contest for children, fifty (50) words maximum, on "Why I believe in Santa Claus." The first five or ten letters received each day at the station could be rewarded with passes to see an attraction at your theatre. Make sure that in announcing the contest the station attendant makes reference to the particular attraction playing your house at the time the announcement is made.

Another good radio contest might be worked through having the radio station play records of song numbers that have been featured in pictures that have played your theatre, offering prizes to the listeners who send in the closest correct list of stars and attractions in which the song was featured. A limited number of passes to be used as prizes. Many other ideas that will tie into radio exploitation will suggest themselves to you. Get busy—don't overlook this valuable medium of patron approach.

During the week, Christmas to New Years, the holiday spirit is at its peak. The youngsters are out of school and your entire community is enthusiastically looking over entertainment. To make your house a natural mecca of these pleasure seekers, you can engage in many appropriate activities, particularly Gold Nights. After the preholiday buying spree, every merchant will be on their toes to keep up the momentum through the succeeding week. A few dollars in cash to be given away on Gold Nights in return for lobby display and stage mention is a valuable method of reaching potential customers. Sell them on the notion and have one or two Gold Nights during the week.

This is also an excellent time to hold old fiddlers' contest, square dances and other forms of stage entertainment that appeal to the middle aged and elderly persons who are living again the days of their youth this one week out of the entire year.

Don't overlook the possibility of special kiddie matinees during this week. They should add materially to your box office receipts.

Practically all houses will find it profitable to hold New Year's Eve midnight shows. Discuss this possibility with your immediate superior first and then make your plans for a "Hello 1933" show or a "Happy New Year Frolic." Watch parties are quite the thing on New Year's Eve, and if you build up an appropriate entertainment and advertise it sufficiently in advance through the many mediums at your disposal, you will be able to hang out the SRO sign on this night. Arrange a set of cow bells, siren horns, etc., to be blown and rang as the old year passes. Secure the services of an amateur pianist to play "Auld Lang Syne" or other appropriate airs for five minutes before midnight and continue five minutes after. Amateur performers, song festo, etc., are particularly in keeping with the evening's hilarity. You might be able to prevail on some of your town merchants to participate in the give-away of novelties to be passed out to patrons attending this show. If you can't promote these novelties, discuss with your District Manager the possibility of a nominal expenditure for this purpose.

THIS IS IMPORTANT—During the pre-Christmas season, every commercial establishment in your city will be buying big newspaper ads, a privilege denied you because of your restricted budget. This means that the biggest ad you can take will be practically smothered unless you are able to secure position on some page denied commercial advertisers. For this reason, it is advisable that you curtail your newspaper advertising to a minimum, making every word of your copy count as a compelling thought to demand patronage to your box office. On the other hand, the crowds on the streets doing their annual shopping make this season of the year a natural for distinctive ballyhoos. Convert some of your newspaper advertising savings into this latter type of activity but be sure that whatever you plan is sufficiently distinctive and impressive to command interest and create a desire to see the attraction playing your theatre.

It might be advisable to secure a one or two frame trailer to precede the presentation of your coming attraction trailer. This also to be seasonal with copy such as, "regardless of what you might get for Christmas, nothing will give you the consummate amount of joy that will be yours if you bring your family or friends to see—(follow with sound trailer)".

Begin now building interest in your December shows with appropriate lobby displays. Those houses having Art Shops can erect a big Santa Claus with a sack bearing the inscription—"OUR CHRISTMAS GIFT OF SHOWS FOR YOU," allowing space for the inset of card copy carrying the names of various shows coming to your theatre. These to be changed as the attractions complete their engagement.

The promotion of major Christmas giveaways throughout the month of December, such as, radios, electric washers, automobiles, sets of silver, diamond rings, etc., should be a recurring weekly feature to encourage attendance.

The possibilities of a "Welcome Santa" party are as myriad as your mind can concieve. You might be able to interest several merchants in sending their Santa Claus representatives to a party to be held on your stage Christmas Eve for adults or some morning immediately preceding Christmas for the kiddies, each to contribute a number of prizes to be given to those in attendance. Take care you produce this to best advantage in order to guarantee the ultimate in receipts.

Be sure to capitalize on the seasonal spirit in catch lines of your ad copy, such as, "You have 22 more shopping days until Christmas but only 2 more days to see this wonderful picture"—"You'll be missing Santa's biggest gift" if you don't see ——— (picture). Santa Claus himself couldn't have brought you a more appropriate holiday gift than ———." There are many others of these. Let your mind run at random.

Watch your titles with a view of placing appropriate catch copy that will capitalize on the tremendous amount of "seasonal spirit" generated by the holiday phrases being run in the display ads of commercial establishments.

In addition to the many suggestions contained in this article we also direct your attention to your tickler file of past activity of this sort which has been published in previous years in the Club section. If you faithfully file each week's issue and keep your six months' index right at hand from the last two years, you will find as many or more ideas as contained in this particular series of December Business Building articles.

Smart showmen will always file away, for future years, the best ideas successfully engineered. These tried and proven gags can then be dug up, slightly changed and brought up to date and then put to use again.

It is suggested you select from this bulletin the ideas applicable to your operation; prepare detailed plans of execution considered most effective for your community; call a meeting of your entire staff and acquaint them with the purposes of the drive; detail to such responsible members of your organization the duties you believe they can successfully fulfill and then follow through with a nightly check-up of accomplishment. You, yourself, will have to accept the burden of generalship and principal contact man, but, by properly enthusing your staff and properly organizing your effort, you will be able to accomplish much more than would be possible through your unassisted personal effort. Be sure that every member of your staff is enthusiastic over the product that will play your theatre during this month and that they become so imbued with the desire to help put it over that their every topic of conversation will be concerning your theatre and its coming attractions. HENDRICKSON TELLS US HE'S EATEN THE WOLF AT THE DOOR

"The wolf that has been hanging around the door is under full control and preparations have been made to let the animal inside so that he can be eaten," advises George B. Hendrickson, operator at the Liberty Theatre, Darlington, S. C. Following are a few notes on how this much advertised marauder was made to hang his tail between his legs:

We'd like to reproduce a combination cutout and electric sign used for both day and night selling of "First Year," but the snap shot carries too much detail to mean anything when made into a half-tone. At any rate, as Hendrickson points out, it was arranged on "depression basis" by purchasing of a regular, stock 24-sheet, a gratis trailer tie-up with a local lumber concern for beaverboard and all extra lamps and sockets were chiseled out of a local contractor who had just dismantled a big electric sign by giving him a two-week pass. Actual cost was confined to the paper. Large cutout figures of Farrell and Gaynor and the title in lights combined to produce a most artistic marquee display.

Send Clear Photos!

A couple more snap shots of a "Scarface" sign, taken at night time, likewise will not do justice through reproduction. In this instance lights were again worked into cutout title letters over a skyscraper background taken from regular block 24-sheet stand. In the upper left hand corner was a large head of Dvorak; down the entire side was Muni's face; and the city effect was made with a cutawl. Again, a la depression basis, the lamps and sockets were salvaged from a dismantled electric sign for next to no expense, and again the lumber firm contributed the beaverboard in return for trailer advertising. Actual cost of the display was $2.40 cash for the 24-sheet, plus a little energy on the part of Hendrickson.

Like many other theatre operators during the past season, Hendrickson resorted to give-away stunts as a means of boosting box office trade. His method of handling the award of a radio by tying up with the local Coca Cola bottling works to cover entire cost, was certainly a neat piece of work. He wanted wide distribution of the special tickets and found that the bottling concern distributed 20,000 bottles every two weeks, covering every cross road filling station in the county. It was estimated that printing of the tickets and wholesale cost of radio would be $50, hence EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS for distribution of the tickets were sold to the Coca Cola outfit. In addition to describing the give-away, copy on tickets stated that a free ticket would be given with each bottle of the beverage. The radio was placed on display in the lobby during the two week period the tickets were given distribution.

With a program picture set for date of give-away the gross receipts exceeded any business done in seven months, a period which included a cooking school tie-up for give-away of a G. E. range worth three times what the radio retailed for. The excellent results are directly attributed to the wide distribution given the tickets by the bottling concern, which financed the entire cost of the stunt.

It seems to us there are a number of valuable suggestions in the above for making attractive displays and putting over stunts on what is practically a costless basis. Electric signs are always being dismantled and most any town boasts a bottling concern. Looks as though it will pay to contact both the fellows in charge. Thanks to Hendrickson for shooting his ideas along and here's hoping his particular "wolf" made an appetizing meal. We'll be looking for further news from Darlington.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Here is another timely football poster idea from Will Wills of Utica, New York, where he handles the art work for the Warner houses. These life-sized posters can be painted on compo-board and cut around for snappy looking cutouts on top of the marquee or for a lobby display to tie in with the current football season.

For some definite football picture it can serve as the center of the display or poster with appropriate copy for the picture itself worked around it. You will also find that this illustration will reproduce via your Bal-optican machine. Qnite a few of our contributing artists have sent word that they are making use of most of the displays and posters carried in the Club section.

Thanks, Will, for this as well as the other fine posters you sent along. We'll use them in early issue sandwiched in between the contributions of some of the other boys. And while on the subject of other contributors we must not fail to say that we have some mighty fine poster and display work which will be forthcoming real soon in this series. Watch for them, you artists, and we promise you'll find some good suggestions in them.

SPENCER SOLD LOCAL EDITOR AN IDEA THAT PRODUCED FREE SPACE

We recently had occasion to look over a five-column ad in a six-column newspaper published up in the country where C. T. Spencer, manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, holds forth, and noted that this big display was obtained without any cost to the theatre.

Our first thought was, "how the devil did Spencer ever get away with such a lot of free space"; however, on reading further along in his letter the facts came out. For some time he has been exchanging a few passes with the publisher for small ad space and recently contacted him with the idea of getting up some cooperative ads. The publisher took this up with the merchants and found them cold to the proposition, but out of this move grew an idea that if the theatre splurged with big displays from time to time perhaps the merchants might catch the fever and be induced to do likewise.

The experiment has been tried out in two papers with a weekly circulation of 12,000 and the last time Spencer was in touch with the publisher he heard that results had been satisfactory and was asked to continue the ads. C. T. says of course he's satisfied, and who wouldn't be, with monster ads that don't cost anything but four passes per copy!

Other stunts have engaged his attention of late, such as the old, familiar "Dresserware" night. Starting this about eight weeks ago, Spencer thought that 1,000 pieces would fill the bill. He was all wong, for the give-away steadily increased until at present he's handling over 1,800 pieces in two nights. He had to add a night since it was impossible to handle patrons in one evening.

The Tivoli is a downtown house, but off the main stem. With Dresserware on the two nights of the last half that portion of the week has been made to pay. For the first half he's using the good old hokum Amateur Night (Friday opening) and it's been going great guns, so everything's hotsy-totsy.

Spencer's deal with the newspaper publisher was certainly a smart one and garnered some corking ads at no cost except a few passes. Club members doing business with weekly newspapers, or others, are herewith given his tip and it's one that might work out to mutual advantage. It's good news to know he's getting along so nicely and we'll be looking for more news from this Round Tabler.

As a last minute thought, Spencer, how about a few good photos of your front, lobby, etc. We would like to show more Canadian showmanship activities and perhaps your fine material will prompt some more of the old reliables to come through.

NOVELTY

Long Tack Sam and Co.
San Francisco Warfield

There is but one Long Tack Sam and he seems a reincarnation of Barnum, Hermann the Great and Houdini, so clever is he with hokum and skill. Assisted by his two beautiful daughters, Nee-Sa and Mi-na, and a well-picked company, he puts on a great act. He begins by burning a ribbon in two and making it intact again by a wave of a wand, and by seemingly producing bowls of goldfish out of the ether. Possibly, his most clever trick is with a four-room doll house. He opens this on several occasions and each time the doll is found to have grown. The last time it is opened, out steps one of his grown daughters, who seems larger than the doll house itself. The girls sing and dance, an American Indian number being especially effective. Paul Mall, a Jewish Mandarin, unlimbers a line of loose patter and sings a lengthy song made up of song titles. There is much acrobatic work, juggling, spear twirling, and the like, and the act ends with some remarkable work on the horizontal bar by four Oriental artists. The act is called "Shanghai."

Keith Clark
New York Roxy

Clark, a magician, whose dexterous manipulation of lighted cigarets makes them appear from nowhere and disappear nowhere, gains an enthusiastic response from this audience. He is featured in one scene, and closes the show with entertaining feats of magic with silk scarfs.—E. D.

Dalton and Rose
Buffalo Hippodrome

Besides doing the regulation breath-taking maneuvers on skates, this pair introduced a flock of stooges for comedy that brought gales of laughter. First were two small boys whom the pair whirled about until they were dizzy. Dalton then twirled a man heavier than himself, and ended up with a woman who was no less than obese.

Valentine Vox and Helen Royce
Baltimore Century

Some highly intricate work is done in this act, Vox with a male dummy in sailor suit, woman with girl and baby dummies. The dialogue was skillfully written and gets plenty response in applause and laughs. Vox sings a duet with the dummy.

Al Mamaux
Buffalo Hippodrome

The astute manager and iron man pitcher of the world's champion Newark Bears of the International baseball league looks like anything but a professional ball player in his trim tuxedo, and sings popular and topical songs in a more than acceptable baritone voice. Al and Billy Griffin, his pianist, also indulge in a bit of repartee that pleased. Popular in Buffalo. Mamaux got a great hand.

Clark Heads Music Subsidiaries for Warner Brothers

Personally appointed by Harry M. Warner, president, as the exclusive contact between himself and the Warner music subsidiaries, Walter Clark, formerly with Victor Phonograph Company, is busily engaged in tackling his new duties.

Mr. Warner has appointed Mr. Clark supervisory head of all the corporation's music publishing interests, namely, M. Witmark & Sons, Remick Music Corporation, Harms, Inc., and Famous Music, a half interest.

Edward "Buddy" Morris retains the title of vice-president and general manager of Music Publishers Holding Corporation, which represents this group, and under the new arrangement will confine his activities to the publishing and selling operations of Witmark and Remick, while Henry Spitzer continues as general manager of Harms, both reporting to Mr. Clark only on matters pertaining directly to policy.

Miss Etting to Make Feature

Ruth Etting, who has made a series of Vitaphone short subjects, will make a feature picture before renewing her present radio contract. The singer will leave for Hollywood about January 1, the date of the end of her agreement with radio sponsors.

Ranger Clubs Form Orchestra

COMEDY

Ross and Edwards
New York Palace

These two young fellows give the audience a routine of smart chatter, singing, dancing and laughable comedy. They both possess above the average voices and make good use of them, though the patrons might have enjoyed one more vocal number and one or two fewer gags. Eddie Edwards' recitation bit, in which Harry Rose interrupts with a hot number on his uke, gets plenty of laughs and it is put over in a showmanly manner. To the accompaniment of Ross' uke, Edwards closes with a good tap routine, to good applause.—E. D.

New York Academy of Music

Jack Pillard and Al Hillier, assisted by Lynn Mayberry, offer 17 minutes of comedy with only one or two minutes in which the pace slackens. Pillard does straight for the "mugging" of Hiller! Miss Marberry, a comely miss, surprises the audience with a tough characterization that met with distinct approval. Hillier's voice inflection had the house in an uproar and the whistling bit which they used for closing brought down the house.—E. D.

SINGERS

Nick Lucas
New York Palace

Nick Lucas, the crooning troubadour, with his guitar, opens with vocals of "All-American Girl" and "Say It Isn't So," earning a handy reception. An audience request to sing "Tip-toe Through the Tulips," which he introduced in "Gold Diggers of Broadway," is followed by an instrumental medley, with a vocal chorus of "Masquerade," proving an ace finale. Audience reaction was strongly favorable.—H. P.

Buddy Rich
Boston RKO

Buddy "Taps" Rich first wins his audience with his singing, then with his dancing, and winds up as a drummer of far more than customary ability. Most of the applause was reserved for him.

Trilling Succeeds Kemp

Stephen B. Trilling has been named to succeed Harold Kemp, recently resigned as head of the Warner Artists' Bureau. Mr. Trilling was assistant to Mr. Kemp, who has become assistant to George Engel, in charge of the artists' bureau of National Broadcasting Company.

Roxy Returns to Air

S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) and His Gang have returned to the air via a national NBC-WJZ network every Sunday. The programs emanate from the new Roxy theatre in Radio City, New York.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL

Hal LeRoy & Band (14)
New York Palace

The famous dancing star of the "Follies" now has his own band and it is a good one. Hal leads them in all numbers and gives a good account of himself. The turn opens with a special number, peppily led by Hal, who sings a special introductory song about each instrument in the band. LeRoy introduces Nina and Rosa, who assist him in a soft-shoe rhythm routine. The girls added only cuteness to Hal's superb dancing, but that in itself is quite sufficient. The band follows with a good rendition of "China Boy," with Hal leading not only with the stick but with his rhythmic dancing. The act closes with another good rendition, this time of the old favorite, "Dinah." The first chorus is played instrumentally, with a flash dance by Hal and a vocal harmony chorus by the girls closing.

Cab Calloway and Cotton Club Revue
New York Capitol

The entire stage show this week is a miniature "darky" show rhythmized from start to finish by Calloway's typically Harlem routines. The show is chockful of talented dancers, including tap, novelty, coocher, eccentric and pony chorus, maintaining a rapid fire of entertainment, with Aida Ward offering the vocal bright spot. The show reaches the high spots at the musical sketches, "Calloway for President" and "The Trial of Minnie the Moocher." Fast and pleasing.—H. P.

SONG AND DANCE

Vanessi and the Three Bitlmore Boys
Baltimore Hippodrome

The act is done in three settings. First is a garden with boys singing, one with guitar, Vanessi singing and all going into a musical dance, as the boys do "You're the One." Three boys then appear in song "For There Are Good Times Coming." Next they sing "My Rainbow" and Vanessi does a rainbow dance. The three boys sing "I've Gotta Have Jig Time" and tap-dance. For finale Vanessi performs a Rhumba dance with a special song.

Sees Music More Important In Stage and Screen Drama

The time is not far distant when music will play an important part in both stage and screen drama, in the opinion of William Anthony McGuire, former Broadway playwright, now author and scenarist in Hollywood.

"Rhythm is a part of nature, and there is at least a trace of it in all of us," said Mr. McGuire. "It is my conviction that it is all that is now needed to make drama perfect." Mr. McGuire recently signed a long term contract with Universal.

SKETCH

Kenneth Harlan, Al St. John and Nancy Cornelius
Baltimore Hippodrome

The two screen players received an opening hand and Miss Cornelius, good looking, puts an added punch into the act from the time she is called from the audience. The skit is called "A Love Lesson," and Harlan, aided by Miss Cornelius, attempts to show St. John how he should make love to win her. The comedy kept the audience in high glee and it finished strong.

DANCERS

Ralph Olsen
Buffalo Hippodrome

This diminutive but adroit showman, a double-jointed dancer who performs seemingly impossible feats with ease, is capably assisted by Muriel D'Or, comely brunette, and Jeanne Jarrol, shapely blonde. Sets and costuming helped to win a handsome applause verdict.

Long and Short
San Francisco Warfield

These two live up to their stage name and offer a wide variety of steps. Possibly the most comical of their offerings is a turn in which Short imitates a simian, suggesting that the man may not be so far from the ape family after all. They also amuse with a nautical dance.

Mack Leaves Denver House

Ted Mack has been engaged with his orchestra to open a new night club in Fort Worth, Texas.

DANCERS

Jack Randall and Company (5)
Baltimore Hippodrome

In a specialty setting of pirate ship with moving cloud effect on backdrop and red flare at finish, this is a good adagio dancing act. Two girls and three men offer novelty with a flashing sword duel in adagio movements, some dangerous and difficult.

Noreen
Boston RKO

With her artificially darkened skin, this loose limbed acrobatic dancer presented the patrons with some contortion work which was as marvelous as her pace was fast. "None we have seen has done better" is the unanimous verdict of Boston critics.

Jean Devereaux
Detroit Michigan

Miss Devereaux dances with a lightness and grace that easily place her among the most talented toe dancers of the day. Her number, delightfully performed to the melodious strains of "The Blue Danube Waltz," stirred a laconic audience into vociferous applause.

Gordon, Reed and King
Buffalo Buffalo

Fast pace and rapid shifting from individual solos to unison stepping, plus the novelty of their playing musical instruments during part of the performance, won these three young men a good hand.

THE OFFICIAL CUSTOMER

REGARDLESS of the ultimate fate of the much-discussed uniform contract for film rentals, the labours of its making and promulgation will not be lost. It is a part of the very considerable number of manifestations which in this season of ordeals have made exhibitor and distributor alike conscious of a mutuality of interest. What with one thing and another, and more particularly that process which has just recently been labelled "decentralization," it seems evident enough that the exhibitor has regained quite a large portion of his earlier kudos in this chameleon industry. Once again, after considerable dalliance directly with the public, the motion picture industry today, in this late autumn of 1932, believes that the exhibitor is the official customer.

RKO'S AUTOGRAPH ALBUM

WHILE various legal diplomacies and exchanges of stock issues are about to attenuate legally RKO's scenic background of association with the great name of the mighty General Electric Company, comes acquisition of at least a bit of the remote aroma of the imposing name of Rockefeller. The General, a giant concerned with turbo-generators and thousand-ton machine projects around the world, came intricately into the business of this nebulous shadow-and-sound world of Broadway through the Radio Corporation of America and that whimsical vacuum known as the photo-electric cell. Rockefeller is implied by the Metropolitan Square Corporation, lessor of what is also called Radio City, and it comes in through receiving 100,000 shares of RKO stock as a consideration in a deal which reduces the space to be occupied by the picture concern.

ROBERT M. EASTMAN

THIS hard year of 1932 has seen the passing of more of the early figures of the world of the motion picture than any since the beginning. Now we have come to the recording of the death of Mr. Robert M. Eastman, last week, at his home in Chicago. With him the motion picture has lost one of its first and most constructive friends. He had from the dawn of the art an enthusiastic interest, and it was due to that interest that in 1914 the W. F. Hall Printing Company, with which Mr. Eastman was identified, took up struggling little Photoplay Magazine and launched it on an important career under the editorship of the late James R. Quirk. In those days Miss Kathryn Dougherty, now in charge of the magazine, was the pretty little girl about the office who always wanted red on the covers.

It was Mr. Eastman's interest, too, poured out across a dinner table one autumn Sunday afternoon up the Hudson at Arrow Head Inn, that led to the writing of "The Romantic History of the Motion Picture" in serial form for Photoplay by Terry Ramsaye, thereby starting the line of research which resulted in his "A Million and One Nights."

HITS AND MISSES

NOW that the returns are all in with the figures available for the toying pencil, we discover within the 1931-32 season the production guesses of the Broadway stage were verified at the box office for 34 per cent of the musical shows and for 14 per cent of the dramas. The evidences available indicate that the amusement buying public decided to spend what it was going to spend on hits only. There was no middle ground of productions with just fair records. They were bull's-eyes or misses. This, while true enough of 176 stage efforts, could never be found in such sharp cut pattern in the motion picture output. The motion picture must, and always will, have a large percentage of productions that are "just fair."

MOVIES, MUSTARD & COSMOS

JUST a common yellow flowering weed which grows in every pasture, wild mustard, means everything to our august industry. If there had been no mustard there might have been no movies. It happens thus: the cow eats the mustard and from her internal economy gelatine is produced, then to the gelatine are added certain salts of silver and we have photographic emulsion. The mustard contributes chemical components which give the silver its special sensitivity to light, empowering the photographic reaction. All this has been brought to light by the research laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company under the scientific ministrations of Dr. C. E. K. Mees. Through the attentions of Dr. Mees, and Mr. W. G. Stuber, now president of the company and known about the works as "an emulsion man," the photographic materials from Rochester have down the years progressively increased the scope and powers of the motion picture camera. Incidentally too, what with the contented cows, etc., the Eastman product has considerably increased the size of the visible universe. The same or kindred emulsions on photographic plates have extended the reach of the observers' telescope by many thousand light years. An astronomer has remarked that the recent increase in sensitivity of Eastman emulsions has brought to us as much new stellar space as would have been revealed by doubling the size of the telescopes. Here indeed the motion picture has a kinship with the biggest business there is, the cosmos.

ALLIED AND MPTOA DEADLOCKED; FATE OF PLAN HINGES ON NEW YORK

Allied Decision to Drop Legislation Drive Called Probable If Distributors Adopt Proposals as Lightman Predicts

The "mental merger" of Allied States Association and Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is finally at an end. Allied's leaders declared to continue with a campaign for federal regulation. Their decision took the form of a regulation passed at a joint mass meeting in Chicago, which the MPTOA charged was "stacked" with local owners, exchangemen and equipment dealers who were supposed to represent a cross section of the nation's exhibitors. Vitriolic passages were hurled by both sides as each decided that a harmonious adjustment of their widely divergent policies was out of the question, at least for the present. The meeting ended in a deadlock Tuesday afternoon.

It all happened over failure of distributors to immediately put through adoption of Sidney R. Kent's proposals for correcting ills of the industry. M. A. Lightman of MPTOA said later, in New York, that he was confident that distributors would soon take favorable action on the plan, possibly before the week-end. If they do, Allied, it was held, would probably abandon its legislative campaign. Abram F. Myers, chairman of the Allied board, said on Wednesday that if Fox, Paramount, Warners, RKO and MGM approved the Kent pact, "what matters, then, the action taken at Chicago?" Participation of other companies would be helpful, but is not vital, he said.

Fred Wehrenberg, an MPTOA official of St. Louis, accompanied Mr. Lightman on a hurried trip from Chicago to New York, arriving Wednesday, to confer with distributors, individually, in an effort to obtain their adoption in time for presentation to a second mass meeting Thursday afternoon at the Park Central hotel in New York.

In the meantime, Paramount indicated that its approval would be forthcoming if the plank to regulate the number of short subjects sold with features were eliminated. This is Universal's principal objection and the only objection voiced by Educational-World Wide. Acting independently of Allied, delegates of the MPTOA voted in Chicago on Monday to withdraw this provision and it is now expected that distributor approval of the entire plan will be forthcoming more speedily.

It was learned this week that Mr. Kent had assured Mr. Lightman of distributor approval of the plan in a telephone conversation to Chicago on Sunday night, even before Allied acted for federal legislation.

One of the principal reasons set forth why distributors have not acted sooner is that they desire to study further the proposed uniform exhibition contract, which is part of the plan. Since the Kent proposals include a form of arbitration and a national appeal board, some distributors, principally Paramount, hold that because the contract is offered as an alternative to existing individual company agreements, the arbitration system would be applicable only to disputes involving uniform contract signers, whereas exhibitors using the company forms would not be subject to voluntary arbitration. This angle was overlooked when Mr. Kent and an Allied-MPTOA sub-committe drafted the proposals a few weeks ago, although it is understood Mr. Kent said privately Wednesday that the problem is of extreme importance and should be adjusted. Further meetings with Mr. Kent are expected to iron out the situation.

Fox is already a signatory to the pact. The short subject objection of Educational and World Wide has been removed, and minor objections of Universal were being ironed out late Wednesday night. Those of Paramount were to be discussed Thursday morning for immediate adjustment and a conference was scheduled with MGM officials later in the day, at which it was expected that an agreement would be reached.

Warner Brothers has not been heard from, which leaves Columbia and United Artists the only two known to be definitely committed against the plan.

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution of RKO, announced Wednesday that his company was in sympathy with the proposals. Before definitely accepting them, however, Mr. Depinet said, RKO would like to discuss with representatives of the exhibitors certain of the proposed functions of the national appeal board and certain parts of the proposed uniform contract.

MPTOA will continue with its efforts to have the proposals enacted. Mr. Lightman, Mr. Wehrenberg and others of the 55 MPTOA delegates on hand at Chicago were militant over Allied's Chicago procedure. Mr. Lightman said that the various state and city affiliates which his delegates represented are all in favor of the Kent proposals.

Questioned regarding a reconciliation between the organizations, Mr. Lightman said later that "there's not a Chinaman's chance of reconciliation. They have made the gap so wide as to be irreconcilable."

Mr. Lightman said that MPTOA feels that Mr. Kent was not "let down" by distributors who have not yet acted on the proposals; and that the distributors had not double-crossed him.

In this connection, Mr. Myers said in New York that "it was a shame that Mr. Kent's people walked out on him."

The Lightman association believes that the distributors are probably justified in requesting further time for a study of the contract and other parts of the plan, also that they are equally within their rights in asking for certain modifications to make the plan adaptable to their general corporate policies.

Mr. Kent will not attend the exhibitors' meeting Thursday. He said that he does not propose to attempt to influence the situation any further in that direction. Despite personal protestations by Mr. Steffes against Mr. Kent, the Chicago convention included in its resolution commendation "for his efforts to improve conditions in the motion picture business." The resolution, which appears elsewhere in full, declared specifically for adoption of Senate Bill No. 170, which would investigate practices in the business, and for the introduction and passage in Congress of the measure framed by the joint committee in Chicago, September 30.

Mr. Myers indicated before leaving Chicago that he believed that cooperation in the business is better than a fight, but he insisted that the five companies previously mentioned must agree to make the contract effective. He said there must be no compromise on this if Allied is to drop the federal legislation campaign, nor will "stalling" by the companies be acceptable.

"The distributors have again walked out as they did on the old 5-5-5 pact," said Mr. Myers upon his arrival in New York. "There was no plan submitted to the Chicago conference, and therefore we don't feel that Allied turned one down. We had no alternative but to declare for federal legislation. It is true that a few exhibitore extolled the merits of a plan, but we have no assurance from the distributors, except Fox, that they

RESOLUTION PASSED AT CHICAGO

Urges Concentration on Bill For Federal Film Regulation

Complete text of the resolution passed at the Chicago mass meeting of exhibitors on Tuesday, follows:

WHEREAS, a joint committee of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors and Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, meeting in Chicago on September 20, 1932, unanimously agreed on a legislative campaign as the only means of obtaining relief from block booking, exclusive selling, unreasonable protection, and other abuses of the motion picture business; and

WHEREAS, thereafter a sub-committee of the joint committee of the Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America met with President Kent of the Fox Film Corporation, at his invitation, for a discussion of pressing industry problems; and

WHEREAS, the members of said sub-committee worked out with Mr. Kent a plan for the establishment of a National Appeal Board for the reconciliation of industry differences, for a new form of optional exhibition contract, and for other reforms in industry practice; and

WHEREAS, at the suggestion of Mr. Kent the plan so evolved was submitted by members of the sub-committee to the several national distributors of motion pictures with the request that they notify the presidents of Allied and MPTOA whether they would be willing to adopt and observe said plan for a period of three years beginning January 1, 1933; and

WHEREAS, the distributors were requested to notify the presidents of Allied and MPTOA of their position by November 19, 1932, so that said information might be communicated to the theatre owners at the mass meetings in Chicago on November 28 and in New York on December 1; and

Says Only Fox Indorsed Plan

WHEREAS, of the several distributors to which the plan was submitted, only one, the Fox Film Corporation, has indicated that it is willing to put the plan into operation, as requested; and

WHEREAS, two distributors, United Artists Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, have advised Allied and MPTOA that they will not adopt or observe said plan, the former citing as its reason that the plan might be held to constitute "concerted action" in the event that litigation should arise under it; and

WHEREAS, two distributors, namely, Paramount-Publix Corporation and Warner Brothers have advised the two exhibitor organizations that they cannot arrive at a conclusion concerning said plan in time to submit the result to said mass meetings, without giving any indication when such information would be forthcoming; and

WHEREAS, another distributor, Universal Pictures Corporation, has indicated dissatisfaction with certain features of the proposed National Appeal Board and of the proposed contract and has evinced a desire to negotiate separately for changes applicable only to that company; and

WHEREAS, another distributor, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures, has indicated that it could not use the optional form of contract without expanding the schedule to accommodate that company's sales policies and, further, that it will have to give the matter further study before making positive commitments; and

WHEREAS, the remaining distributors, namely, RKO Distributing Corporation, First Division Pictures, Monogram Pictures and Majestic Pictures have made no acknowledgment of the plan sent them, and have given no indication of their position thereon; and

WHEREAS, ample time has elapsed since the plan was submitted to the several distributors in which to consider the reforms proposed and to reach a definite conclusion; and

WHEREAS, the delay involved, unaccompanied by any assurances as to when, if ever, said distributors will reach a determination, if acquiesced in by the exhibitors, will have the effect to stay necessary action by the exhibitors to obtain relief from Congress until it is too late, thus leaving them at the mercy of said distributors in the matter of obtaining relief from unfair and oppressive practices: and

WHEREAS, as shown by numerous court decisions, the distributors have not hesitated to act in concert in matters which have resulted in oppressing the theatre owners and restraining trade; and

WHEREAS, the plan submitted by the sub-committee was calculated to and would have the effect of relieving the theatre owners of some of the unfair practices saddled on them by the distributors and of lifting some of the resulting burdens on and restraints of trade and commerce; and

Ask Federal Legislation

WHEREAS, the theatre owners of the United States have exhausted all their resources and patience in an effort to persuade the distributors to abandon their policy of rule or ruin and to cooperate in a broad gauged plan to stabilize the industry on a basis of mutual confidence and fair dealing; and

WHEREAS, the selfish and unreasoning attitude of the distributors, and their obvious efforts to divert the theatre owners from seeking relief elsewhere, leave no alternative but to lay the facts before the public and legislative assemblies to the end that relief may be speedily obtained by the enactment of appropriate legislation; and

WHEREAS, the public in general and the religious, civic and welfare organizations in particular have a deep interest in the reforms in industry practice demanded by the independent exhibitors, more especially—

(a) In abolishing block booking which results in the forced showing of inappropriate and improper pictures;

(b) In ending exclusive selling which results in denial of the right of a large part of the public to see meritorious pictures;

(c) In outlawing unreasonable protection which results in withholding pictures for unreasonable periods of time from neighborhood and small-town houses; and

(d) In terminating the regulation of admission prices through arbitrary and discriminating zoning resulting in the enforced charging of unreasonably high prices thus making it impossible for independent houses to compete with distributor-controlled chain theatres, now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, by the independent motion picture theatre owners of the United States, assembled at the Congress Hotel in the City of Chicago this 28th day of November, 1932:

FIRST. That they commend Mr. Sidney R. Kent for his efforts to improve conditions in the motion picture business and make their acknowledgments to the Fox Film Company for its prompt ratification of the plan worked out between Mr. Kent and the sub-committee.

SECOND. That they wholeheartedly endorse and pledge their unremitting efforts to secure from the Federal Congress at the ensuing session—

(1) The adoption of Senate Resolution No. 170, now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee, providing for a searching investigation of the organization, financing and practices of the motion picture industry;

(2) The introduction and passage of the measure framed by the Joint Committee of Allied and MPTOA at the meeting in Chicago on September 20, 1932; or, if that shall appear impractical, in view of the short session, then the prompt passage of Senate Bill No. 3770, now on the calendar of the Senate.

Griswold Resigns As Vice President Of Fox Company

Glenn Griswold submitted his resignation as vice-president of Fox Film Corporation to the board of directors on Wednesday. It is understood that Mr. Griswold requested the resignation be made effective immediately.

Before joining Fox in February, 1931, to take charge of public relations and advertising, Mr. Griswold was editor of the Chicago Journal of Commerce. After ten years of editing the financial pages of the Chicago Examiner and the Chicago Tribune he organized and managed in Chicago for two years the financial advertising agency of Dow, Jones & Company, which later became a part of Doremus & Company. In 1920 Mr. Griswold left the Dow, Jones organization to become business manager of the proposed Chicago Journal of Commerce. In six weeks he had accomplished the task of organizing the various staffs and had brought out the first issue.

Mr. Griswold, it is understood, has completed plans for future activities in the industry, which will be announced within a few days.

Christies File in Bankruptcy

Al and Charles Christie, both veteran producers on the Coast, on Wednesday filed petitions in bankruptcy for themselves and at the same time filed a similar petition on behalf of the Metropolitan Sound Studio in Hollywood. The Christie brothers have been engaged in motion picture production for the past sixteen years.

DISTRIBUTORS' DECISIONS AWAITED

DIGEST OF THE KENT PROPOSALS

The Kent plan submitted to the MPTOA and Allied States in Chicago Wednesday, and in New York Thursday, is as follows:

Optional uniform contract, standardizing individual company contracts and providing voluntary arbitration by board of two exhibitors and two distributors; qualified cancellation up to 15 per cent of contract, and warranties against substitutions.

Creation of national appeal board to settle controversies other than those arising from license agreement, and restrictions limiting sale and shorts to three per feature, or one and a half per feature in double feature areas.

Reorganization of Film Boards of Trade.

Substitution for exclusive runs of system requiring minimum admission of 25 cents for certain pictures.

Establishing of zoning systems without distributor participation and requiring approval by two-thirds of exhibitors.

IATSE Orders Kaplan Removal

An order for the removal of Sam Kaplan, president, and other officers of Local 306, New York, was issued Tuesday from the Cincinnati headquarters of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Operators. Confirmation of this action was obtained Wednesday from Abner Rubien, counsel of the New York branch of the IATSE.

The sudden action of the International group came in the midst of the trial which began on Monday in the New York supreme court of a suit brought by three members of the local to have Mr. Kaplan removed from office. The plaintiffs, Ernest Giesmann, Samuel Simon and Charles McDermott, also asked the appointment of a receiver for the union. It was charged that the president strained union regulations in favor of theatres using projectors made by a company he controls. New York newspapers gave much attention to the fact that Mr. Kaplan and two of his perpetual bodyguard appeared in court on Tuesday armed with revolvers.

Problems are Tackled Anew At New York Mass Meeting

are going along with the proposals. Judging from past experience we believe that they do not intend to."

Mr. Samuelson said that "if four or five distributors had adopted the pact, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind that the joint mass meeting, including Allied, would have voted approval of it and would not have decided in favor of a continuation of its campaign for federal legislation." Mr. Samuelson said that four signatories are essential to make the arbitration and appeal board legal in New York state and many others under the state arbitration laws. When he returned to New York, Mr. Samuelson said that "in all fairness, I must go on record as saying that I have never dealt with a committee which acted so splendidly as did the MPTOA during the negotiations with Mr. Kent. The Fox president, too, was splendid in his relations. He was truthful and acted with honesty, candor and fairness."

More than 500 exhibitors from the East were expected to attend the eastern mass meeting of Allied and MPTOA at the Park Central. Jules Charnow, vice president of the New Jersey Allied unit and in charge of arrangements, said approximately 525 tickets were taken. Mr. Charnow said that whatever transpired at the Chicago meeting would have no bearing on the outcome of the local meeting. "We will discuss all the latest developments of the industry as they affect independents," he said. Asked whether this includes the new optional contract, he said that it did.

Kent Expects Approval

However, plenty of action was expected at the Thursday meeting from independents affiliated with Allied of New Jersey and the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. Many exhibitors have not yet read the proposed contract and this will be the first opportunity to get official understanding of the terms. Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, will be chairman.

"I think Allied has made a great mistake," said Mr. Kent of Allied's rejection of the industry program in favor of federal intervention and legislation. "It seems to me," Mr. Kent said, "that there is enough at stake to have made it worth while for Allied to have taken another week before making their decision. I would like to ask this question: Suppose they don't get the federal legislation they seek? What then?"

That Allied's action has not killed the possibilities of putting the proposed standard contract and supplementary proposals into work was made clear by Mr. Kent. He said he is confident that a majority of distributors will approve the agreement and that it will be made available to all exhibitors who want it. He said that he did not blame the distributors who have rejected it or who have made no decision because their objections are "minor ones" and do not affect the real importance of the contract.

Between sessions, leaders of both associations frequently were appealed to informally by members seeking relief from allegedly unfair conditions in their respective territories. L. K. Brin, well-known Milwaukee operator, asked Mr. Lightman to aid him in breaking down a practice in his town which, he said, made it impossible for him to get product for the Garden or Majestic theatre. Mr. Lightman promised to take the case to New York for inquiry and possible adjustment.

Mr. Brin charged that it was impossible to purchase product of Paramount, Fox, MGM, RKO, Columbia, Warners' or United Artists because of the circuit situation in Milwaukee and that exchanges also refused to supply pictures which the circuits do not play. He blamed his plight on Fox Midwesco, and said that even after agreeing to play last run and to maintain a 30-cent admission scale, product was unavailable. Currently he is playing "Those We Love," a World Wide release. The Garden and Majestic are without pictures for next week, he said.

Federal Inquiry Reported

Other Milwaukee exhibitor delegates to Chicago indicated that Department of Justice agents last week invaded Milwaukee for a secret investigation of the zoning and protection situation.

Detroit delegates of Allied hurried home Wednesday for an immediate gathering to discuss possible penalizing of members who are said to have walked out on the ban against dual bills, which Allied of Michigan enacted a few weeks ago. H. M. Richey, Michigan leader, returned from Chicago and after the dual bill session he is supposed to have continued on to New York to attend the Eastern mass meeting.

RKO Sets New Central District

Jules Levy, general sales manager of RKO Radio, has organized a new Central sales district, and has appointed Harry Michalson, Pittsburgh branch manager, as head of the new district. The Michalson territory, under the supervision of Eddie McEvoy, Eastern and Canadian district manager, will comprise the branches in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit and Indianapolis. George Lefko, Pittsburgh salesman, has been promoted to replace Mr. Michalson as branch manager there.

The district managers and the branches which they supervise include: E. L. McEvoy, Eastern, Albany, Boston, Buffalo, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Washington; W. E. Bronson, Midwest, Chicago, Des Moines, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, St. Louis, Sioux Falls; W. E. "THEY'LL STAND IN LINE TO GRAB IT"

That's DeCasseres' Idea of "Dinner at Eight" for Screen; Four Other Stage Plays Analyzed

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

DINNER AT EIGHT

"Dinner at Eight" is a knockout. It is the second in the series of that new kind of kaleidoscopic drama invented by Vicki Baum in "Grand Hotel."

"Dinner at Eight" will make, in the hands of an inspired director and a four-star cast, an even greater picture, from box-office angles, than "Grand Hotel." It is laid in New York. It is familiar. It is more easily recognizable. The types are all Americans. It is human. It is comedy, tragedy, farce. The dialogue sizzles. Its tempo is swift. As a picture it will make everyone palpitate for the next shot.

George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber have done great theatre. It is the most flawlessly produced (Sam H. Harris) play of many seasons. The audiences grow wild over it. The laughter is volcanic.

Mrs. Jordan is giving a dinner at 8 for ten persons. The dinner is the last thing we see. Between the first and last curtains we get hectic scenes from the lives of the invited guests.

The actor invited (done superbly by Conway Tearle) is a drunk, down-and-out and soaked to the crown, living in a hotel in the fifties. Broke to a penny. He is having an affair with the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jordan. When it is time for him to go to the dinner he turns on the log-fire gas in his evening clothes and commits suicide.

A Western politician-financier and his doll-baby wife (from Tenth avenue, all bejeweled) are seen in comic fights. Her doctor is necking her. This blowsy vulgarian from Montana (the husband) doesn't know it. These scenes are simply screams. Top-acting by Paul Harvey and Judith Wood.

An ancient singer who was once famous is played gorgeously by Constance Collier. The husband of the hostess, an old New York merchant, dying of nerves and heart trouble; a knifing in the servant's quarters over a maid, and other bits are all perfectly and vividly characterized. All these people tie up with one another in a clever and plausible manner. Not forgetting the Mrs. Jordan of Ann Andrews.

The dinner. Music. What's left of the guests in the tragic-comic finale tieup. The girl roving the stage for her lover lying dead in his hotel-room. It ends in a slow anti-climax which I liked, and which I hope the picture will preserve.

They'll stand in line to grab this.

DANGEROUS CORNERS

J. B. Priestley's first play is curious, original and fascinating.

"Dangerous Corners" as a stage play is all talk, and towards the end of its third act it becomes a bit boring. But in the more condensed medium of the picture it will, I believe, interest and grip from beginning to end. What is diffusive on the stage becomes localized and "cornered" on the screen, therefore more intensified.

Who killed Cock Robin, alias Martin Chatfield? He is supposed to have shot himself. We see nothing of this; but in the picture version it will be necessary (and effective) to show Martin in his country-house, mysterious cars creeping up in the night, and his death off-stage (suicide, the coroner's jury said).

The whole play is set in the living room of Robert Chatfield's country house after dinner. Robert is the brother of the "suicide." There are five guests besides his wife. The men are all partners in a prosperous publishing house and the women are the wives and the secretary of the publishers.

Now comes the cleverness of the play. By a question over a musical cigaret box the death of Martin comes up again. The conversation turns dangerous corners. Suspicions are born. Why did Martin kill himself? Why did he forge a check before he killed himself?

There is a tense air that something is going to burst. And something tremendous does burst. By nagging one another, quarreling, nicking into one another's lives, the truth at the end—or the truths—spill all over the stage.

One of the women present is the accidental murderess. Another was the dead man's mistress. One of the men present forged the check. All the wives are in love with some other husband. The murdered man, it comes out, was a degenerate and a drug addict, and all those on the stage—with one exception—are revealed in the course of two hours by this mutual prodding as leading secret lives.

Robert Chatfield, the host, having lost all his illusions by the revelation of what his guests really are, commits suicide.

Here is a murder mystery without a detective or a court room. And the baring of the private love and drug rackets of these apparently conventional London social lights is gripping.

Priestley has a big idea, but it will take a clever scenarist and a penetrating director to work it out properly. The acting of the cast, headed by Mary Servoss, Jean Dixon, Stanley Ridges and Colin Keith-Johnston, was effective.

Picture value, 90 per cent.

ABSENT FATHER

Francis De Witt certainly had his eye cocked on Hollywood when he crocheted this pent-house family jamboree called "Absent Father."

It bored the audience into snores and bronchitis. But it's an ill play that doesn't blow some picture mazuma into the pockets of the play-plumbers these days.

Here are a mother and a father, both Reno-split, and both married again. They've both got sons and daughters who meet in the aforementioned pent-house, which seems to be the modern idea of the old three-ring circus. Cocktails, cocktails, cocktails.

One of these fellows, Oliver, hikes to a speakeasy, gets corned to the crow's-nest and marries the cigaret girl. There's hell to pay in the pent-house. Father is absent in Europe. He burns up the cables with epigrams. Cocktails, cocktails, cocktails.

Oliver's mother, a Princess, gets another fellow to lure the cigaret girl into a ticklish situation. And it looks like more Reno. The evening wore on. All's well at last. Cocktails, cocktails, cocktails.

This might make a smart farce if such things have any sale. A song or two might help. As a play it reeks of cocktails and is full of prunes.

Picture value, 8 per cent.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

Here's Potash and Perlmutter back with us again as Blintz and Fishbein. And if it can be screened for as many laughs as it got at its first production (when Marc Connelly shook like a quart of jelly for two hours), then it will be a grand success when it hits the sound stage.

Montague Glass and Dan Jarrett did it and Solly Ward and Louis Sorin were the two wisecracking, always-in-trouble, spitting, wrangling business schlemihls.

Ward and Sorin were simply immense. They ranted, roared, bawled and bit the dust in the ancient Jewish manner. No picture company will go majullah on this!

Picture value, 80 per cent.

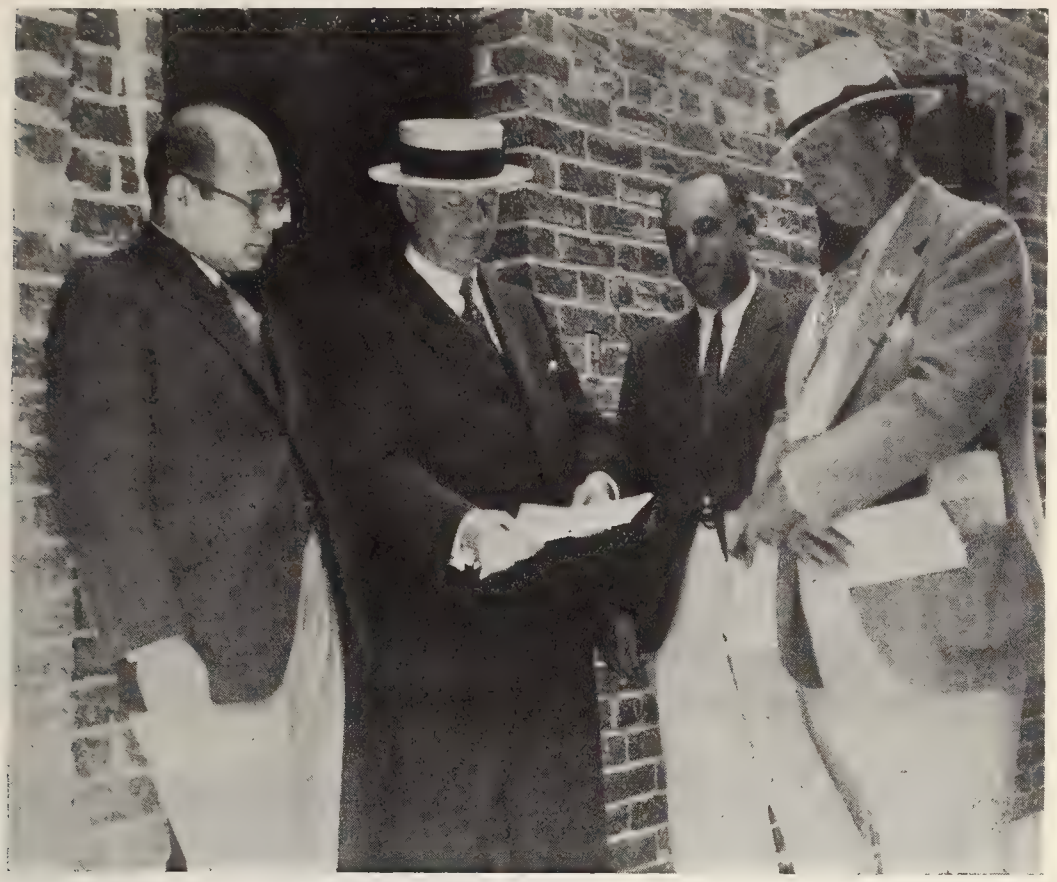
THE ANATOMIST

This play, by James Bridie, which had a great success in England, is for the howl-and-horror trade.



It is based on the famous Burke-Hare body-snatchers of a century ago. These fellows used to bump you off while you weren't looking and sell your body to some medico for pin-money.

The center-pole of this play is Dr. Knox (played by Frank Conroy). He believes in Science at any cost. He doesn't ask any questions about where the corpses come from. But Burke and Hare make the mistake of killing a young girl for the doc. who was a pick-up acquaintance of Knox's assistant, Doc. Anderson.

There is a picture here for some actor who must wear a patch over his eye like Dr. Knox (historical accuracy—haw! haw!). I can even see Jack Barrymore doing it. Who knows?

DECENTRALIZING HELD NEEDED TO PUT PRODUCTION DOLLAR ON SCREEN

Several Believe Complete Economy Will Come Only When Production Authorities' Profit Depends on Film's Success

Meehan Predicts Compromise of Unit and Centralized Systems, with Unit Producer Having Nominal Drawing Account

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Substantial savings in studio operating costs have been effected in the past twelve months. Pictures are not being made more cheaply, but they are being made less expensively. Yet I believe it is generally conceded costs must be further reduced. This is not altered by the fact, pointed out a few weeks ago by Mr. Martin Quigley, that the money which has been wasted in Hollywood is little more than chicken feed compared to losses sustained in distribution, exhibition and over-expansion in seating. Nevertheless the Production Community is expected to adjust itself to the new era, to bring the wholesale cost of its product down to the lowest figure consistent with salable entertainment.

In other words, the economic problem here in Hollywood is the job of putting the dollar on the screen where the audience can see it; that, and buying at reasonable prices the talent and materials which go on the screen. If it is going to cost too much to make a given production, and there is little or no prospect of making a profit, or even of recouping the cost, then obviously there is no use in making it. If the cost is going to be such that it cannot be sold to the exhibitor at a price which will permit him to make a profit, why risk the investment?

Risk All on One Side

"Suppose," said the president of one of the big companies the other day, "my production executives come to me with a story, cast and production schedule which, based upon our recent experience, looks as though it would do a gross business of about $500,000 to $600,000, but the budget estimate is $400,000 or $450,000. Naturally, I am going to ask them what use there is in making it. We risk a lot of money with little chance of a profit even if the picture is good, and a loss unless it happens to turn out well. On the other hand, if the picture can be done adequately for $250,000 or $300,000, there is reason for making it.

"All of which brings in the question: who shares the risk? If the associate producer, and possibly the director—perhaps even the author—were in a position of sharing the risk with the company, do you think they would argue in favor of making a picture which seemed predestined to take a loss, or at least to make no profit?

"It is human and natural for the associate producer or other important production executive to wish to make pictures which will look good, no matter what they cost. He is looking ahead to the next job, and meanwhile he is drawing a certain healthy weekly stipend for his work, irrespective of how much of the company's money he spends. Someone proposes the introduction of a sequence which will cost $25,000 to make, and which may or may not distinctly increase the entertainment value of the picture. Even though there are grounds to doubt its value, your salaried executive, director or writer is all for putting it in. He isn't risking anything. But if he were partner with the company, it would make a deal of difference, wouldn't it?"

This executive, in common with some others, is firmly of the opinion that completely effective economy will come only when the responsible production authorities depend for their profit upon the economic success of the picture. A nominal weekly drawing account would be allowed so that the executive would be assured of living in reasonable comfort or, if you please, reasonable affluence, which, after all, isn't so costly in these days of low living costs. But the "achievement money," as one executive aptly describes it, would come from a participation in the profits. And no one, distributor, exhibitor or public, would begrudge him a share of the profits if he made profitable entertainment.

Economy and Profit-Sharing

You may say this is all very logical, so why hasn't it been done? Well, there are a number of good and sufficient reasons, and until these hurdles are cleared the unit system or any modification on a basis of profit-sharing will not succeed. In fact, any such system will fail unless certain abuses of the past and certain theories of the present are corrected.

In the days when there was a substantial group of independent producers in Hollywood, they gradually dropped by the wayside, climbed aboard the mass production band wagon, or went broke. Authors of books and plays declined to sell their brain children except for a flat cash sum, usually paid in advance. Directors preferred a salary to even 50 per cent of the profits, and the same with a star. The independent producer found himself up against a stone wall. Here are some of the reasons:

The producer was sometimes deceived by the distributor. The distributor was sometimes deceived by the exhibitor. Trick accounting methods were used. All kinds of involved "overhead" charges were made. Fantastic salaries were put against production costs. Distributors who tried to play percentage found many exhibitors failing to live up to their percentage arrangements. Home office charges mounted. The ultimate result was that there were no profits coming back to the original source, the creative machinery, if you will, and the financial sponsors.

Now I don't mean by this that every distributor, or every exhibitor, did not play the game squarely, but anyone who knows anything about the history of this business for the past ten or fifteen years knows very well there was plenty of sharp practice from many sources. He knows that if an independent put his product through the distribution channels of a company which also was in the business of making pictures, his pictures got no more than a secondary break, if that. First came the matter of collecting for the producer-distributor's pictures, even if they had to throw in the independent's product for nothing. Obviously, if we are to see a legitimate development of independent effort, the independent must be dealt with fairly and honestly. He must not be penalized because his distributor also is a producer.

Another very important matter, particularly at this time, is that of financing. If the independent producer is to be expected to finance all or any substantial part of his own productions, then he must be given a deal which will permit him to finance legitimately. Pawnbroker methods of financing mean only one thing in the long run: the producer works for the money lender, who charges him, under various pretexts, usurious rates of interest. Call them bonuses, profit-sharing, commissions or whatever you please, when you come right down to it they amount to little less than usury.

Oh, yes, your money lender will dwell eloquently upon the high risk involved. The fact remains that unless the deal is a "wild cat" enterprise the money lender takes little more risk than he does in any other field of business investment. At the present time certain financial interests which heretofore have made large profits in automobile time-payment financing find themselves with more capital than they can invest in that field. They have heard of potentially large profits to be made from motion picture production, and are putting out cautious feelers to see if they can put some of their funds to work in independent production. So far, they seem to want nothing less than almost 100 per cent safety, plus the limit they can charge as legal interest (say 1 per cent per month), plus a substantial bonus in the way of a commission, a participation in the profits, or what not.

Cost of "Hiring" Money

Granting that a somewhat larger interest return might legitimately be expected from an investment in motion picture production than from other staple lines of business where the collateral has a more measurable value than a can of film negative, it is true that if the deal is right, the cost of "hiring" money should be right.

Obviously, stock issues are out. No one will buy stock in such an enterprise these days, especially when the stocks of our major companies are listed at one to ten or fifteen cents on the par dollar. Yet let us take the experience of one of the most successful lenders of money for motion picture production, Dr. A. H. Giannini and his Bank of America. Dr. Giannini for many years has taken an active interest in the financing of motion pictures, but he will tell you he has made his loans on a strictly banking basis. He studies the factors involved, and if they are not so sound, he refuses the loan. He makes sure of the reputation of the producer, makes sure of the responsibility of the concern which proposes to distribute his product. He analyzes the contract to be certain it is such that the producer, if he makes good product, will get his money back so he can repay the loan. If the circumstances are all favorable, Dr. Giannini will loan the money for picture production on substantially the same terms he will loan to any other business enterprise. He is not interested in floating stocks, underwriting stock issues, taking risks for a bonus, going into partnership with a producer and a distributor, with the hope of recovering the money he has loaned if and when the picture returns recover the necessary amount.

There are distributors who, becoming interested in taking on some independent production units, offer what they call a 50-50 deal. It runs something like this: The producer finances himself to make a production. On its completion the distributor advances 50 per cent of the production cost on delivery of the negative. He deducts 30 per cent of the gross revenues for distribution, now a more or less standardized distribution figure among the larger companies, plus the cost of prints and advertising. Then, after having recovered his 50 per cent against production cost, the distributor thereafter shares 50-50 or equally the balance of the receipts with the producer. It is obvious that there is a possibility that 50 per cent of the remaining gross receipts will not equal the other 50 per cent of the production cost. So what? The distributor has recovered every cent he has invested—half the production cost, the cost of distribution, prints, advertising—unless the picture is a horrible "palooka," against which contingency he has pretty reasonably protected himself at the outset by checking the producer's personal ability, checking story treatment, cast and direction. Yet, he wants to call himself a partner of the producer under such a deal!

Sound Financial Basis Needed

Obviously, it isn't a bankable proposition, and it isn't a proposition that will be taken by anyone unless at very high, prohibitive interest and bonus rates. The financier who is willing to loan on an equitable basis will demand that the loan be paid back before there is any 50-50 participation. He is perfectly willing, if he knows the picture business, that the distributor shall deduct his advance against negative cost, 30 per cent for distribution cost and the cost of prints and advertising, but thereafter the financier wants the receipts to be used to amortize the balance of his loan before the distributor begins to take 50 cents of every dollar received.

Unless the big companies are willing to trade with the legitimate independent upon such a sound financial basis, the present movement for independent production will get nowhere. It will be confined to a few independent producers who are financed wholly by the distributing companies, or whose contracts permit the sort of bankable financing indicated. And the independent producer who works on the other basis, even though he gets his capital, will likely have to pay such a premium that he soon will retire in disgust and with an empty pocketbook. You cannot walk the length of Hollywood boulevard today without running into one or more former producers who have learned this lesson by bitter experience. It is even more important today, when financing is a more difficult problem than it ever has been in the memory of living man.

This is the second of a series of articles on the all-important topic of production decentralization, by Leo Meehan, publisher of Hollywood Herald. In his first article, which appeared in Motion Picture Herald last week, Mr. Meehan dwelt specifically upon some of the difficulties of mass production and how they might be solved by decentralizing into units. Emphasis was placed upon the sheer physical, mental and time limitations which militate against a central executive attempting to supervise production of forty to fifty pictures. In the accompanying article, Mr. Meehan outlines some of the economic aspects of production and indicates what might be expected under decentralizing.

There is no ground today for the supposition that production is going immediately to decentralize 100 per cent into unit production. Too much is invested in plants, equipment, long term starring contracts, producer-distributor owned theatre circuits which must be supplied with product, and numerous other pertinent factors. With its characteristic impetuosity, Hollywood probably will look forward to complete change-over to the unit system. It is this writer's opinion that what does take place will be a compromise between an all-unit system and an all-centralized system.

To illustrate: Suppose a certain company wants forty pictures as its season's program. It may contract with three independent producers to make eight pictures each, or six to make four each. The other sixteen would be made by the company itself, under the general supervision of a major producer-executive. Having sixteen pictures of its own to make, it could afford to maintain at least a skeletonized staff of stars, featured players, writers, directors and technicians. The major executive, with the aid of perhaps two or three production assistants, could properly look after the making of sixteen pictures. Under him, also, would be a business executive to look after the physical operations of the plant, providing facilities for the making of the company's own product and such of the independent unit product as was to be produced upon the lot. The units, and each of their staffs, would operate independently and separately. The distributing company would have nothing to say beyond probably an approval of story, cast, direction and budget. This would be essential so that the entire program for the season, company and independent, would be well balanced as to story, types, personalities, and the like.

The unit producer might be permitted a nominal weekly drawing account, to be charged against production. Beyond that, he must look to the profits from his pictures for remuneration for his work.

By producing a limited number of pictures the company would be able to develop or maintain starring personalities and a certain few writers or directors who are both dependable and versatile. These it also might use for trading with other companies, to exchange players, directors or writers whose peculiar talents are suited to certain types of production. Also, it might loan at reasonable figures to its independent units such of these personalities as are suited to pictures made by the unit producers. Thus the unit producer need not go into the open market and buy expensive talent just for a single picture at a rate which promptly rockets his production costs skyward, and the company can keep expensive talent continuously employed.

The major company also will be assured of sufficient operating activity to maintain a skeletonized but competent crew of cameramen, scenic artists, electricians, property men and other technicians and mechanics on a paying and economical basis. And these facilities, too, would be made available at legitimate costs to the independent producer.

Could Develop Talent

At the same time, the production and the production responsibility would have been so decentralized as to lift the impossible burdens from central executive authority that exist under the mass production system. There would be less need for assistants, for committees, for checks and balances, fewer complications between the buying of a story and the shipping of the negative. A large and complicated plant would be operated on a strictly business basis, and the production executive would be able to give sufficient thought and time to the preparation and making of such a part of the company's program as he is responsible for. The company, on the other hand, would be reasonably assured of a continuous flow of good product in which the dollar spent had been spent upon the screen, instead of a quarter or half of it being spent in lost motion, false starts, delays, political intrigue and incompetent help.

After reading my first discussion of decentralized production, an executive asked me where these unit producers were to come from. He noted that those already in the field were not enough to accomplish very much toward this decentralization idea, and he couldn't quite see where the manpower for the rest of them existed. It does exist, but that is another story. Perhaps some day there will be space for a discussion of that problem, too. The talent exists today, right within the boundaries of the production community. All it needs is the proper opportunity.

Robert Eastman of Photoplay Dies

Death of Robert M. Eastman, vice-president of Photoplay Publishing Company and long chairman of the board of directors of W. F. Hall Printing Company, in Chicago the day before Thanksgiving, removes an early champion of the motion picture industry. He would have been 64 years old December 1. Mr. Eastman was also chairman of the directorate of Chicago Rotoprint Company.

Born at Anoka, Minn., Mr. Eastman went to Chicago in 1886. Development of thoroughbred horses and pure bred Holstein cattle became one of his interests. He maintained the Eastman Hill stock farm at Lovell, Maine, and was owner of Mike Hall, famous on the turf.

The W. F. Hall Printing Company in 1914 took over Photoplay Magazine, which had begun as a theatre house organ in 1912, and made it a national magazine, under the editorship of the late James R. Quirk. Mr. Eastman maintained an aggressive interest in the world of the motion picture and the magazine. He was an occasional and highly successful investor in some of the earlier serial picture enterprises.

Mr. Eastman was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, Chicago Historical Society, The Art Institute, Chicago Athletic Association, South Shore Country Club, Medinah Country, and the Press Club. He was a 32d degree Mason and Shriner.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Carrie Evers Eastman, a son and a daughter, two sisters and a brother.

Richmond Houses Start Newspaper

Five theatres of Richmond, Va., have inaugurated a bi-weekly publication, Richmond Screenland, under the editorship of Richard Powell Carter, former newspaper man, which is distributed to a circulation of 30,000 through a national distributing agency. The publication aims to inform readers concerning problems of the film industry, insofar as those problems affect the patron.

It is the intention of the publishers to solicit advertising. An editorial page is maintained where are published items of film interest as well as reference to community problems. In the issue of November 8 considerable space was devoted to a plea for general support of the Richmond Community Fund, local relief organization. The theatres which are jointly publishing Richmond Screenland are the Byrd, Capitol, Venus, Brookland and Bluebird.

PRIDE AND GIVEAWAYS

Exhibitors of Staten Island, N. Y., are on the verge of perhaps active warfare on giveaways. Although better product and overworking of the idea are making giveaways unpopular on the island, many theatres are continuing the practice. Patrons at the Empire receive chances on candy, toys and prize-fight tickets. At the Ritz, Liberty and Capitol they get a coupon and a chance to win a turkey, a ticket entitling them to a set of unbreakable dishes, and a chance to win a basket of fruit. Three or four houses are giving away mechanical bronchos. All this is in addition to cash prizes awarded to dozens of amateurs who perform in the opportunity night contests.

George Kennedy writes about it in his daily column in the Staten Island "Advance." In the few sentences preceding his account appears the line, "Staten Island residents today don't seem to take the pride in their environment that was shown by the people of fifteen or twenty years ago."

Goldberg Retains World Wide Post

Joe Goldberg, general sales manager of World Wide, feature producing unit of Educational, has withdrawn the resignation he submitted last week and will continue in the post, it was announced by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational and chairman of the executive committee of World Wide, on Tuesday.

The resignation of Phil Dunas, Midwest district manager for Educational-World Wide, will become effective December 2. It is understood no successor will be named.

San Antonio Court Denies Writ in Aleograph Suit

Federal Judge DuVal West in San Antonio last week denied an application for a writ of injunction to prohibit prosecution of a patent suit brought by the Aleograph Company against Western Electric Company, New York. The application was filed by Electrical Research Products, Inc., which claimed the same questions had been decided in favor of Erpi as defendant in an Aleograph suit in 1930.

Attorneys for Aleograph contended the court had no jurisdiction to grant the writ. The Aleograph Company claims that disc machines used in talking motion picture production were invented by Allen Stowers and Leo De Hymel of San Antonio and that their patent rights, held by the Aleograph Company, have been violated, costing the company and the inventors millions of dollars.

Tri-Ergon Patents Suit Is Underway

Testifying during the opening sessions of the American Tri-Ergon Corporation's patent infringement suit against Paramount Publix Corporation, John M. Joy, engineer of the plaintiff company, charged that Western Electric in 1927 copied a method of making sound pictures from a basic patent held by William Fox, owner of a 90 per cent interest in Tri-Ergon.

In this action, which commenced in Brooklyn on Monday before Federal Judge Marcus B. Campbell, the plaintiff is seeking an injunction to restrain Paramount from producing pictures and the bill asks for an accounting of profits made on pictures produced through the alleged patent violations.

Suits of a similar nature have been filed elsewhere against RKO, RCA Photophone and Western Electric.

Technical testimony, relating only to the subject of synchronization of sound and pictures in production, took up the first day's sessions. Counsel present were Hugo Hirsch, Mr. Fox's personal attorney; also representatives of Ward, Crosby and Neal, patent attorneys, and Newman, Riis and Nacker, both representing the plaintiff. Charles Neave is attorney for Paramount.

A resume of the patent situation involved in this and other similar suits was contained in Motion Picture Herald, issue of November 12, on page 34.

Warner Investors Meet December 12

Five directors will be elected, an amendment of the certificate of incorporation discussed and other routine business transacted at the annual meeting of the stockholders of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., at the offices of the Corporation Trust Company, Wilmington, Del., December 12.

The first paragraph of Article IV of the certificate, in which the change is pending, now reads: "The total number of shares of capital stock that may be issued by the corporation is 7,603,107 shares without nominal or par value, consisting of 103,107 shares of preferred stock and 7,500,000 shares of common stock. Each share of common stock without par value previously issued is hereby changed or split into two shares of such common stock without par value."

The proposed amendment reads: "The total number of shares of all classes of stock which the corporation shall have authority to issue is 7,603,107, consisting of 103,107 shares of preferred stock without par value and 7,500,000 shares of common stock of the par value of $5 each."

Loew's Declares Dividend

Directors of Loew's, Inc., this week voted the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents, payable December 14. The certified operating statement of the company for the year ended August 31, showing profit of $4.80 per share on the common stock, was approved by the board.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE press in New York devoted considerable space last week to activities which followed an advertising announcement by Sue Carol, wife of Nick Stuart, that she was searching for a baby or two whom friends might adopt. All week she interviewed mothers of the tragic poor who hoped that their blue-eyed dimple-kneed youngsters might be given a better break in life by foster parents. Also, Miss Carol willingly posed for news photographers and readily answered all questions of reporters. The press, at times, was even more widely represented in her elaborate suite at the Essex House than were the sorrowful parents who thought their babies would answer the specifications of Miss Carol's advertisement.

Miss Carol and Nick Stuart are the happy parents of a baby girl and we believe that she was sincere in her advertisement and the subsequent situation. She said she was acting in good faith as intermediary for another, although she later told AMPA press and publicity members at a luncheon that she "likes the publicity and pictures in the newspapers" which resulted from the announcement.

The purchase by Fox of screen rights to an unproduced play titled "Ad-Man," is the prelude to what appears will be an indictment in motion pictures of certain alleged rackets in the advertising agency business. Some of the personalities in that field also will come in for a bit of exposing. The play was written by Arch Gaffney, of Fertig-Slavitt-Gaffney Agency, and Charles Curran, former agency man who is now writing ad copy at Warners. Significantly, Howard J. Green, who prepared "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," has been assigned to adapt "Ad-Man."

CECIL B. DE MILLE "shoots the works" in "The Sign of the Cross," which Paramount premiered on Wednesday. According to Arch Reeve, Paramount publicist at Hollywood, the picture fairly reeks with spectacle. "The sets are marvelous," he says, and "the costumes spell sex. There's Claudette Colbert in a milk bath. And Fredric March using the sensuous Joyzelle to break down the resistance of Landi—mentally, and how!"

"There are wild scenes in Nero's court. Rome burns again. It took three weeks to build it and five minutes for it to go up in flame for a dozen cameras." Mr. Reeve said he watched DeMille working with 30 lions, and "these babies weren't doped, toothless, aged or docile." DeMille is "a slave-driver," said Arch, "but the extras loved it." We bet they did.

While doing some research for the picture, Mr. DeMille was surprised to learn that ancient Roman executioners were considerate fellows—in their own way. Doomed victims had the choice of being boiled in cocoanut oil, pulled apart by the rack, or flogged to death with a steel-toothed whip. However, this type of punishment was reserved for the common people or special enemies of Nero. Noblemen and political rivals were permitted to hide in a corner and drink hemlock or slash their wrists.

In the meantime, Paramount sent out a story headed: "Cecil B. DeMille leaves his bathtubs to discuss love."

STORY PURCHASES MAINTAIN RECORD

Nine Companies Acquire 28 Manuscripts in Month; Scenario and Writing Groups on Coast Working Briskly

The marked trend toward the purchase of books and plays which has been in evidence for many months continued during October when 28 manuscripts were acquired by nine companies. This figure equals that of September when a high figure for the season was established and makes a total of 158 novels and plays acquired by leading companies from March 1, when heavy story buying for the new season began. During the eight-month period, Metro and Paramount led all buyers with 31 purchases. Warners bought 18 vehicles; RKO Radio, 15; Universal and World Wide, 14 each; Fox, 11; Columbia, 10; Allied and Remington, three each; United Artists, two, and Chesterfield, Goldburg, Monogram and Paradise, one each.

Further evidence of increased attention being paid to establish story material was seen by announcement of a new split-up of the production dollar which shows that 15 cents out of each dollar actually expended by studios goes to stories and scripts, as compared with 10 cents some years ago.

Warner Brothers, seeking a wider variety of stories for their productions, engaged 20 additional writers during the month, including Bolton Mallory, Sheridan Gibney, Al Dubin, Erwin Gelsey, Whitney Bolton, Brown Holmes, Robert Presnell, Ernest Pascal, Ward Morehouse, Paul Green, Harry Warren, James Seymour, Lillie Hayward, John Francis Dillon, David Hoehm, Carl Erickson, Maude Howell, Bradford Ropez, Tom Geraghty and Don Mullaly.

Other Companies Active

Other companies evidenced similar increased activities. Paramount announced it would include the works of as many noted authors as possible in forthcoming schedules. F. Brewster Morse, contract writer for Freuler Film Associates, came east to confer on new material. Columbia sent Everett Riskin, newly appointed special studio representative, to New York in search of additional vehicles and to pass immediately on several stories which had been submitted at the home office. H. N. Swanson returned to the Radio lot after a two-months visit in New York purchasing story material. The company reported Mr. Swanson had secured several hundred outlines.

In the meantime, Warners' eastern story department had in hand for consideration the 7,500th manuscript submitted since the first of the year when announcement was made that it would seek only "off-the-beaten-path" material. Originally, the story editors of Warners in New York considered an average of 6,000 works yearly. RKO's readers in Hollywood are working overtime, too, in search of story material. The department, it was said, is now geared up to reading 150 books each week. And from the Hays office in Hollywood it became known that 47 per cent of the 460 features made on the Coast last season by 29 companies were made from original stories, while the majority were said to be adaptations from books and plays. In order to obtain this material, the companies which are members of the Motion Picture Producers' Association examined 73,455 pieces of literature.

"The future of the motion picture industry rests in the hands of its writers rather than those of the bankers," said William LeBaron, production executive, in Hollywood the other day. "When the evolution now taking place within the picture business is completed, the writers will be awarded the recognition they should have had years ago. Today, as never before, production heads are looking to their scenario departments to pull them out of the financial mire."

Also, from Hobart Bosworth, one of the earlier motion picture players, came similar sentiments. Mr. Bosworth, making personal appearances at New Orleans, told reporters, "The hope of future movies lies mostly in better stories. There is an extreme shortage of stories and it has become a tremendous problem to the industry."

Scenarist to Address Students

Playwriting students of Yale, Harvard and Princeton universities will hear a first-hand account of the writing of screen plays and dialogue from Horace Jackson, scenarist, who is due east from Hollywood late in November to appear before the respective student bodies.

In the meantime, the Authors' Guild of the Authors' League of America has met in annual session in New York and elected the following writers to the Guild's council; Elmer Davis, Phyllis Duganne, Howe Farnham, Inez Haynes Irwin, Will Irwin, Alfred P. Loomis, Denis Tilden Lynch, Boyden Sparkes, Lyman Beecher Stowe, Virginia T. Van DeWater and Thyra Samter Winslow. Several of the group have made notable literary contributions to motion pictures. James Hopper continues in office as president. The Guild discussed the situation regarding pending copyright legislation in Congress.

Several important works were included in the 28 purchases of books and plays made during October. Columbia bought "Hurricane Deck." Fox acquired "Zoo in Budapest" and "Promenade Deck." Metro secured "Clear All Wires," while "Luxury Liner" and "International House" went to Paramount. Prominent among purchases completed by Radio was "Goose Woman." A complete record of all book or play purchases for the month follows:

NEW QUOTA YEAR LEAVES BRITISH INDEPENDENT EXHIBITOR GRUMBLING

Circuits Get Pick of Improved Product, but Other Houses Must Play Inferior Films Made Cheaply for the Quota

Standard of Product So Improved That Circuits Would Be as Well Off Without Quota, Says Charman

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

Beginning of a new quota year has again brought into the limelight the perennial question—Has the British quota system been a success? And opinion is still as divided as it was when the act was introduced in 1928.

By easy stages the exhibitor has been obliged to include in his programs more British product each year, until with the term now in front of him he must show that at least 12½ per cent of his pictures are British. With the greater variety of home product available these days, and the improved quality which English films are generally conceded to possess, it might be thought the burden was not a heavy one. Though in many cases figures can be quoted to prove that a given theatre is easily exceeding its obligation today, there are, however, other cases in which the exhibitor's plea of hardship appears on analysis to be based on legitimate grounds.

By a coincidence it was not merely the birth of the new quota year that focussed attention on the matter this time, but an occurrence at a big West End theatre. In order to conform with its obligations, the Dominion theatre, at present operated by United Artists and so regarded as a show house for its Columbia and other American bookings, put into its program one of those minor British productions which are made at minimum cost expressly for quota purposes. The disapproval voiced by a Sunday audience was so insistent that the management was obliged to remove it from the screen.

That in itself, however, does not complete the tale; if the mere removal of one picture from the program was a matter of the utmost seriousness there would, I venture to say, be hardly a theatre open today either here or anywhere! What happened in this instance was that the press, with the ready facility they have for smelling out a stunt, got the story and played it up to glory. Result—indignation among the public against the trashy home films they are expected to watch and a setback to the entire British production field.

It's not a pleasant position for the unhappy showman who, regardless of such a trend of events, must continue showing his quota of mud-stained British pictures or else be haled before the local magistrate and sharply fined.

You might ask why the exhibitor chooses to play the cheap "quota" film when there is such variety of better home product available. Just consider the facts.

The principal production companies here are Gaumont, Gainsborough, B. I. P., British & Dominions, Twickenham, Associated Radio, British Lion, Paramount British and the new London Film Company.

A FOUR YEAR PRICE TO SEE A PICTURE

Four years aboard the "Coffin" is a long price to pay for looking at a motion picture. Yet one of Uncle Sam's sailors paid it, probably the highest admission ever paid for a film. A member of the crew of the U.S.S. Nitro, the ammunition ship of the Navy, known as the "Coffin," was scheduled to terminate his enlistment on a certain day recently. That night the films for the next voyage of the ship came aboard. Among them was "Bad Girl." This particular sailor wanted to see the picture so badly that he re-enlisted on the spot. Now he is in the Navy for four more years. He is in Charleston Navy Yard now, but he sails for China very shortly. Join the Navy and see a motion picture—free!

Of these the first four named are the most prolific. Gaumont, Gainsborough and B. & D. distribute through Gaumont-British, controlling the largest circuit in Great Britain, while BIP distributes through its own circuit also. The two big circuits, operating about 600 theatres, therefore, cream the product from the start, and their ramifications are such that the majority of independents find themselves barred from the most desirable pictures from the word go.

What about the remainder? Twickenham is an independent studio and sells its product where it is most acceptable. Several foreign renting houses have been glad to use Twickenham pictures in order to meet their own quota obligations, but even so a large share of the films from this studio find themselves in the hands of Gaumont-British. The same thing applies to some extent to British Lion, for its most successful productions have been made in conjunction with Gainsborough, and it therefore books first on the GB circuit.

Associated Radio and Paramount, both feeding American renting houses with usable films, do not produce enough pictures per year to make any serious difference to the market. London Films cannot be taken into the reckoning, as its first picture has not yet been released. It is notable, however, that this picture is to be given to the trade by Ideal Films, a Gaumont-British subsidiary.

This system obviously serves well for the circuits, and certainly insures a showing for homemade films. The question one is entitled to ask, however, is whether the extensive playing of British pictures on these circuits is due to the institution of the quota, or whether the product obtains its showing purely and simply on its own merits. And one cannot but come to the conclusion that the position (as regards the circuits) would be the same, quota or no quota.

With the circuits let out of the argument, though, the independent theatre owner has still to find pictures to satisfy the requirements of a benevolent government. Since he can't get the pictures he would like to show, either on account of the bar or the price, he has to show what he can get. And all that is left are the worthless quota productions such as the one that raised the storm at the Dominion.

These pictures, produced often at a cost as low as $15,000 or, at most, around $5 a foot, are manufactured under the most primitive conditions.

The producer obviously must get his money back from the renter, who in his turn is bound by the quota law to offer a percentage of British footage in his annual campaign. Even companies of the calibre of MGM or United Artists resort to this market in order to be on the right side of the law.

Maybe you've a certain amount of product of a similar nature playing around the rural halls in the little communities 'way back of beyond. If so, you'll be able to appreciate the feelings of a sophisticated and self-respecting public when such valueless celluloid is palmed off on it as entertainment. You'll also understand why British films are anathema to the audiences who attend the modest wee halls that can survive only by reason of booking films at a low rental.

Hurting the Little Folk

If, therefore, the quota has not helped the circuit, and if, again, it has brought about the position outlined in respect of the small independent theatres, of what value has it been to British production?

The people who suffer are the owners of the small family houses (is it not always that way?), who are forced by the law into ruining their reputations by blotting their screens with rubbish. And they, paradoxically enough, are the section of the trade to whom the law was least intended to apply. The British industry was not to be saved on the profits derived from small hall bookings of home product.

This, then, is the position. The large houses and the circuits can snap their fingers at the quota, because their bookings of home films are not dependent on its demands, while the little folk (who might easily be permitted to) wish they could snap their fingers, too, but only find when they attempt to do so that those fingers get painfully rapped.

In plain English, the quota has become an unnecessary encumbrance. The British industry is very grateful for its encouragement in the past, thank you, but is now well enough to be able to look after itself—and prefers to do so.

If British pictures are not of sufficiently high quality to compete in the open market on their own merits now they never will be, nor will they deserve to.

DE MILLE THE MASTER OF SPECTACLE

Dialogue Only Supplementary in "The Sign of the Cross," Says Meehan; Other New Films Seen

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Correspondent

Reminiscent of the power and sweep of "Ten Commandments" and "King of Kings," the Cecil B. De Mille production, "The Sign of the Cross," again demonstrates his mastery of the spectacle and of historic drama. It might aptly be said that "when better spectacles are made C. B. De Mille will make them." He has a flair for mass movement unsurpassed, and probably unequaled, by anyone in pictures, and in this new Paramount production he shows that he has not lost any of his genius in that direction.

Another thing, Mr. DeMille does not forget that moving pictures should move. He does not depend upon dialogue to tell his story, but uses it only as an added means of putting over what he is telling. I think it would be possible to follow very easily the story of "Sign of the Cross" if the sound track was eliminated. Nevertheless, the dialogue is excellent and thoroughly in keeping with the subject.

Fredric March and Elissa Landi play the romantic leads, and both are magnificent, March as a powerful young pagan, prefect of Rome in the sensual luxuriousness of Nero's days, and Landi as a convert to the new religion that has come from the shores of the Sea of Galilee. With telling power, Mr. De Mille relates how March, fighting the spell of the new philosophy, gradually abandons his lascivious life through the girl's influence, and both become martyrs to the new faith. Miss Landi's picture roles have not always been so fortunate, but here she displays real dramatic power and beauty. The versatility of March, Academy award winner, seems limitless.

Universal Offers "The Mummy"

The self-indulgent pagan cruelty and bestiality of the day is excellently portrayed by Charles Laughton as the degenerate emperor and by Claudette Colbert as his scheming, heartless consort. A group of unusually convincing performances are given in support of these four principals.

There may be some criticism of the brutality of the Roman orgies as De Mille unfolds them with relentless realism. Yet they do point up vividly and with telling power the theme, that had not Christianity possessed a super-human vitality, it would have succumbed under the most terrific odds man could conceive. It contrasts most brilliantly, too, the difference between paganism and Christianity. No sermon, no dozen sermons, could possibly illustrate so strikingly this notable period in history. It was a day when men and women walked into the jaws of horrible death smilingly for a cause which transcended all earthly considerations and was destined through their sacrifice to change the history of the world.

"The Sign of the Cross" is entertainment, lavish, dramatic, inspiring. It should be one of the most talked-of productions of the year.

One of the best of the Boris Karloff series from Universal turned up this week in "The Mummy," a clever adaptation of the adventures of archeologists in Egypt. Karloff, as a mummy, comes back to life after a sleep of 3700 years, finds in a modern girl the reincarnation of his ancient love. Willy Pogany has provided some very interesting sets. Karl Freund, famous camera ace, handled direction under supervision of producer Stanley Bergerman, and it was a very happy combination. It is an intriguingly different picture, with thrills but not horrors.

Radio provided a preliminary glimpse of the latest Irene Dunne starring vehicle, "No Other Woman." It is the story of a woman eager to lift herself from the sooty environment of the steel mills, who forces an unwilling husband, Charles Bickford, into the world of big business, where he makes a fortune. Then he falls for a vampire, played by Gwili Andre. After he has dragged his wife through a muddy divorce scandal, he discovers what a cad he has been. The picture has a lot of heart tugs, but they are pretty far fetched. Miss Dunne seems destined, cinematically, to get tied up to gorillas who don't appreciate her so that she may suffer and win, and perhaps that is the way the public likes her. Personally we don't believe this sort of story does adequate justice to her fine talent and exquisite screen personality.

William Powell creates a vivid character in "Lawyer Man" from Warner-First National. Rian James, former New York columnist, and James Seymour have built up a suspenseful yarn about a witty attorney who becomes a "big shot," then gets into intrigue which tosses him back to the slums where he started. The courtroom stuff is wisely minimized. The drama is punchy, the dialogue snappy and there is nice balance. It follows the comedy-dramatic pattern in which the Warner production forces have succeeded so well this year. William Dieterle directed.

Lee Tracy is in again, and how. That boy seems to jump from one smashing role to another. This time it is the press agent, the great American ballyhooer putting out his ballyhooey. Suggested by the life of the great late Harry Reichenbach, the story was written by Ben Markson and H. N. Swanson, and Radio produced it under the title of "The Half Naked Truth." Clever Gregory LaCava directed, and it turns out to be a high speed laugh carnival with Tracy as master of ceremonies.

It tells the story of how Tracy, small time carnival man, takes a bush league muscle dancer (Lupe Velez) to New York and lands her as the star of the biggest revue in town. Monumental crust and clever exploitation, of course, do the trick; and then when Lupe goes ritzy on him, Tracy turns around, takes a hotel chambermaid under his wing and repeats the trick with her, just to prove it is ballyhoo that makes for popularity. There's plenty of snappy dialogue and surprise action, with Tracy going four miles a minute from beginning to end.

Radio also previewed the latest Constance Bennett picture, "Rock-a-bye," during the week. Such appeal as it may possess will be mostly for women, we think. Generally speaking, the characters and the story are pretty commonplace, and there isn't much excuse for the socalled romance carried on by Connie and Joel McCrea.

It's one of those things in which Joel, a playwright, falls for Constance, an actress aspiring to stardom. Joel is getting a divorce, so he and Connie plan to be married just as soon as the law allows. The night of her triumph in Joel's play, he is summoned to the hospital, where his wife has given birth to a boy. Joel's mother pleads with Connie to give him up, that his place is with his wife and baby, so Connie gives him up. The biggest hit was Jobyna Howland in the role of Connie's tippling mother, raucous, vulgar—but very funny. Connie's aspirations to have a baby, either via the foundling asylum or the stork, and she doesn't care which, may appeal to the women folk.

Columbia Showing Three

Columbia previewed three of its new pictures, the most ambitious being Frank Capra's production of "The Bitter Tea of General Yen." (Some of the Hollywood wags have been dubbing it "The Bitter Yen of General Tea.") It is the old "east is east and west is west, and never the twain shall meet," theme, done upon an elaborate scale. The conflicting customs and views of the Occident and Orient result in tragedy for General Yen, who has a yen for a white girl. Nils Asther and Barbara Stanwyck play the two roles, and very satisfactorily. Against the romance is Walter Connelly in another outstanding performance. The war atmosphere of the recent conflict in the vicinity of Shanghai is cleverly worked into the picture. No sale for juveniles, inasmuch as it deals mostly with the different ideals of the white and the yellow races, and is therefore too deep for them.

"Speed Demon" is another Columbia attraction, a sort of Wally Reid model racing story, using boats instead of autos, featuring William Collier, Jr., as the speed boat king. There's lots of stuff in this one to set the younger patrons to cheering, plenty of human interest, fast action, a romance with Joan Marsh, and some hot melodrama. It has some first class thrills both in auto racing and speedboat competition.

Done in ultra-modern motif, elaborately mounted and with a smart dialogue job, "No More Orchids" from Columbia features a romance of Carole Lombard as the rich girl, in love with handsome Lyle Talbot, self-made but poor. Louise Closser Hale, Walter Connelly and C. Aubrey Smith are seen in very entertaining supporting roles.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Call Her Savage

(Fox)

Drama

The return of Clara Bow to the screen after a protracted and somewhat hectic absence immediately and automatically becomes the prime consideration in selling "Call Her Savage." On that one angle it is suggested emphatically the exhibitor "shoot the works," and it should be worth the effort from the box office standpoint.

Miss Bow not only will not disappoint the patrons, but her performance here will undoubtedly have them figuratively "on their toes" awaiting her next feature. The star is in turn vivacious, sparkling, composed and depressed, is at all times vastly attractive and indicates her unquestioned ability as a versatile and effective dramatic actress.

The title is in the nature of a bullseye for a Clara Bow picture, and she makes the most of it in every particular. It will stand up well under the pressure of a strong campaign and becomes a strong selling point when hooked with the name Bow. The story is from an original novel by Tiffany Thayer, author of a considerable output of popular and rather widely read fiction, a fact that should be good for some attention in advertising copy. Other Thayer fiction has been translated for the screen, which is another point not to be overlooked.

It is true that there is nothing of unusual strength in the story material with which Miss Bow works. The more to her credit, then, that she makes so much of it. It is definitely a one-star film, although Miss Bow has handsome support all the way down the line. The names are not top, to be sure, but they respond to the demands of their parts. Monroe Owsley, Gilbert Roland, Thelma Todd, Willard Robertson are names which will warrant space under that of Miss Bow.

The story is based on the Scriptural theme, "The sins of the fathers shall be visited upon the children," etc., with Miss Bow the grandchild of a vicious but hearty pioneer, and the child of a union between her mother and an Indian, a fact which does not appear until very late in the narrative. Unruly, impossible to handle, the girl is sent by her wealthy father to a finishing school in Chicago.

Sell Clara Bow in this with all the power at command. Call her a new Clara Bow, or a rejuvenated Clara Bow, stronger than ever, and there will be no overstatement, since she performs in a manner warranting the description. The story's selling value is overshadowed by the player, therefore concentrate on her to the full. This is adult material, naturally.—AARONSON, New York.

The Mummy

(Universal)

Melodrama

In "The Mummy," Universal presents Boris Karloff in a picture that does not depend upon gruesomeness of horror for its entertaining punch. Weird, to be sure, and unreal, this story is a highly imaginative melodrama about which an interesting romance is woven.

Because the name Karloff has been associated with several gasp provokers and because of the title, it would seem that the first thing to do would be to impress upon your patrons that "The Mummy" is not a horror picture.

Laid entirely in Egypt, the story concerns a party of scientists excavating the long forgotten tombs. Particularly they are searching for the mystic formula which will restore life to the dead. Early sequences are devoted to the Egypt of several hundred centuries ago, but the picture takes on its modern phase when one of the assistant scientists accidentally speaks the life giving words and gives animation to a mummy that has been in the tomb for thousands of years.

On earth again, Im-Ho-Tep discovers in Helen the reincarnation of the princess for whom he was condemned ages ago. Endeavoring to pick up his broken romance, "The Mummy" becomes entangled with the moderns; the Helen who half believes, but cannot understand that she lived once before; Frank, her lover, and the archeologists.

Although the idea of reincarnation is far from new on the screen, the weird manner in which it is developed here should provide better than usual entertainment for adults. It has that type of romance, which, although farfetched and entirely visionary, is nevertheless fascinating to feminine patrons, while the mystic unrealism should provide the men folk something new. Unless your juvenile patrons are pretty smart, however, it will be a little over their heads.

The novel manner in which the story is conceived and developed, with settings impressive yet not detracting from the theme, should be the angle to place before your patrons. Get as big houses as possible to see it on opening day so the patrons will pass the word along. That should bring the others to later shows. It may be necessary to give in both trailer and advance newspaper advertising and publicity a little more of the story than is usual.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Slightly Married

(Chesterfield)

In "Slightly Married" is a fine combination of romance, drama, comedy and novelty in construction and presentation that should mean ideal family entertainment. It has the material that will delight and amuse patrons of neighborhood and smaller town theatres. From a story point of view, it is fast moving, logical, and interest-holding.

Lack of outstanding cast names should not hamper the picture. If patrons are looking for snappy yet wholesome entertainment, this picture should satisfy their tastes.

The story, simply but dramatically told, concerns a poor girl Mary Smith, who falls into the "vag" line only to find herself married to the wealthy, aristocratic, drunken social nabob, Jimmie. Not the kind of a girl who will cash in on her break and stick Jimmie's family for a lot of money, she tries to give him the air, but Jimmie refuses to be permanently aired. When his pal Jack seeks to win Mary, Jimmie resents it in humorous and dramatic fashion. Of course, he is to be married to a swell of his own class and Mary gets a Reno divorce, but a baby arrives and with the effective assistance of hard-boiled Nellie, Mary and Jimmie are brought together again.

A good title, permitting lots of interest-creating showmanship, should be the means of creating audience curiosity in this picture, which fine acting and unusually clever direction have transformed into much better than ordinary entertainment.

While the story is essentially a light dramatic-romance, there is a continuous flow of clever comedy, in both dialogue and action.

Smart showmanship will be the means of bringing you unanticipated business. It has plenty to hold the interest of both men and women, and, which is unusual in such a case, it is also a bit of screen fare that will amuse all but the youngest youngsters.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Lawyer Man

(First National)

Drama

With continuous suspense as its outstanding characteristic, "Lawyer Man" is exciting, interesting, uptodate drama. Produced in semi-episodic fashion, it details the hectic career of Anton, a wily, ambitious, sometimes ruthless, occasionally careless, but always human lawyer. In the beginning, he is the quick-witted defender of smalltime crooks, and always seems to have the argument that squares them with the law. His many successful cases win him a reputation and the money that enables him to move from dingy to classy quarters and to become the big shot advisor of big timers who want to break the law yet keep clear of its penalties. Then he gets too big, turns on the men who have really made him, and is disbarred, only to resume his practise back where he started, after pulling a fast one on the men who made and broke him.

Breaths of realism are injected by the use of some wellknown court cases as the stepping stones which Anton used in his upward climb. But beside these, the conception of the story is modern and deals with material which the rank and file of audiences understands. The series of anti-climaxes that thrust Anton into fame and power are vividly dramatic and the human interest insures clear coherence. In handling his role, Powell makes good the promise he showed in such pictures as "High Pressure" and "The Gem Robbery," that comedy parts are not unsuited to his talents. His clever handling of both dialogue and action give the picture sparkle.

Smart handling of the title and the two lead names should create interest. It would be well to include plenty of hints of the brilliant dialogue in your advance announcements. Get over the idea that this is a light, laughable drama, in which there is packed a powerful human interest wallop, and the adults of both sexes will find plenty to enjoy in "Lawyer Man."

Possibilities for special showmanship and exploitation are not very great, but if you know how to prepare an intriguing newspaper and within-your-own theatre advance campaign, chances are that this picture will do some real business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

(Allied)

Drama with Comedy

In presenting this story, which details the single-handed struggle of a motor cop to prove that his brother officer was not the victim of an accident but was deliberately murdered, the producers offer a feature that includes drama, romance, tinges of human interest comedy, more than the usual amount of suspense and quite a bit of thrilling action.

Portrayed against a background of an influence-ridden police department, it is neither a sugary tribute to honest police officers nor a condemnation of forces that sometimes hamstring them. Rather it succeeds in being a piece of entertainment distinctly of the family type.

Built apparently with the idea of making suspense predominate, the picture shows some of the routine of a couple of motor cops. There's the happy little family, Sandy, Tom, Granny and the two kids, Buddy and Sammy. There is a fatal accident. Tom is consigned to the sticks for a courtroom outburst when he expresses the opinion that those responsible for the accident, Doris and Blake, are being whitewashed. Doris breaks down and confesses to Tom and the Chief that she committed perjury. The fear of the big guns in the department to retrace their steps is followed by Tom's dramatic turning in of his badge and threat to blast the department wide open. The Chief decides to buck the sinister controlling forces, whereupon comes a cleaning up of Trixi's elaborate gambling salon and the showing up of the double crossing Blake and his eventual death.

There are occasional bits of slowness, but speed is in general characteristic of the complete picture—particularly the thrilling motorcycle-auto chase at the start and the roof-top fight just before the finish.

Two juvenile actors, Mickey McGuire and Jackie Searle help make "Officer 13" of more than usual appeal to youngsters.

Both in title and theme, the picture lends itself readily to tieups with local police departments. Shying away from high heroics, the story illustrates many of the things that motor cops, especially, are up against while going about their daily work. In addition to theme, there should be proper exploitation of the two leading names, Monte Blue and Lila Lee.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

That's My Boy

(Columbia)

Drama

Gridiron timeliness becomes automatically the chief attention focusing point of this football picture, which attacks the virtual subsidization of players by alumni and officials of colleges ambitious for gridiron honors for the alma mater.

Richard Cromwell is the much-publicized phenomenon, Dorothy Jordan the girl in the case, Mae Marsh, the boy's small town mother. Various stars of the Southern California team are seen in the dressing room between the halves, at practice and during a big game. Incidentally, closeups of Cromwell running with the ball show him minus a headgear in all his play; immediately preceding, stock shots of the team lined up show all backfield players with headgear. This of course constituted only a minor slip of direction, but it is nonetheless noticeable.

The three leading names in the cast provide the best marquee material, though the others of the lengthy case are competent, including one or two standby players. The most satisfactory selling angle for the exhibitor will be the expose, so to speak, of the manner in which colleges make possible the continuous playing of able football stars, even, as in this case, when the individual is forced to work his way through college, ordinarily having no time for such light diversion as football. Indicate for best effect that the picture tells how the boy's life is guarded, guided and harnessed to the great god football.

Cromwell comes from the small town to Thorpe College, planning to earn his way to a profession as a doctor. Accidentally it is learned that he is a brilliant broken-field runner, and from then on he is provided with jobs which pay well for no work, and as a player is the sensation of the nation. He meets the girl, falls in love with her. Given a tip as to what is to come after college days are over, Cromwell seeks to be paid for his playing and a stock company is formed to net him money. It fails, due to the gambling of the promoter, and the investors' money is lost. The girl's father offers to pay him to leave her; he demands $100,000 to reimburse investors. The misunderstood story comes out on the eve of the big game, his name is anathema, but he plays. Suddenly the truth is discovered, via newspapers rushed to the field, and Cromwell wins the game for old Thorpe and the girl, and regains public esteem.

It is melodramatic, not particularly effective in many ways, but should succeed fairly well by reason of its unquestioned timeliness on the one hand and its attack on an alleged evil of football which is often conspicuously on the pages of the newspapers and not always on the sporting pages, either. If it stirs controversy, so much the better for the box office.—Aaronson, New York.

False Faces

(World Wide)

Drama

Lowell Sherman, directing and starring in "False Faces," becomes the focal point of the selling of the picture with respect to cast possibilities. In the role of the doctor who is ousted from a New York hospital for unethical practice, and who establishes himself in Chicago as a specialist in plastic surgery, with which he is totally unfamiliar, Sherman does well. His role is almost wholly unsympathetic, yet he contrives actually to make himself almost a likeable personality.

The story concerns quackery in the honorable profession of medicine, with Sherman as chief quack, charlatan and virtually a criminal for his vicious malpractice. He levies heavily upon the wealthy for his pseudo-skill, specializing in face lifting and the like. His attractive personality and physical handsomeness automatically sell him to women. Berton Churchill, supposedly a former reputable doctor, who is too fond of the bottle, is drawn into the scheme as a consulting physician of fictitious fame.

But Sherman's success goes to his head. A patient, near death, is saved by investigating doctors but her legs must be amputated. In court on charges of malpractice, Sherman apparently is beaten by the weight of evidence. Leading his own defense, he "sells" the jury and is acquitted. Bending over the wheel chair of the woman, Sherman offers assistance. She replies with a shot which kills him.

Briefly, then, here is a story of professional treachery which, as such, offers an opportunity for the exhibitor to sell the picture along what might be described as "righteous" lines. The various and sundry love affairs of Sherman, with nurses, secretaries, patients, afford incidental complications, with the climax of the first love betraying his whereabouts to the police as he tries to escape the city immediately prior to his trial. Peggy Shannon and Lila Lee are the principal amours of the doctor. The cast contains several dependable, well known names.

It might be well to indicate that Lowell Sherman performs well in an entirely unsympathetic role, that the picture exposes the dangers of trusting too fully the socalled specialist in certain surgery unless the patient be certain of his competence. It is in the nature of an indictment of unethical practice of medicine and the exploitation of a phase of it for illicit gain by a person of questionable character.

The film is fair entertainment of the dramatic type, with little comedy for relief. Its chief strength lies in the portrayal by Sherman. Around him and the subject matter the selling of the picture should be concentrated. There is nothing here for children, obviously.—AARONSON, New York.

With Williamson beneath the Sea

(Principal)

Undersea Expedition

Captain J. E. Williamson, undersea authority and explorer, descends to the floor of the teeming sea adjacent to the island of Nassau, in the miraculous chamber invented by his father and perfected by himself, and the theatre audience descends with him. His wife and infant offspring beside him, Captain Williamson sketches, makes notes, still-photographs while the life of the depths goes on before his window in apparently undisturbed movement.

The result becomes a highly interesting, entertaining and wholly noteworthy motion picture subject, however much it may necessarily be classed among travelogues or expedition films. Its feature length does not pall in the slightest degree, particularly by reason of the fact that the film has been divided into two separate parts, the first concentrating on efforts of Williamson to record what he sees from the scientific standpoint and at the same time to gather certain noteworthy specimens of coral undersea formation for shipment to the Field Museum in Chicago. Indicated pictorially and with an element of interest are the problems involved in safely raising these specimens, bringing them to shore, crating and shipping them undamaged.

The second phase of the picture concerns the drama, thrill and heady danger which continuously confronts the diver, searching the ocean's floor for sunken treasure in the stark wreckage of ships long since departed to Davy Jones' locker. An encounter with a giant octopus lends much in the way of drama. In the earlier section are several sequences, reputed to be the first undersea films made in natural color, which are extremely effective.

The exhibitor, in offering this picture, has more than a travelogue to sell. In the first instance he has the opportunity of ballyhooing from lobby and marquee with divers' equipment and the like, as well as general decoration representing a sea floor, which should attract considerable pedestrian attention. Also a fine selling point is the inclusion of the color sequences, unquestionably excellent, which may readily be sold as the first of their kind. Salable particularly are the scenes of the divers, and the drama of the encounter with the octopus, the instance of the diver caught in treacherous quicksand covering portions of the ocean floor.

Finally, the exhibitor has the splendid possibility of the general theme on which to elaborate. Man penetrating to the uttermost depths of the sea, resting in comfort and civilian clothes, noting what goes on about him. It is almost the reality of the Jules Verne fictional dream, more impressive than the submarine. This should lead to important and valuable school tieups, and is the type of picture to which, as something different from regular screen entertainment, the exhibitor may call the attention of the entire family—AARONSON, New York.

Distributed by Principal. Direction narrative and photography by Captain J. E. Williamson. Release date, November 24, 1932. Running time, 59 minutes.

The Night Mayor

(Columbia)

Drama

The contribution of the emphatic, dynamic Lee Tracy raises this production into a class where it should be counted upon for a reasonable result at the box office, however much it may fail to establish records. As a chief executive of a considerable metropolis with a flair for the "finer" things in life, including wine, women and song, a man to whom a new musical show ballet is more important than a revised budget, Tracy presents a performance filled with vim, vigor and his customary bounding vitality.

There is obviously no mistaking the New York personage who is supposed to be portrayed by Tracy. This becomes a strong selling angle, of course, but at the same time it requires something in the nature of delicacy in treatment. Tracy is ably supported by Eugene Pallette, his political henchman extraordinary; Evalyn Knapp, the show girl for whom he tumbles without reservation; Warren Hymer, his gun-toting and loyal valet, who calls him "pal"; Donald Dillaway, young reporter in love with Miss Knapp, who becomes the center of the complications. Vince Barbett as the accented tailor to the mayor supplies considerable of the attendant amusement.

For the marquee, then, the exhibitor has Tracy, already established firmly as a screen personage of a type and versatility at the same time; Miss Knapp, attractive; Pallette, known and dependable.

Offer this film as entertainment, without becoming too serious about it all. Depend to a great extent upon Lee Tracy's work and build the selling about him and his portrayal. The picture can do the juvenile no harm, though he probably will remain rather calm throughout.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story by Sam Marx. Adaptation by Gertrude Purcell. Directed by Ben Stoloff. Release date, August 19, 1932. Running time, 68 minutes.

SHORTS

The Dentist

(Mack Sennett)

Funny

It is only after the very absent-minded W. C. Fields first indulges in a lot of smart gab with Babe Kane, then wrestles around with a cake of ice and plays a golf game strikingly reminiscent of his Ziegfeld "Follies" acts, that this grand comedy gets into his dentistry office. It reaches its best when Fields tends to the dental requirements of two feminine patients. A wrestling match tooth extraction gag is provocative of laughs and a final adventure is with a heavily whiskered man, upon whom Fields uses a stethoscope to find his mouth and brings a shotgun into use when he flushes a covey of birds from the bushels of hair. Fine dialogue is delivered in the typical Fields fashion.—Running time, 20 minutes.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Kids' Last Fight

Baby Star Laughs

The diapered baby stars burlesque the big fight pictures, and their antics create plenty of laughs. Diaper Dampsey, defending his ring championship, is disheartened when gangsters abduct his sweetheart, and he goes forth to battle with a heavy heart.

He is taking a sweet beating until his manager sends a dog to find Shirley. She arrives at the ringside at the same time as a truckload of diapers, Dampsey underneath the pile. One look at her and he hops on top of the pile and k. o.'s his rival.

All the hullabaloo of a big fight is there—radio announcers, newspaper headlines, big betting, a packed arena and plenty of excitement. The picture lacks some of the glamour of the previous Baby Star series, but makes up for that with more than the required number of laughs. It's good entertainment for the kids and should hand adults plenty of fun. Running time, 9 minutes.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Lease Breakers

(Vitaphone)

Diverting

In order to break the lease, an apartment house dweller conceives the notion of making so much noise that the landlord will be forced to throw him out. That provides the excuse for the rendition by a band and numerous solo artists, including the rotund but pleasant voiced Aunt Jemima, of several musical numbers and performance of an eccentric dancer, a tight-wire walker and others. The landlord finds the attraction fills his house and offers the tenant a monthly sum to remain. The short, musically diverting, is entertaining, the individual performances good.—Running time, 9 minutes.

A Pilgrimage Through Palestine

(Central Films)

Good

This travelogue of Palestine and other historic places in the Holy Land is interestingly presented and includes a number of excellent pictorial shots. Although obviously designed for showing during the holiday season, its appeal should be sufficiently wide to make it a fairly good short subject at any time.—Running time, 10 minutes.

China Plate

(Columbia)

Amusing

An amusing number of the Silly Symphonies series, in which the Chinese boy and girl on the painted plate become divertingly animated and in best cartoon style are pursued first by the giant, then by the dragon. The boy saves the girl, while good synchronization and animated antics serve to offer a few light moments for any program.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Farmer Alfalfa's Birthday Party

Ordinary

This cannot be rated as much better than an ordinary cartoon subject, with the farmer treated to various and sundry falls and tumbles engineered by the animated animals who come to wish him well. Execution is standard but the idea is lacking in originality. Running time, 6 minutes.

HEARST AND BRISBANE PRAISE WARNER FILM

Urge Readers to See "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" to Arouse Opinion Against Prison Camp Brutality

William Randolph Hearst and Arthur Brisbane, editorial writer for the Hearst publications, see in Warner Brothers' "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" a medium for arousing public opinion against the prison camp system.

Writing from the Hearst ranch at San Simeon, Cal., Mr. Brisbane in his column "Today" quotes a letter from Mr. Hearst written to him before the picture was shown at the ranch, as follows:

"I wish everybody in this nation of ours could see 'I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang.'

"It is a most revealing and horrifying picture; a most amazing presentation of frightful conditions actually prevailing in certain parts of our country."

Hearst Cites Problem

Mr. Hearst asks:

"Why is it that our country is the most civilized in the world and the most uncivilized? Why is it that we are the most charitable people in the world in the matter of contributions and the most uncharitable in our attitude toward our erring brothers? Why is it that we have the best system of public education in the world and the largest proportion of illiterates of any civilized nation?

"Why is it that we are always sentimentally concerned about the unfortunates in foreign lands and callously indifferent to those who suffer from cruelty and injustice among our own people?

"Why do we so often fall so far short of the fine principles we profess and the high ideals we are supposed to hold?

"Some cynic has said 'How I could love my country if it were not for my countrymen.'

"What is the matter with our countrymen and ourselves?

"Is our country too big for us? Is our task too great for our capacity for self-government?"

Screen Best Agency

Mr. Brisbane, in his comment, points to the screen as the most effective agency for placing such a problem before the people. He says:

"Effective protest against social injustice and cruelty has been made in printed books. Everyone remembers Charles Dickens' powerful attacks on schools cruelly managed, and the infamous debtors' prison, Victor Hugo's 'L'Homme Qui Rit,' and Zola's more recent writings on the Dreyfus case.

"The moving picture more powerfully and effectively than any other agency will work against brutality, by actually enabling millions to SEE IT, instead of merely reading it. What men see, with their own eyes, or the eye of the camera, influences them most powerfully."

This, he says, is proved in the Warner picture, adding:

"It shows the unbelievable cruelties of a system under which helpless men are exploited for profit, in chain gangs, the tortures in prison camps, the deliberate and hideous brutality of keepers, debased by the exercise of ruthless power. It is not a pleasant picture, but every man at least should see it."

"You should see this picture," Mr. Brisbane tells his readers, "advise other men to see it, and thus help to arouse public opinion against a shameful prison system that exploits miserable criminals for private profit, and pushes vindictive torture even to murder."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended November 26, 1932, reached $1,441,874, from 116 houses in 20 major cities, which compares with an aggregate of $1,521,049 from 116 theatres in 20 cities for the preceding calendar week, ended November 19. A consequent decrease of $79,175 is therefore indicated. During the more recent seven-day period the compilation shows no new high individual house records and six new low individual figures. This compares with no new "highs" and seven new "lows" for the previous week.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Shawnee, Okla.

DEAR HERALD:

The day we got to Shawnee one of the principal banks closed its doors, and we didn't have a thing to do with it.

Shawnee has four theatres—the Bison, managed by A. J. Hornbeck, the Criterion, Roy Williams, the Liberty, Mr. Momans, and the Ritz, managed by J. Jones. We had a delightful visit with Mr. Hornbeck and Mr. Williams but Mr. Momans was out of the City and we did not get to meet him. Mr. Jones was confined to his home by sickness but we met his son and daughter, two very delightful young people.

Harry Lowenstein of the Ritz and Palace at Ardmore is one of Oklahoma's prominent theatremen. He has been purveying entertainment for those Sooners so long that the community has come to regard him as its mainstay.

Nothing but the best that Hollywood can offer has any inducement for Harry. He picks 'em like a monkey picks fleas, and Ardmore folks never question his entertainment, they know it will be good anyhow. That's the kind of a theatreman Harry is, and further than that he's a swell chap.

Ollie Brownlee operates the Sooner and University theatres at Norman. Ollie is a hot number. He gets up every morning after having been up the night before, and the flash he puts up in front of the Sooner and University is the reason why so many Norman folks have weak eyes.

Norman is where the state University is located. We told Ollie to bet both theatres on the Cornhuskers in their big football game and make himself some easy money, but he hadn't been familiar with our judgment long enough to have the proper amount of confidence in us. Ollie is a swell fellow but he's too suspicious.

We met the lady who operates Norman's third theatre and she showed us every courtesy. As we recall the name now, it is Mrs. Berry, but whether that is right or wrong it doesn't matter so much because she was certainly very nice to us and we won't soon forget it.

Gerald Stettmund of the H. & S. theatre at Chandler doesn't seem to be able to break himself of some very bad traits. When he was a boy he put in more time playing marbles on Sunday than he did going to Sunday school. He threatens to write the HERALD and give the readers the lowdown on our conduct, and we want to warn them in advance. Don't you believe a word he says, fur 'taint so, no matter what he says.

His wife told us in confidence that her whole life had been wasted in trying to get him to tell the truth and that she had given it up as a bad job. Poor woman, we felt sorry for her, for she's a lovely lady. As we said before, don't you take any stock in what that guy tells you. He told us that he could get more information out of a sale bill than he could out of the HERALD and then he handed over the wherewithal for a two year renewal to the HERALD. That's the kind of a guy he is.

H. A. Walling of the Princess theatre at Bristow is another of Oklahoma's oldtime theatremen. H. A. has two theatres in Bristow, one of which he operates only on Saturday and Sunday. Bristow is a right snappy town and the Princess is a very beautiful theatre, and with H. A. as manager we could see nothing lacking to meet all the entertainment requirements of Bristow. This is the center of the pecan industry and it is bringing considerable revenue to Bristow.

Speedy Moulder has taken over the Criterion at Sapulpa which was formerly operated by James Zartaludis. Mr. Moulder also operates the Empress and Mr. Zartaludis operates the Yale. Both of these gentlemen claim business is very bad but the tendency is toward improvement.

J. P. Shipley operates the Yale and C. O. Fulgham operates the Orpheum at Okmulgee. Both of these houses are in the Griffith Circuit and Mr. Fulgham is also district manager for several of the Griffith houses throughout northeastern Oklahoma. We found both of these gentlemen very energetic and with a disposition to get for their houses every nickel possible, and we believe the Griffith brothers have made a wise choice in chosing these men to manage their business. In fact we have found all managers of the Griffith houses so far as we have gone to be rather above the average of circuit managers, which probably accounts for the success of the Griffith houses.

At Okmulgee we met Mrs. Humphrey, who operates a confectionery right next to the Orpheum theatre. Mrs. Humphrey is a sister of Charlie Murray and we told her she ought to be proud of it and she said she was.

A lot of you exhibitors have expressed a wish that you could find some kind of change-over device for your machines. Well, if you will consult the HERALD and Better Theatres you will find a device advertised by Ben Garros that we understand is giving perfect satisfaction and it might pay you to investigate this.

J. B. Terry operates the Paramount at Wewoka. Wewoka is right in the center of the oil field and the fact there is considerable activity at this time makes this an ideal spot for a theatre. We believe business is about as good there as in any spot we have found lately.

Durant has three theatres—the State and Ritz managed by T. M. Davidge and the Metro owned by J. B. Terry, who also owns the Paramount at Wewoka. These theatres can play all day Sunday but are not allowed to play Sunday nights.

There, what did we tell you. Our Cornhuskers trimmed the Sooners five to nothing, one field goal and a safety. That wasn't very much but it was plenty. They just can't beat those cornfed babies no way how they can fix it.

Next week we will be down in Texas pesticating around with the Longhorns. Hope they will treat us as nice as they always have.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

THE OTHER SIDE!

FOR THE BENEFIT OF those who are not their own bosses we respectfully dedicate this week's blurb, and, in order that the classification shall be clear we will explain the difference between the man who is his own boss and the man who works for others: One pays the losses himself, while the other merely furnishes the alibis.

This morning we tackled the mail from an entirely different point of view. Instead of concentrating on exploitation and advertising we sought comment about manager-boss relations, (No, I don't mean relatives). The crop was particularly fruitful and yielded some swell copy for my purpose.

"THE BOSS, OF LATE, does not seem himself. . . . He is constantly finding fault . . . picking on little things and in general trying to emulate the moguls of the circuits . . . can't figure out what's got into him,"—is the way one manager complains. Another tells us, " . . . Mr. Y is not a well man . . . he is jumpy and nervous and irritable . . . confided in me that money was very tight and asked that I stall the printer along for a while. . . ."

And so on, one after another we read direct or between the lines. And the circuits are not immune either. We are informed on excellent authority that many of the district and divisional managers are not the care-free, happy-go-lucky boys of yesterday. They too are human and they too have their problems.

LET'S TAKE A PEEP over the fence and see what's on the other side; the side where the bosses, the district managers and the big shots must wrestle with present day conditions.

We find Mr. Independent Theatre Owner trying to balance his profit and loss sheet with constantly mounting costs against rapidly dwindling receipts. His rent takes another automatic jump the first of the year and the landlord won't listen to arguments. Mr. I. T. O. has just come to realize that things are getting as bad as he suspected. Now he takes a different slant and looks closer into details that yesterday he was content to keep away from. He wants to know why carbons are not being used down to the last inch. Why a light was left burning down in the cellar last night. He is trying to practise economy to make up in some measure for his falling grosses.

IT IS ONLY IN THE little things that he can really hope to effect a saving because the rent goes on just the same, film costs in many situations have increased, payrolls have been chiselled as low as it is possible without losing employees he needs. Now he finds that had he kept a closer check on those petty cash items a few years back he might not be so hard up for money at this time.

So, the house manager finds him . . . " . . . constantly finding fault . . . etc." But we are wondering whether Mr. House Manager can begin to understand what it means to a man who has worked hard for many years to build up beautiful theatres and run them profitably, then to be faced with the possible loss of his life's work? And when that boss starts getting, "jumpy, nervous and irritable . . . ," do we stop to consider just why he is that way.

BUSINESS FALLING OFF, many compelled to cut admission prices, increasing attendance a major problem, foolish spending by managers a source of worry; managers who do not seem to know the value of a dollar or how to save a little here and there. These are all items that bring about that "irritable" condition referred to before.

Among the circuit bosses the worries are even more poignant. They are expected to efficiently operate theatres in the field while the H. O. is concentrating on decentralization. How can they operate properly and be pleasant to the many managers when they, themselves, are a good deal worried about their own jobs, heavy operating expenses, tremendous economies to enforce from only the Lord knows where.

WHAT WE WOULD SUGGEST to managers everywhere is, whenever your boss starts riding you make sure of several things before starting to complain. First: if it is about thirty or forty cents on the petty cash statement, did you HAVE to spend it? Second: have you been doing your durndest to keep that overhead down to bed-rock? Third: are you sufficiently aware of your particular theatre's profit and loss statement so as to know just how bad, or good, it is? And, of course, to be guided accordingly?

If house managers think they have worries they ought to learn a little about the boys on the other side of the fence. At least, if the theatre you are running is deep in the red, the house manager is not paying the losses, it's the boss, and any guy game enough to carry on against present day grosses deserves the right to be crabby once in a while. Don't be saps; bosses are human too. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Thanks to Jay Guthrie's suggestion, Dick was able to illustrate this really funny incident. Now, how about a few hundred of you other Kirschbaum boosters coming through with a couple of Lobby Laff ideas?

LOCAL POST OFFICE HELPED FRED REETHS PUT OVER "AIR MAIL"

Figure out for yourselves how many people approach or pass mail boxes in the course of a day and then let's all agree that a tie-up with the post office for the placing of a good-sized card hanger on the boxes, as recently effected by Fred Reeths, Jr., manager of the Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., was a corking method for obtaining extensive circulation of his message on "Air Mail."

The card, printed in red and blue ink, read: "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early—Use The AIR MAIL—See 'Air Mail' (dates) (theatre)—It's The Screen's Greatest Air Thriller."

Not only were the cards tied to all mail boxes and hung up in the main post office and all sub-stations but were posted throughout the business section and the best windows in town. A timely card, neatly made up and not too large, sold the authorities.

We hope this gag of Fred's reaches others in time for the Xmas season for it looks like a winner. At any rate we're shooting it out pronto.

Orlove Gets First Runs

Word comes to the Club that Louis "Eagle" Orlove, manager of the Modjeska Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is now on a first run policy in his South Side of the town. One gag he used to advertise this fact was to distribute a flock of heralds headed "Hot News." These were burned in ragged edge on all sides. The newspaper also came through with an excellent story on the change, photo of smilin' Louis to boot.

No Change in Miami

It was recently announced by the E. J. Sparks Theatre Circuit, which has taken over a number of Publix houses in Florida, that Ernest Morrison, east coast manager, and W. H. McKoy, city manager in Miami, will carry on. R. C. Speece will continue as city manager in West Palm Beach.

BILL WHYTE IN FULL STRIDE AT CAPITOL THEATRE, RIVERHEAD

The weak-fishing season may be all over down in Riverhead, L. I., N. Y., but showbusiness is in full swing, according to some information we have at hand concerning the activities of William H. Whyte, manager of the Capitol Theatre there.

Take Hallowe'en eve, for instance, when Bill and the city supervisor entered into a conspiracy to keep the kiddies off the streets and prevent as much property damage as possible by inviting a host of them to the theatre for a big party. Over 500 of the youngsters gathered in front of the local fire department's headquarters and led by an escort of motorcycle police, Bill Whyte and Edward Carpenter, paraded to the theatre carrying banners that proclaimed to thousands of pedestrians and passengers in autos that the big event was in order for the evening. At the theatre the kids marched across the stage and were judged by a committee made up of local citizens for best costumes. Naturally, a lot of parents were in the audience that night.

We also note that a herald suggested by Whyte to use with a tie-up made with a large bakery concern adopted by the Prudential main office to exploit "Movie Crazy." This was headed "It's the Smile That Wins." Underneath appeared a photo of Harold Lloyd and copy to effect that both product of the baker and the film would keep people "smilin' the whole day through and to watch for Lloyd at the nearest Prudential house."

We are fully aware that Bill Whyte didn't lose any good will with his Hallowe'en party and it was a feather in his cap for the home office to recognize out of several others his suggestion for the Lloyd herald. We also know he'll continue the good work and will be on watch for more news.

XMAS ATMOSPHERE IN THE LOBBY

The above photo represents an attractive Xmas lobby display fashioned by Jack Greiner, art director of Warner Bros. theatres in Atlantic City, N. J. Note that Jack didn't miss much in the way of Xmas spirit—winter scene of little hamlet in the hills, Santa and his sled and reindeer, etc. Need we state that it occasioned a lot of enthusiastic comment from patrons?

PAUL GLASE THINKS HIS NEW STYLE GIFT NITE A GREAT STUNT

After trying out something different in Gift Nites over a period of 29 consecutive nights and finding it a most effective means of building up an off Friday, Paul Glase, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Reading, Pa., became so enthused about the gag that he thinks his fellow members ought to be let in on it.

When we disclose that it is the Barrel of Fun gag that's been packing Friday nights for Glase—don't move away, fellows, for it's not the old Barrel of Fun gag you have in mind. This one has been garnished with the additional feature of a man by name of Livingston, and it's none other than Livingston who provides the kick to the occasion.

As near as we can find out, when these nights are in progress it's his personality, wise-cracks, etc., that put them over in a big way. When a member of the audience steps up on the stage it's the way the stunt is handled that puts it across.

Round Table headquarters is not a booking office, nor is Paul Glase a booking agent, but we're sure that Paul will gladly furnish additional information to any other Club member who is desirous of finding out more about the gag and we'll also do our level best to supply additional details that may come to our attention. The best we can state right now is that Paul recommends this particular style of Gift Nite 100 per cent and backs it up with his experience over a 29 week period. The accompanying photo shows how the front was dressed to advertise the event.

SHEWELL USED CARD GAG TO CAMPAIGN A POLITICAL PICTURE

A little card gag had 'em all het-up—even the politicians were asking for them, according to a report from Cambridge, Ohio, where George Shewell manages the Cort Theatre.

It had to do with "Phantom President," and was headed, "Vote For The Phantom President—Here's The Platform: A Seat For Every Pair of Pants—Short Skirts For The Statue of Liberty—Two Hambergers In Every Bun—Two Dimes For Every Nickel." Cast, name of theatre and playdates followed.

Cost of the cards was negligible, and the public eagerly snapped them up, according to George. True, the presidential election is all over now, but the picture is still plenty in evidence in all neighborhoods at this writing.

HARRY SIEGEL SET UP FINE WINDOW DISPLAY FOR "BLESSED EVENT"

Storks, make-believe babies and other gadgets associated with the title "Blessed Event" were used by Harry Siegel, manager of the Family Theatre, Scranton, Pa., to make up a smart window display when he played that picture.

In a store adjoining his theatre two large storks with dolls suspended from their bills were set up at either end of the window. The rest of the display included a number of dolls in bassinets, cribs, swings and a miniature folding bath tub. Copy on picture was done in good size, brilliant lettering on a white half-cloud cut-out board at the back of the window.

Siegel's window attracted a lot of attention and cost but little to make-up. The dolls and window were obtained for a few passes and he's passing the idea along for others to use. Let's see some more of your work, Harry.

BEN COHEN TOLD 'EM ALL SCHOOLS WOULD BE CLOSED "ON SATURDAY"

Coming to Springfield, Mass., from Hazleton, Pa., it was only natural that Ben Cohen, manager of the Broadway Theatre in the former city, should spring one of his Pennsylvania gags on unsuspecting New Englanders.

We refer to a herald he issued on occasion of appearance of Scooter Lowry, p.a.—labeled tough guy of Our Gang fame, which was headed: "Hey Fellas! All Springfield Schools Will Be Closed When Scooter Lowry Comes In Person To The Broadway Theatre for Four Days—You've Guessed It! Scooter Comes To The Broadway On Saturday," etc., etc. The same gag was good for a write-up in the local paper.

We also note that Ben, since his arrival in Springfield, as is his wont, has cultivated quite an extensive acquaintance among local merchants; that is, to the extent of selling them the idea of splitting space in a good-sized cooperative ad on the strength of vaudeville being added to the Broadway. Approximately 15 merchants expressed their approval of the change of policy via a paid ad, of which Ben stole the better portion.

Okay, Benjamin; to all appearances you have found your way 'round Springfield and are getting along without the assistance of a cane. Keep up the good work and report regularly to Club headquarters. All your old friends down in Pa. will want to know what you are doing and you can save a lot of postage this way. Righto?

WE OFTEN WONDER!

By LOU SYLVESTER

—and Lou Sylvester is not the only one who "wonders" about the same thing. "A bus-man's holiday" would be a swell caption in case you want to change it. Now we would like to hear from some of the managers as to how they really do spend their day off.

BARRETT AND ENOCH CELEBRATE THE FIRST STRAND ANNIVERSARY

Anniversary Week, ballyhoos and a number of other stunts have recently engaged the attention of P. W. Barrett, manager of the Strand Theatre, Parkersburg, W. Va., and his enterprising director of publicity, Bob Enoch, scion of the Long Island and Pennsylvania Enochs.

Let's see what this pair of showmen did to exploit the Strand's First Anniversary.

According to a photograph at hand, a small reproduction of which you may see herewith, a 300-pound birthday cake was promoted free of charge from a local baking company. The photo shows a replica of the big piece of pastry atop the marquee, while another shot shows the original cake reposing on a lobby table, flanked with a frame containing congratulatory telegrams from various well-wishers. A small card gave credit to the baker for his cooperation.

Not content with the promotion of a mammoth cake the resourceful Mr. Enoch went out among local merchants and put over a page of co-operative ads, which, we must admit, was practically stolen, as to space, by the Strand's Anniversary and current attractions. The head and margins fairly reeked with "First Strand-Publix Anniversary" captions and all the smaller ads offered "congratulations for your birthday." Bob certainly has them acting like a lot of trained seals down his way, no fooling.

As to ballyhoos, observe the old hack that they dug up to plug "Vanishing Frontier." That old coach and the pair of Jennies also cost the theatre nothing and was on the streets all day. Another gag put over in connection with this picture was an invitation to the Boy Scouts of Parkersburg to be guests of the theatre and the appreciative troop paraded down the main street with a banner reading, "We Are Going to See Vanishing Frontier."

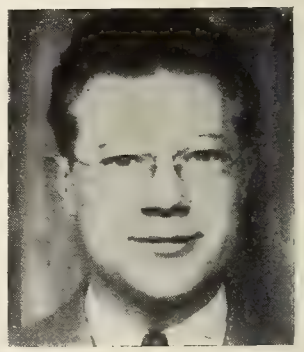
Returning to the subject of Anniversary Week, we note that a gold and silver pass was given to those who sent in the best letter on "What the Strand Theatre Means to Me," the same gag that Bob and Bill Levey put over when they had their heads together over at the Beacon Theatre, Port Washington, L. I., N. Y. According to the newspaper ad everybody was eligible to enter the letter contest and the gold pass called for six months and the silver for three months. Over 300 letters were received.

Continued success to you and your boss, Manager Barrett, and don't forget to keep in touch with headquarters. We note that you are also putting over your usual quota of attractive, no-cost co-op ads among the merchants. Nice work!

PETE EGAN IS ALL SET FOR THE WINTER SEASON IN CALGARY

A tear sheet from a Calgary, Canada, newspaper informs us via streamer head that the Palace Theatre there, managed by the well known Pete Egan, is all prepared for the winter season.

A two-column head started off a story on the Palace's policy for the new season and other columns carried notes on coming attractions and studio items for the fans. In addition to the large streamer head the Palace got away with a large display ad for the current show. The balance of the page was devoted to merchants' ads and a two-column box advised patrons to tear out the page and carry it with them when doing their day's downtown shopping, so that they might participate in a give-away of several pairs of tickets in each store listed. It was necessary to have the tear sheet along when applying for the tickets.



It's easy to see from the above that Round Tabler Pete Egan is still hitting the ball his regular wallop in behalf of the Palace and we must admit his co-op page is good-looking. His work is always interesting and we'll be on watch for further examples.

Bixby at Lawrence, Mass.

Fred L. Bixby, formerly manager of the Kameo Theatre, Pittsfield, was recently appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Lawrence, Mass. He is a seasoned showman and has held a number of important managerial posts. His presence in Lawrence will materially strengthen our Club's staff of correspondents in that city. We'll be telling you more about Fred's work in the near future.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

There's little doubt that Walter B. Garver worked his way up from the ranks in showbusiness, according to information we have at hand concerning this member of the Round Table Club.

Walter B. Garver

While attending the University of Minnesota and working spare time as night cleaner in the Paramount Theatre, St. Paul, a tragic circumstance turned him from study after spending two years in the university and forced his attention to the immediate problem of providing a livelihood. He was placed in charge of theatre cleaning, later made treasurer of the Paramount, and subsequently became assistant manager of the Tower Theatre, also in St. Paul. Following that assignment he was appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, St. Paul.

Garver was born in Hetland, South Dakota, and in addition to the time he put in at the University of Minnesota received education at public and high schools in Sioux Falls, S. D. He has stuck with Publix ever since he began his career and thinks that showmanship is largely instinctive, asserting itself regardless of profession. He advises us he's in the game for keeps.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Meeting an Emergency with Some Fast Thinking.

DAVIS ISSUED NOVEL HERALD TO PUT OVER "PROSPERITY" ANGLE

Immediately following the last election, F. W. Davis, manager of the Alva Theatre, Morgantown, N. C., issued a novel and effective herald in behalf of "Pack Up Your Troubles," which proved an appropriate title for a post-election offering.

This herald was headed "Happy Days Are Here Again." Followed, "Election's Over!—The Fighting Has Just Finished—Armistice Has Been Declared!—Prosperity Is Here—So—Pack Up Your Troubles—In Your Old Soup Bowl And—Smile, Boy's, Smile!—With Laurel and Hardy." The herald was printed on pink stock and carried a cut of the two comedians.

Davis certainly was on the job with immediate release of his herald and the title of the picture was timely enough to attract plenty of attention. More news from Morgantown and Davis later, when he lets the Club know what other stunts he's pulling.

Newman Recuperating

Frank L. Newman, division manager for Fox-West Coast in the Pacific-Northwest is recuperating from the effects of a serious major operation. He is expected to return to his office about Dec. 1.

Cokain Coming East!

Following his resignation as publicity man for several Marion, Ind., theatres, Ralph Cokain leaves for Great Neck, L. I., N. Y., to assume a post with Skouras Bros.' Playhouse Theatre in that town.

He will work in the division under the direction of Cullem Espy and we hope he will soon be assigned to a house as manager. His past experience covered a wide field and should prove very valuable in his new post.

BILL BERGMANN IS DOING EFFECTIVE WORK FOR CIRCUIT

Some newspaper tear sheets, a special herald and several samples of weekly ads bear evidence of effective work by W. H. Bergmann, publicity and advertising director of Interstate Theatres, Omaha, Neb.

Here's a large display ad clipped from a Sunday edition of one of his city's leading newspapers, which goes to prove that a man can land free publicity if he goes after it. All this $72 ad cost Interstate was a short trailer and the first line in the ad which read: "You read it in the Bee-News—Now See Marion Davies and Robert Montgomery, etc, etc." Four out of town Interstate houses were listed as showing the attraction. It is claimed that this instance is the first whereby the paper tied in for an ad of this kind.

Next we have a herald, which not only proved the means of getting a new Indian serial under way, but materially added to the theatre mailing list. It stated that the circular and five cents, when signed by four adults in spaces reserved for names and addresses, would admit any child to see Jackie Cooper in "Divorce in the Family," and the new Indian serial "Last of the Mohicans." The herald also carried a cut of Jackie in character pose.

Bergmann's weekly ads for out-of-town houses are laid out in an attractive style and more will be taken up on this subject in a forthcoming issue. We are assembling as rapidly as possible a page of this type of ad for managers who are up against the problem of listing a number of attractions so that all stand out and examples of his work will be included. We're mighty glad to hear from Bill again and will look forward to hearing about other activities on the Interstate Circuit.

HYDE CRACKED BANK FOR A COOPERATIVE AD FOR HIS THEATRE

Silence over a period of several weeks from B. F. Hyde, manager of the Polk Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., and then up pops evidence of his handiwork in the form of a corking cooperative ad, which we are reproducing herewith.

This ad represented 40 inches of free space and was entirely paid for by the two banks credited in the small space at the bottom. The theme of the picture, "American Madness," appealed to the banking people and they came through in great shape. If the theatre didn't receive about 99 per cent of the space, then our eyes deceive us. Attractive displays were also allowed in each bank.

Nice work, Bolivar, and we're mighty glad to get a line on your activities again after such a long time. Bankers are tough nuts to crack for any cooperative advertising and it looks like a feather for the cap of Mr. Hyde. Maybe next time this Round Tabler will let his fellow Club members know what else is going on down around Midland Theatres.

Publix Booker Changes

A number of changes have been made in the Publix booking department headed by Leon Netter, which includes transfer of Phillip Seletsky, formerly booking for the Comerford and New England divisions, to the decentralized New England division; transfer of John Roberts of the home office to the Comerford division; J. J. Deitch to Des Moines, where he will take charge for that city and Omaha, and addition of Salt Lake City to the territory booked by Louis Notarius.

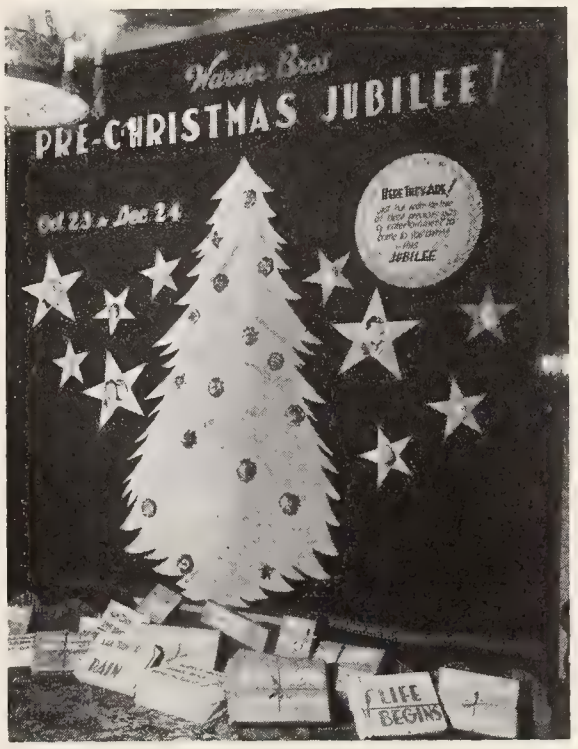
Furman Now With Loew

James C. Furman, who recently resigned his post as publicity man for Warner theatres in the New York City district, is now attached to Oscar Doob's Loew office and will handle the Jersey City zone. Lou Goldberg of the Warner home office has assumed Furman's old duties.

CHRISTMAS LIGHTING EFFECTS!

In the Better Theatres section of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of November 19th, there appeared a most interesting article by Francis M. Falge entitled: Lighting Effects That Reflect the Christmas Spirit.

In view of the close proximity of the coming holiday season we would direct your attention to that article and in it you will surely find some valuable suggestions to augment the many other Christmas stunts published in the Club section.



Lighting is a most important part of your decorative scheme and should command your attention. This refers to tree lighting effects as well as building front, lobby, etc. Many interesting arrangements can be worked out at a minimum of cost.

GEORGE DELIS GOES WITH A. G. CONSTANT THEATRE AT CANTON

George Delis, former manager of the Warner Theatre at Steubenville, has been appointed manager of the Palace, a house recently acquired in Canton, Ohio, by A. G. Constant, a veteran theatre man with holdings in Ohio and West Virginia. Associated with Constant is a group of local men. Reopening is set for December 4.

Delis managed the Steubenville house for Warners for the past three years and built up a fine record as a showman of high calibre. His present assignment is to a house considered the finest in Canton and we predict that forthcoming issues of this department will contain many interesting slants.

AN XMAS DISPLAY

Here is another clever Christmas display idea in which coming attractions, stars, etc., can be plugged via the decorations on the tree and the holiday boxes scattered at the bottom. The background, too, is important to further emphasize the general idea.

It is the work of R. A. Nomm, manager of the Sherman Theatre in Chillicothe, Ohio, and was originally worked out to stimulate interest in a Pre-Christmas Jubilee campaign which started quite a while before Christmas. So, if you're looking for another holiday display thought, here it is.

SILVERWATCH STILL BOOSTING TRADE BY MEANS OF NOVELTIES

Evidence before us in the form of numerous circulars, heralds, novelty cards, etc., discloses that the versatile Max Silverwatch, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waverly, Mass., is still pursuing his usual, effective efforts to stimulate trade at the box office. As he observes, new gags are hard to find; hence, the old ones have to be modernized.

Here's a neat little card, about the size used for business purposes, labeled up in the left hand corner: "For Rye, Scotch, Gin"; with the center portion devoted to, "Telephone—1706—And 'Speak Easily'; and on the lower right hand corner, "Ask For Buster Keaton or Schnozzle." Believe it or not, more than one thirsty townsman 'phoned the theatre for latest quotations from the beverage market.

Next, we have some attractive bookmarks gotten out to plug "Back Street," which were widely distributed in schools, book stores, libraries and at the theatre. These were of the conventional size and covered the entire current show.

Bargain Matinees and Linen Matinees also called for distribution of heralds in efforts to bid for the patronage of women and those economically inclined. We hear the linen stunt is coming along in fine shape, as it should with give-aways of worthwhile linens, blankets, toilet sets and other gifts attractive to the feminine eye. The bargain mats were held over a period of four weeks, during which time the admission was reduced from twenty-five to fifteen cents.

When planning his "Horsefeathers" show Max arranged with a market for a full window that turned out to be a great flash. During the campaign those who purchased two pounds of walnuts were given a pass to see the show. The passes were used up the first day the stunt was made public. A small snap-shot we have at hand, too faint to reproduce, is ample evidence, however, that the window was an attractive one.

Max has been one of the Club's best contributors of novelty cards, etc., and we've passed along his many gags from time to time. He'd like to know if any of the other fellows have a few new ones up their sleeves and, if so, asks that they shoot them in. So, heed his request, Round Tablers, and if you have some, get 'em off your chests.

Boosted "Apple Week"

Manager Maxwell of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Portland, Ore., made a hit with his patrons during National Apple Week by giving each a big Jonathan apple from prize orchards of the northwest.

MOSS' EXPLOITATION!

Smart Show-Selling a Feature of This Manager's Activities in Los Angeles First-Run!

PRIOR to leaving the RKO Orpheum Theatre, which he managed before his company relinquished control, to take a similar post at the RKO Hillstreet Theatre, another first run house, Richard Moss put over a well conducted campaign on "Hold 'Em Jail." The work was done under the guidance of Cliff Work, division manager, with Jack Daily, publicity man, assisting. Newspaper tie-ups, ballyhoos, give-aways, radio, splendid window displays and many other interesting angles featured the campaign.

On account of the football theme of this comedy, letters were sent to coaches of all teams of prominent schools, outlining the picture and suggesting that it was an excellent opportunity to put players in good humor before the season got under way.

Through a tie-up with the classified department of a leading local newspaper, three 3x10 ads gave prominent mention to the picture. Fully two-thirds of the space was stolen by the picture, with balance of announcement stating that seven-time advertisers in the department during that week would be entitled to two free tickets to the show. In addition to the ads, the paper instructed its staff of telephone girls, making approximately 600 calls each day, to mention the tie-ups. Announcement was also made over radio and through the classified sales organization of 150 people, making 4,500 calls per day.

A tie-up with another local newspaper brought out a parade of 200 newsboys who carried standards announcing the picture, etc., and marched to the theatre to attend the first Saturday morning show. In return for the party the paper ran a two-column piece of art and a two-column story on page 2 in the news section.

A tie-up made with a large department store netted a regulation collegiate football for give-away during the Saturday morning show, with the award made in the usaual fashion. This gag was announced by trailer and lobby card and footballs were displayed in both theatre lobby and department store. In addition to giving a demonstration of drop-kicking, a noted football player made award of the ball.

One of the photos shown here will convey a good idea of the jail built in the lobby to hold two "prisoners." The pair were former vaudeville entertainers and gave splendid impersonations of Wheeler and Woolsey. This attraction always had a good sized crowd hanging around.

Two other shots show the attractive front, with large cutout title letters, cutouts, stills and other displays, and one of the splendid window displays obtained in a big department store. The latter featured two large heads of the two comedians, football and sport toggery.

Additional exploitation included a tie-up with a chain cigar store, tying in the picture by poster with a new cigar; a special theatre party for the U. P. Railroad's local staff, a radio stunt of cash give-away for best wise-cracks; a street bally of man dressed as prisoner, with sign, "I've Escaped From Jail to See Wheeler and Woolsey"; sidewalk stencils; designation of "Laugh Week," with appropriate copy for lobby, newspapers, in ads, etc.; contact made with head of Women's Federation of Clubs in view of mention of picture as family fare on MOTION PICTURE HERALD's School Page; gratis distribution of 10,000 throwaways, one side to picture, one side to paper, and because of prison angle, invitations to Chief of Police and Sheriff to see opening of picture.

The comedy scheme was generally carried out in the lobby, with large figures and heads of Wheeler & Woolsey prominently displayed. A display that got a lot of attention was a board headed, "Why They Made the Team," showing a series of football players with comical reasons why they became players. A gag scoreboard was also built, with series of comedy scores, penalties, etc., and a phonograph with a laughing record kept the passing crowds chuckling.

Eleven foreign papers carried publicity on the picture in exchange for passes; four radio stations carried announcements in exchange for passes; five neighborhood newspapers and four hotels also came through with publicity for passes; 10,000 house programs were secured gratis, and a leading sports store window was obtained for display of a 22 by 28 with still.

Quite a campaign—most any one will admit and Dick certainly left his trademark on the Orpheum. By this time he's hard at it at the Hillstreet and we'll be on the watch for news of that house.

There's one other photo on this page that we haven't mentioned up till now and it concerns an attractive front made for "Bird of Paradise." No other data accompanied it and we're therefore at a loss to describe the selling campaign. However, the palms, life-size cutouts and other displays look mighty good.

PICTURE INSPIRED GEORGE MAHONEY TO TURN OUT A JINGLE

The spirit of the times inspired George Mahoney, Jr., manager of the Princess Theatre, Joliet, Ill., to turn out a jingle on a novelty card when exploiting "Strangers in Town," which were distributed in all hotels, cafes and railroad depots several days prior to opening. Just sing the following as you go along:

"If you are a resident or Stranger in Town—and old man depression is getting you down—the thing you need is a laugh or two—and this sour-faced grouch will say adieu.

"From the stroke of twelve this Friday noon—Chic Sale will raise your hopes anew—you'll get oodles of laughs and screams galore—when Beery and Hatton come 'cross the floor—charming Ann Dvorak is present, too—with David Manners as host for you."

More copy pertaining to the picture followed the above and a small portion—about one-quarter of an inch—at the bottom gave credit to a chain store concern and mentioned that Anniversary was being celebrated. Incidentally, the chain store outfit paid for printing and distributing of the cards.

Okay, George, and you may send along some more of your jingles any time the spirit moves you. A nice little "costless" deal, without a doubt, for which please accept congratulations from your fellow Club members. Let's hear from you again.

NEWSPAPER LAYOUTS

Vary Your Ads With Each Change of Program To Achieve the Best Results!

by R. D. LONG

RKO Theatres, Denver, Colo.

I HAVE been asked to write a short article about newspaper ad layouts. As space will not permit a comprehensive treatise on all principles of the subject, I will confine myself to a few words regarding the most important item to be considered when laying out an advertisement,—attracting attention.

Each picture shown by a theatre is necessarily different in theme and consequently it requires a different individual treatment for its advertising, and so to consistently follow the advice herein would be monotonous and impractical.

In varying your layouts with every new attraction you will find it difficult to construct them all without a fault. At times it is advisable to do what might be considered technically incorrect to get a weekly change in appearance.

Ads which are constantly before the public should always be kept fresh and snappy, for, as I have said, the outstanding function of any ad is to compel attention. Without this, of course, are lost most of the would-be readers. An ad not seen could not possibly be read. Emphatic atmosphere and eccentricities are frequently necessary regardless of their generalized taboo.

Ads Must Be Different!

Always strive to have your ad dominate the sheet and do not imitate your competitors.

Thick black borders, reverse lettering, and large sections of dark color certainly strike a discordant note and if these methods are used, you literally slap your public in the face with an irritating arrangement and build a resistance against the absorption of the message. Emphasizing the worthless black space isn't selling tickets. Some believe that the theatrical atmosphere an ad of this type conveys outweighs the faults, but, like black space, atmosphere doesn't sell many tickets.

As we all know, a region of quiet in the midst of uproarious surroundings is generally conspicuous and it is quiet white space properly handled that attracts and reduces personal resistance to a minimum. The primary contact is further strengthened by the artistic arrangement of the units of copy and illustration. It is the first flash of perception that either attracts or repels.

Grouping the Units!

The grouping of these units into an interesting pattern, alive and invigorating, not only helps to attract readers, but makes the message clearer, more quickly absorbed, more forceful and convincing.

White space is worthless if the condiments are monotonous in tone and disorganized, the static confusion will not allow the reader to follow through, and his eyes may jump to a competitor's ad with better construction that offers an optical refreshment.

In two column ads, space generally allows the units to be placed into an appealing symmetrical design. By symmetrical, I do not mean place all the copy in a thin panel centered in the allotted space, but to artistically arrange them so orderly with rhythm and harmony that a pleasing movement will result with a subtle force.

Watch Appearance!

Continuity of appearance should continue throughout the run of each attraction, white space as a media is sufficient to create enough atmosphere.

The distinctive grouping leaves obvious shaped white extremities to be considered as units unobtrusively attractive. Any odd shaped white space away from the ordinary horizontal and perpendicular lines made by the linotype are eye getters.

The title lettered in heavy letters makes an attractive eye getter when surrounded with white space and light grey copy. It is the same idea as a black spot in the center of white space.

One of R. D. Long's newspaper ads. Please note that Mr. Long practices what he preaches.

Many believe a border holds off competitors, but ads have a better chance to do their work out in the open. If borders are used, they should be irrelevant to the message emphasis; when they compete for attention irritation is bound to result. A border should not be complete, it needs openings to allow the reader to enter easily. A base border finishes the design, stops the eye flow and eliminates possible connection with the ad below.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Material pertaining to newspaper advertising is particularly desirable in the Club section due to the widespread interest in this form of showmanship. Others desiring to contribute articles dealing with this topic are invited to do so. We will feature any such material if found to be really outstanding or of an unusual nature. "CHICK"

LYKES ENGINEERED A FINE PERMANENT DISPLAY IN LOBBY

We are showing on this page a photograph of a new permanent display made for the Park Theatre, Cleveland, by Manager Jack Lykes before he was transferred to the Allen, another Loew house in the same city.

It was placed in front of an old fire place mantel in the inner lobby and built on a wooden platform measuring 4x12x18 feet. The background measured 8 feet in height and the two columns you may see at the right were 7 feet high by 2 feet in diameter, covered with orange and red corrugated paper. Another smaller column, measuring 4 feet high by 2 feet in diameter, was covered with hammered gold paper. In the center is the art-piece with caption on "Coming Attractions--7 Days—Starting Saturday."

The octagon-shaped column at the extreme left carried illuminated still in each panel and copy of coming attractions. This is made to revolve slowly by aid of an electric motor. This column is covered with bright red foil paper and makes a flashy eye-catcher that people passing through the lobby just can't miss.

Leaving the subject of lobby displays for the moment, we note that Jack recently issued heralds which stated that free Saturday morning tap dance classes were in force at the Park. Boys and girls from 4 up to 14 years of age were informed through this medium that the doors would be open at 10 A. M. and that instruction would be given by a local teacher. The heralds were distributed through the schools. By buying regular Saturday morning admissions to the theatre the youngsters are privileged to receive gratis the tap dancing lessons, witness the regular matinee and sit through the regular performance until 3 P. M., with a short intermission for lunch. The dancing teacher gives her services free of charge and receives in return publicity for her school and many prospective pupils.

Returning to Jack's permanent display, we like it on account of its flexibility, since the panels in the octagonal column and other current copy can all be easily changed from time to time; furthermore, it must have made a corking flash. His Saturday morning matinee and tap dance stunt, which is to run for ten consecutive weeks, we'll tell you more about at a later date when all returns are in, but it looks like a winner.

By the time this gets in type Jack Lykes will have found his way 'round the Allen and we'll be looking for news of what he is doing at that house.

BROWN LIKES AUTO BALLY TO BRING IN OUT-OF-TOWN TRADE

We'll have to accept the alibi made by H. J. Brown, manager of the New Capitol Theatre, Martin, Tenn., for non-appearance of his name among these pages the past several months. He says he's been busy, and that's good enough for us. To top it all off he was transferred from the Palace Theatre, Newbern, Tenn., to Martin, and his time has been pretty will taken up getting used to new surroundings.

However, the Brown mind has been functioning in the good old Brown way, as a couple of photos on this page will bear witness. The bally you see on "Down to Earth" was used very effectively over a radius of 55 miles and was constructed at small cost. The cutout in front and rear of the car is made of beaverboard and the sides were made of light wood, covered with sign cloth. The whole sign is fastened only to the front and rear bumpers, not touching the car nor interfering in the slightest with driver's vision.

There are only 4,750 people in Martin and Brown has to comb adjacent territory for what patronage he can get. Even with a tent show in town the week he played the Will Rogers film, he went out with his bally and packed the house both nights. Says they can't miss seeing it and that it is by far the best and most economical advertising stunt he has ever used to date. He enthusiastically recommends it for use in any small city.

The other small photo shows a cutout made for the Rogers film and used in the lobby one week in advance. This was turned out by Brown and Dorris Fowlkes at small cost and if you look closely we believe you will be able to see these two fellow Club members at either side of the big cutout.

We're mighty glad to hear from Brown again and now that he's again on the active list we'll be looking for a lot more news from his section of the country. We believe we can depend upon him to shoot along all worthwhile ideas because he's a dyed-in-the-wool Round Tabler and wants to help keep this department the livest one of its kind in showbusiness.

Big Four's Tie-Up

The Big Four Film Corporation has announced a national tie-up with Daisy Air Rifle for exploitation of a "Buzz Barton" model among the 12,000 or so company agents. Exchangemen, dealer and theatre manager will cooperate in arranging target shoots in lobby or other places, give-aways of the rifles and numerous other activities.

LESTER SMITH TIED IN NEATLY WITH FIRE CHIEF TO SELL FILM

Excellent returns were obtained by Lester Smith, manager of the Hippodrome Theatre, Warren, Ohio, when he played "Flames" by effecting a tie-up with the local fire department for a lobby display of fire-fighting apparatus and distribution of a unique herald.

The herald, printed in red ink on white stock, was headed in large type "Flames." Followed, "Friendly Suggestions from Fire Chief Oldacres; twenty hours a day your fire department is on the job to protect life and property; every man, woman or child is capable as an unofficial fire fighter by exercise of ordinary care"—and so on and so on in the same vein until the ending, which pointed out that the reader could learn what to do and what not to do by seeing "Flames." Try this one yourself.

MAX COOPER RATED 4TH AWARD ON "RED HEADED" CAMPAIGN

Among the recent announcements in this department of managers who won cash recognition from M-G-M for outstanding exploitation work in connection with "Red Headed Woman," we are glad to record that the 4th award was won by Max A. Cooper, manager of the Fox Theatre, in Hackensack, N. J.

He starts off his campaign two weeks in advance with a classified ad in the local paper for a red headed woman from 18 to 25 years of age for special exploitation work. It was specified that she resemble Jean Harlow.

Having found his red-head Max arranged to have her ride around town in an antique auto, which carried the necessary signs that tied up the theatre and the local paper with an identification stunt. The first person who happened to be carrying a copy of the paper when the red-head and her car stopped at a red traffic light was rewarded with a pass to the show.

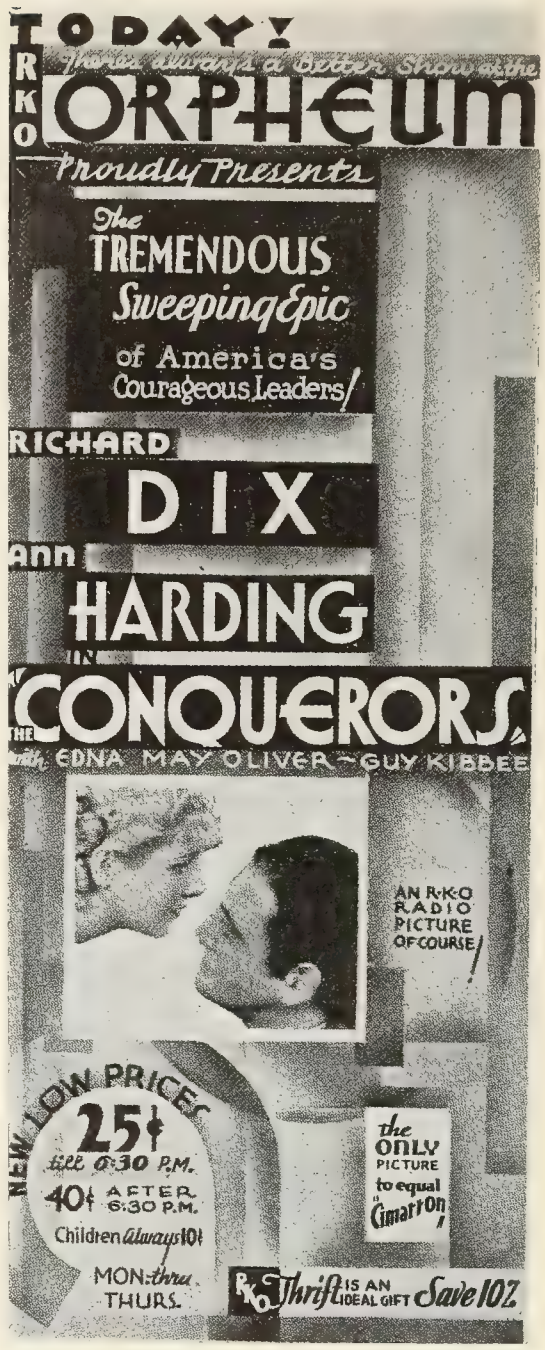
The car and its passenger also made a trip over the new Washington Bridge across the Hudson with the same gag and art and stories on the stunt were carried in the paper.

Additional effort included free admission of all red-headed women, when accompanied by another patron, to show during the four day run; distribution of special heralds by red-headed woman, and the stringing of a large banner across the street in front of theatre.

Despite an off week-end results from the campaign described above were very gratifying to Cooper and accounted for an exceptional increase in receipts. His work in connection with this picture would have been recorded an earlier date except for the fact that winners of the M-G-M awards were announced only a short time ago.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Ned Gerber turned down a career as an army officer to enter showbusiness, and while West Point may have lost a military genius, the theatre gained a smart showman.



Ned Gerber

Since he hitched his wagon to the celluloid star Gerber has worked for Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Pictures Corporation and William Salkin in various capacities, acting as director of advertising and publicity and as manager of the Eagle, Photoplay, Palace, 79th Street and other houses in New York City and the East. He has also been aggressive in organization work as representative of Motion Picture Salesmen in eastern territory. His theatre experience has also included considerable publicity and exploitation work in the east, mid-west and south. At present he is at the helm of the 79th Street Theatre, New York City.

Gerber was born in New York City April 15th, 1900, and after graduating from public school took courses in Commercial High and Lincoln Prep Schools.

CREDIT LOU GOLDEN!

When you next stop to talk about outstanding advertising, please keep in mind this fine specimen from Lou Golden and Alvin Ascher, manager and assistant, respectively, of the RKO Orpheum Theatre in Omaha, Neb.

To achieve the effect they were after, Golden and Ascher tied up with a good artist who understood air-brush work, to help them out. No type-set copy was used, which, while making it a trifle more expensive, added to the effectiveness and certainly gave it added strength.

We would like to see more of Golden's work. While he was with Fox West Coast in California we had several opportunities of seeing some of his fine showmanship activities. Now that he's snugly settled in Omaha we hope to hear from him regularly.

YOUR CLUB KEEPS ON GROWING!

MR. AND MRS. A. G. BUCHANAN

are respectively the manager and assistant manager of the Dreamland Theatre out in Ashville, Ohio, and since their application came as one we're recording their memberships that way. Yes, as Buchanan, advises us, the pair of 'em teamed it up a short time ago in "The Little Church Around the Corner" and now they're carrying out the husband and wife act at the theatre. Sort of a family affair, you know, and rather a good idea at that during these times. Meet the rest of the gang, Mr. and Mrs., and let's know what the two of you are doing for the good old box office.

is another new member of the Round Table Club and he entered showbusiness via a War Department order. He operates the War Dept. Theatre up at Plattsburg Barracks, N. Y., and with his application at hand maybe we'll find out how post exchange theatres are operated. He's had considerable experience in this field, having operated similar theatres at Camp Dix, New Jersey, prior to being assigned to Plattsburg. At the present time he's running seven shows per week and we'll be interested to hear more about his method of operation.

is the advertising manager of the Gayety Theatre in Van Buren, Maine, and he's another new Round Tabler ready to be introduced to the rest of the gang. We're glad to add his name to the ever-increasing list and know that O'Donnell will strive to do his share to keep Club pages filled with interesting information about showbusiness. What was that last advertising gag you used, Pierce, that revived the box office? Shoot along an account of it as soon as you can, so we can let the other fellows know what you are doing.

hails from way out in Hood River, Ore., where he manages the Rialto Theatre. He's another new member of our Club and we're sure that Myers will prove a valuable recruit to our ranks. A glance at a Fall Program he enclosed with his application reveals originality as to copy. He lists his coming attractions and then briefly outlines theme, etc. In other words, instead of merely listing bacon and eggs, he tells 'em something about the bacon and that the eggs are cooked in Grade A butter. We'll be looking for further word from Myers.

is another owner-manager to join the ranks of the Round Table Club and we want him to know that we're glad to add his name to the ever-lengthening list of showmen enrolled in this organization. He operates the Portland Theatre out in Casselton, North Dakota, and does this in an "independent" way. He is cordially invited to send along news of what is going on in showbusiness out in Casselton.

hails from down South in Vero Beach, Florida, where he manages the Vero Theatre, a house on the Bott Theatre circuit. Before taking his present post Floyd managed the Strand in Lakeland and the Arcade in Kissimmee and we're mighty glad to record that he has joined our outfit. He is heartily in favor of this department's policy and proposes to do his share to keep these pages filled with interesting tips on what he and his associates are doing to put the Vero over. We'll be awaiting his next communication.

has the job of helping Stephen Champlin manage the Terminal Theatre over in Brooklyn, N. Y., and we're glad to add his name to the many other assistant managers already enrolled in this organization. Sidney is 24 years of age, has been with the Terminal for the past fourteen months and went there from the Congress Theatre, another Brooklyn house. His last position was chief of staff, so we can see that he's on his way up the ladder. Tell your boss the writer was on hand the night the Terminal was opened by Small-Strausberg, Sidney, and that we'd like to know what he's doing to boost trade.

is the house manager of the Palace Theatre in San Leander, Calif., and his application for membership is sponsored by Resident Manager Andrew Poulsen. Ed is 22 years of age, has been with the Palace for the past five years and his boss tells us he's "a great boy, has unlimited possibilities in showbusiness and is deserving of a lot of credit." That's a pretty nice send-off for Eddie, to our way of thinking, and we'll watch his career with interest. And, by the way, we'd like to hear from both Poulsen or Motta as to what's doing in showbusiness out their way.

was recently chosen by William Smalley to manage the attractive new house the latter opened a short time ago in Norwich, N. Y., and which replaces the one destroyed by fire last March. We are indebted to H. L. Richardson, superintendent of the Smalley circuit, for sponsoring Swick's membership in our Club and will look forward to receiving some interesting show-selling slants from this new Round Tabler. He's a seasoned showman, having acted as manager of the Ellwood Theatres down in Ellwood, Pa., and we believe we can depend upon him to become a consistent contributor to this department.

J. K. ROBERTSON

is the manager of the New Star Theatre over in Dover-Foxcroft, Maine, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club. J. Kenneth advises us that he's comparatively new to the amusement field and that he's delighted to have a chance to improve his knowledge of the game by becoming a member of this showman's organization. He is a welcome addition to the ranks, we assure him, and here's hoping he will find these pages useful to his career. We'll be awaiting word about what he is doing to improve trade.

is another assistant manager to join the ranks of the many assistants already enrolled in this organization and we're glad of the chance to file his application for membership. Rogers has the job of helping the well known Morris Rosenthal operate the Rialto Theatre up in Little Falls, N. Y., and with the able coaching Morris is able to give him it certainly won't be long before he's be climbing another rung of the ladder. Keep up the good work, Eddie, and, in the meantime, we'll be saving a framed certificate for your promotion. Give the Boss our best regards and ask him how all the little falls are getting along.

operates and manages the Schuyler Theatre out in Schuyler, Neb., and it's also a pleasure to acknowledge his recent application for Round Table membership. Paul's application was okayed by W. H. Bergmann, so we know he'll prove a welcome recruit to the Club ranks. All we want him to do now is to take enough time off now and then to keep the Club posted on what he's doing to keep seats filled these days. Shoot along your ideas on showmanship, Paul, and we'll see that the rest of the gang are tipped off.

J. E. McKINSTRY

manages the Odeon Theatre out in Cottonwood Falls, Kan. Showman McKinstry is another new member of our Club and we are glad to acknowledge his application. He likes the idea behind this department and has found much of the show-selling information contributed by other members useful in the past. Now he is going to do his level best to pass along some of his own ideas on what it takes to put over shows in his town. Okay, J. E., shoot 'em in and we'll do our part.

is located out at Redondo Beach, Calif., where he has charge of the Fox-Redondo Theatre and we take pleasure in announcing that he, too, has joined our outfit. Step up and meet the rest of the gang, Cobe, and tell them that you will also do your best to help keep these pages chock full of interesting slants on the art of show-selling. What was that last stunt you used to pack 'em in? Let's have an account of it so we can shoot the dope along to your fellow members.

hails from out in Globe, Ariz., where he manages the Fox-Martin Theatre, and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his fellow Club members. His house belongs to the Alden Theatre Company, which is affiliated with Fox-West Coast, and we're glad of the opportunity to add his name to the ever-lengthening roster. Take some time off at the first chance you have, Alden, and let us all know what you and your associates are doing to boost the good old box office.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Songwriters on Parade (7)
New York Valencia

This is an out and out novelty which should please any audience. These songsters, namely Charles Tobias, who acts as M. C., Sidney Claire, Al Sherman, Al Lewis, Murray Mencher, Vincent Rose and Percy Weinrich, have woven a nicely routined act around the songs which they have written, the audience applauding the songs and the writers in order. For audience reaction, this act rates high.—H. P.

Buster Shaver, Olive and George
Cincinnati Albee

Olive and George are midgets and two of the cutest we have ever seen. They offer a routine of single and double dances, and several song numbers, while Shaver, who is of normal growth, accompanies them on the piano. Comedy and crossfire chatter are introduced throughout the act, which is novel and entertaining in every way.

Evelyn Wilson
Detroit Fisher

Singing and clowning through her act, Miss Wilson presents a type of humor which while not particularly novel is none the less entertaining and amusing. Her impersonation of an inebriated clubman, wending his way homeward after a riotous evening with the boys, brings howls of glee from a large portion of the Fisher audience.

Moran and Mack
Baltimore Hippodrome

Reception was weak but they still make 'em laugh. The first part of the act is the usual dialogue chatter in comic slow vein; in the second part they do a burlesque boxing match.

SINGERS

Gracie Barry
New York Paramount

The demure and beauteous Miss Barry gets a nice send-off from Rudy Vallee and pleases the audience with her appealing singing of "Just Couldn't Say Goodby," and "Sentimental Gentleman from Georgia."

This little lady, who undoubtedly is very young, puts over her part of the show like an old trouper and the audience showed their appreciation by applauding long and loudly.—E. D.

SKETCH

Irene Rich (3)
New York State

Supported by Eddie Jerome and Hal Elliott, Miss Rich offers an entertaining sketch in which she has an opportunity to prove real histrionic ability. Miss Rich possesses rare charm and poise and receives an ovation on her initial appearance and a fine reception at the finale. This act is sure to please the most exacting audience.—H. P.

Saenger Theatres May Produce Own Stage Attractions

Definite indications in New Orleans are to the effect that the city will be the stage production center of the south in the near future as a result of the reversion of the Saenger-Publix theatres to the management of the E. V. Richards, and the elimination of supervision from the Publix home office in New York, as part of the circuit's decentralization policy.

Productions particularly adaptable for showing in the south are seen as likely of development on the home ground, since approximately 200 houses are under the Saenger organization, many of which will require stage attractions of some sort. These attractions would replace the occasional, and apparently not always satisfactory attractions sent to the south from New York, it has been indicated.

Such a plan as appears probable would involve the booking of acts, the concoction of revues, training of choruses and building of scenery in New Orleans, headquarters of the Saenger organization. Little change is anticipated in the personnel of the circuit. It is further expected that the large organ at the Saenger in New Orleans will be resumed after the first of the year, with a notable organist at the keyboard.

Fox Music Staff Formed

The newly organized Fox Movietone Musical department, under the supervision of Louis de Francesco, general musical director, is now in full activity.

DANCERS

Seiler and Wills (3)
New York Valencia

Here is a talented pair of dancers. Opening together in a novelty bit, the boy, Jay Seiler, earns a nice hand for his cane-tap dance, followed by Frances Wills, a comely blonde, who scores with an acrobatic specialty. Seiler then offers a novel dance on half-hoops after which the pair present an eccentric inebriate dance for the finale. They have plenty of audience appeal.—H. P.

Whiteside, Anita and Brower (5) Frances Pepper and Lynn Burno
Baltimore Hippodrome

A good dancing act, with some songs and piano playing, includes some toe ballet routine, ice skating, American Indian gyrations by one girl with fans, and all in singles in the finale.

Gilda Gray
Boston Metropolitan

The center of an act around which revolves a revue of large proportions, she sings and dances her way into the hearts of the audience, which would appreciate her work in solo as well as ensemble.

COMEDY

Barry and Whitledge
New York State

Here are a man and girl comedy team who literally clown their way through a 12-minute routine which brings one laugh after the other. Miss Barry makes the most of her foil's support, ad libbing here and there to good advantage. The audience wanted more.—H. P.

"Slim" Timblin
New Orleans Orpheum

This blackface parson act hasn't changed any since his last appearance here, but it is just as sure fire and just as funny. Seeing it for the third time makes it evident that it is Timblin's delivery, rather than his material, which is funny. The wedding routine closes the act, as heretofore, and manages to retain its unique comedy.

ACROBATICS

Detroit Michigan

Amazing muscular strength and perfect bodily control mark this act. The Ghezzis keep their audience in constant admiration with their daring feats. They conclude their performance by dancing the Black Bottom "upside-down," on their hands.

Liazeed Troupe
Baltimore Hippodrome

Swift moving tumbling and acrobatics with a one man pyramid get excellent applause. All in this troupe, about a dozen, do their routine with grace, and some of their work is difficult.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) has been running for President for the last few weeks in a series of solos that have been cleverly worked up. It is most surprising the way this chap Bernie can work up the enthusiasm of his audiences.

The good old "singing class" was turned into a "mass meeting" with Bernie making most laughable political speeches and having the audience "rallying" with popular and special lyric songs. Numbers used in this solo were, "Say it Isn't So," "Pink Elephants," "As You Desire Me," and a campaign trip in song, with "East Side," "Chinatown" and "Harlem Moon" predominating. Bernie closed with a number of special versions to the popular tune, "When I'm the President." The tremendous applause at finish forced Bernie to encore with more special choruses of this number.

BOB HAMILTON (Brooklyn Fox) for his last week at this house, presented a meritorious organ novelty on film. The use of film with scenic effects depicting the locale of each number, lent an authentic atmosphere to the "river numbers," which were played as spotlight solos and with no attempt to have the audience sing. A slight suggestion for the audience to hum to the closing number, "Ole Man River," met with enthusiastic response, and at the close many in the audience joined in singing loudly. Hamilton's entertainment novelty won good applause.

MERLE CLARK (Detroit Michigan) is mike-ing again, opening this week with a gag that makes "A Great Big Bunch of You" a theme song for Kate Smith. This audience responds a little more readily each week to his pleas for cooperation. Good selections are "Hold My Hand," "Humming to Myself," "Paradise," "I Love You," "My Silent Love," "The Voice in the Old Village Choir" and "The Night When Love Was Born." Clark's novelty of the week is a jumble of songs in which he skips around from one to the other like a youngster playing tag.

JOE STOVES (New York Jamaica Valencia) recently offered a "musical trip around New York," incorporating the old favorites and a number of newer popular tunes as well. He built the solo into a highly interesting novelty and the audience followed its own singing with appreciative applause.

CLARENCE LEVERENZ (Kalamazoo State), in conjunction with and as a prologue to the picture, "Big Broadcast," which was currently playing, offered a 100 per cent entertainment and unusual organ novelty, entitled "My Own Broadcast."

In presenting the radio program, the audience did its share of broadcasting the following numbers: "Sweethearts Forever" (with orchestral effects); a burlesque on "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling"; "When Mother Played the Organ" (solo by Leverenz with reeds only); the "hungry five" playing "Ach Du Lieber"; a string trio with harp playing "As You Desire Me," then the grande organ presenting "Nightfall" and "Here's Hoping," and a finale of "The Light Cavalry Overture." With smart effects and "mike" announcements the solo was complete. Appreciative applause forced four bows from the popular "boy" organist.

Southern Organist Dead

George Erneste Reams, 63, organist, for many years connected with the Saenger-Ehrlich interests in Shreveport, La., died recently following an illness of several weeks.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Boros Morros, head of the production department of Paramount Publix, and noted producer of stage shows for the New York and Brooklyn Paramounts, has just returned from a month's jaunt through Europe. . . . He visited his 70-year-old father in Moscow, Russia, and the Paris studios of Paramount, where he studied staging and lighting developments in the European theatre. . . .

That "Hoosier-nite Idea" of Eddie Mason's of Springfield, Ohio, has been "drawing them in" for the past ten years.... Eddie makes it plenty entertaining too. . . .

The "cheer leading" organist, Bob West, is back at the Brooklyn Fox, after being away for the past year in many other Skouras-Fox houses throughout the country. . . . Rosa Rio will continue with her morning concerts and as an organist in Sam Jack Kaufman's overtures. . . . Frankie Parrish, that silver-throated tenor, formerly with Charley Davis' band, has been building up his name via the ether waves, and is slated to head his own band at the Hotel Governor Clinton within the next few weeks. . . .

Among them were Dave Apollon, Mills, Kirk and Martin, Milton Berle, Harry Gordon, Harry Woods, and a number of others. . . . Harry Ross and Eddie Edwards, who were on the same bill and who have been together for the past 15 years, played the Palace for the first time that week . . . and the strange part of it was that the feature picture was entitled "Once in a Lifetime."

I am sorry to report that John W. Jenkins, Sr., long president of the Jenkins Music Company of Kansas City, was killed recently when his motor car skidded off an ice-covered embankment near Creighton, Mo. . . .

ED DAWSON

OVERTURES

JULES BUFFANO (Seattle Paramount) offered his own arrangement of Herbert selections in "A Victor Herbert Fantasy" that met with hearty response. It opened with the march from "Babes in Toyland." This was followed by "When You're Alone," gradually fading into "Kiss Me Again," featuring the violin section and one chorus played by five saxophones. Then followed the "Street Song" from "Naughty Marietta," and "Falling in Love With Someone," the latter a trombone solo by Earl Kelley. "Sweet Mystery of Life" was next and the concert closed with selections from "The Fortune Teller," featuring an xylophone solo and finishing with full orchestra.

CHERNIAVSKY (New Orleans Saenger), master showman and musician, brings his vital music back to the pit. The first part of his overture, "Hungaria," was a jazzed version of the "Second Hungarian Rhapsody." The trumpet section did some nice work while Gordon Kirst played a piano interlude. The second number introduced Harvey Bell singing "Say Is Isn't So." In the third number, "The Mooch," Cherniavsky's flair for the bizarre, had play. Working in a macabre green light, the reed section put everything it had into this number. The lively "Evening Sun Go Down" introduced Louis Prima with his clown trumpeting and singing. The audience gave Cherniavsky a nice reception.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) plays an overture which traces the development of rhythmic music from the ancient tom-tom to the modern rhumba. Music appropriate to the minuet, the tango, oldtime waltz, ragtime, Charleston, the Black Bottom and the Hula is presented.

GUISEPPE CREATORE (Philadelphia Mastbaum) as guest and conductor led the symphony orchestra in an outstanding rendition of Massenet's "Cleopatra." This composition was especially fitted to bring out the tonal capacities of the different instruments and under Creatore's masterly direction the orchestra rose to new heights.

HERSCHEL LEIB (Detroit Fox) brought generous applause from a full Fox house with a symphonic arrangement of Nat Shilkret's famous "Song of the Bayou." In this he was ably assisted by some harmonious vocalizing from the Spartan Singers, four lads from Michigan State College.

Tax Department Announces Two Rulings on Admissions

Two rulings which have recently been announced by the United States tax department with respect to the tax on theatre admissions are:

1. Passes must show the amount of tax due based on the established price of admission, if the established price is 41 cents or more. Where the passes are merely orders for tickets and cannot be used in themselves to gain admission, no printing of the established price and tax on such passes is necessary, but the regular admission tickets, for which these passes are exchanged, must then show such information.

2. Where a motion picture theatre admits a whole family for 50 cents, and the price of a single admission is 35 cents, no tax need be paid.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 145

Question No. 145 was: "(A) Describe the difference between direct and alternating current. (B) Tell us why such a large percentage of power plants charge their circuits with alternating current. (C) Explain just why it is possible to convey a greater amount of power over wires of given diameter if the current be alternating than if it be direct. (D) Tell us why 60*-cycle current is found on so great a percentage of commercial power lines."*

The following made good: G. E. Doe, C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, T. Wentworth, W. S. Andrus, D. Goldberg and L. Hutch, Bill Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, W. Broadbent, H. B. Coates, A. Bailey, W. There were so many excellent answers to Section A that it was hard to select. I placed the 10 best, all essentially equal in excellence, in a pile and had Friend Daughter pull one out. J. Wentworth won. He says:

"The question as stated might mean much or little. Assuming it to mean much, I will answer as follows: Direct current flows continuously in one direction. Alternating current flows in one direction for the fraction of a second. It then reverses its direction of movement and flows in the opposite direction for an equal period of time. This action of reversal is continuous so long as there is any current flow. Direct current is presumed to be of constant pressure or voltage value. As a matter of fact, it is not. It has slight pulsations. If it has constant voltage value it then is called continuous current.

"The pressure value or voltage of direct current can only be raised or lowered, once it has left its source, by means of machines having moving parts. Direct current voltage may be either raised or lowered after it has left the power source by equipment having no moving parts. While a description of an alternating current cycle is not essential to answering the question, I will add, for sake of completeness, that when the current (a.-c.) starts to move in one direction, the voltage rises from zero to the full voltage of the system, whereupon it instantly begins to drop, until at the end of one half-cycle it has again reached zero. It then, due to the cause (set forth very competently on Page 9, Vol. 1, Bluebook), starts flowing in the opposite direction, voltage again rising to maximum and again falling to zero. This performance continues at whatever rate per second the cycle of the current may be, usually between 25 and 60 per second. Direct current does nothing of this kind, of course—flowing continuously in one direction."

(B) I believe the answer of G. E. Doe best serves the purposes of publication. Friend Doe says:

"The chief reason is because a. c. may be generated at ordinary commercial voltage, 110, for example, and then automatically and with negligible cost stepped up to any voltage which it is practicable to insulate. This greatly cheapens the cost of wire, etc., for the reason that since an ampere at 110 volts is only a small fraction of the power represented by an ampere at 1,000 volts, to convey, say, 10 h. p. at 110 volts, would require a much larger cross-section of conductors than would be necessary at the larger voltage.

"This step-up is only practicable to a relatively very slight extent with a. c., and it may be done only at considerable cost, since machines with moving parts are required, which necessitates an attendant. It is wholly, or at least very largely, a matter of the difference in installation and of upkeep cost, though there are other minor reasons."

(C) We will listen to Rau and Evans, who say:

"It is possible to convey a greater amount of power over wires of a given diameter if the current is alternating than if it is direct, for the reason that alternating current may be transmitted at any voltage it is practicable to insulate without any appreciable addition to cost, as against a lower voltage. Since it is the number of amperes which determine the necessary size of wires to convey any given amount of power, and since horse-power is voltage times amperes divided by 746, it may readily be seen that while a wire large enough to convey 10 amperes would only carry (110×10), 1,100 watts, or less than one and one-half h. p., if the voltage be stepped up to 10,000, it would then carry $(10{,}000 \times 10)$ 100,000 watts, or more than 130 h. p. Since this step-up can be accomplished only with d. c. to a comparatively very limited extent, we may plainly see that a far greater amount of current may be conveyed with a. c. than with d. c., using wires of equal diameter."

(D) P. L. Jensen and I. Ilks say:

"Sixty-cycle current has been very largely adopted as standard commercial current, frequently for the reason that while a low cycle is somewhat better for driving motors, it is not satisfactory for lighting purposes, the 'dead' periods tending to become visible to the eye at each alternation. Sixty-cycle current has been found fairly satisfactory for both power and lighting purposes, hence has, as I have already said, been generally adopted as standard."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

EASTMAN Super-sensitive "Pan" has caused such widespread changes and improvements that it easily rates as the biggest mechanical factor in the excellence of today's motion picture. On the foundation supplied by this film, cameramen, directors, actors, and laboratories have been able to build a motion picture art as far ahead of old techniques as movies on the original Eastman "Pan" were ahead of color-blind photography...Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" finds its fullest possible expression with the gray-backed base on which it is now supplied. New, Quiet Clara Bow Here; Finds 'Hot-Cha' Doesn't Pay

Film Star Exchanges Vivacity for Poise—Wants to Improve Mind.

Life is very real and earnest to Clara Bow. She wants to settle down and improve her mind.

When she arrived here today on the Twentieth Century the change was noticeable. Vivacity had been exchanged for poise; her black caracul coat and black turban made her seem taller, colder, quieter. Her voice was subdued, and gracious.

Throws Away Cigaret.

Photographers encircled her, expecting the beguiling poses traditionally furnished by actresses. Instead they got pictures of a modest young woman carefully tossed away her cigaret before smiling into the lenses.

"I've had trouble for the last three years," Miss Bow confided. "I'm getting older—and hot-cha doesn't pay."

With her she brought a maid, Marian Deauburen; eleven books, some dogs, and a pet rat called "Pinkie."

Awaits Rex Bell.

She went directly to the Savoy Plaza, where she expects to be joined within two weeks by her husband Rex Bell. Together they will go abroad for Miss Bow's first glimpse of foreign parts. They will tour France, England, Germany and perhaps Italy.

Meanwhile Miss Bow will make two personal appearances today "Call Her Savage," her latest vehicle, is showing. She will shop, dance a bit, and see a few shows.

The new Clara Bow.

'Tis Literary Clara

Clara Bow—"the Girl Who Came Back"—also came back to Broadway today, but just for a pause before sailing for Europe. She will wait for her husband, Rex Bell, before sailing. Here she is, winking to New York, on her arrival. Incidentally, Clara has turned bookish. She read eleven books en route here. Picture from International News Photograph Service. MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 109, No. 11 December 10, 1932

WHO CARRIES THE MESSAGE?

PERIODS of commercial stress inevitably bring forth all manner of sales expedients and in the main they follow definite patterns of procedure in the endeavors to break through buying apathy, resulting most always in pursuing obvious channels of expression in the very effort to escape established media and methods. Just now, once again, the country is seeing a flurry of assaults on the buyers of various city communities by "shopping news" periodicals, some of them in the format of daily papers, some made up as magazines, some presenting advertising only and others with editorial content. Just the other day the exhibitors of Richmond, Va., combined in support of a tabloid called "Richmond Screenland," distributed free to some thirty thousand homes.

The history of such projects does not encourage the resort to such a device for the promulgation of selling copy. Taken the whole field over the average life of "shopping news" publications is about three years. Few have shown profits and at their best supplement, rather than supplant, other media.

Such publications have most of the important faults that affect all "direct mail" appeals. They do not command the attention, or the attitude of acceptance of the established newspaper and magazine press. They do not, even if read, present their message alongside of the preponderating array of selling appeals presented in the old accepted media. The character, quality and status of the carrier of the selling message counts.

Publication in specialized forms constitutes an integral part of all important industries, but the degree of specialization is so acute, the operations and requirements so complex that real publication success must be achieved by its independent specialists. This all relates in a degree to a current negative manifestation expressed in what just now enjoys attention in our industry as "decentralization." So keen an observer as Mr. Herbert J. Yates, speaking at the moment about film printing and Consolidated Film Industries, recently remarked upon the "millions that have been lost in the effort to merge every phase of the picture business in one organization." Just as experience indicates that the specialist does the job best in every commercial sense, whether it be production, distribution, exhibition or film printing, so has it proven that "inside" publications have always the house organ curse upon them.

And may we not, at this juncture, observe with all becoming modesty, that for a quarter of a century, in fact ever since there has been a motion picture business, this industry has read in the pages of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and its ancestral components the announcements and the selling messages of every production worthy of mention that the screen has seen. These pages constitute the time honored and accepted meeting ground of the motion picture world.

DRIVING THE CONSUMERS

FREQUENT reference has been made on this page to the tremendously increased competition of efforts to capture the consumer dollar. It is not only that we have an intensified pressure on the old lines, but there is also a growing flood of new merchandise with new appeals. Just now comes to hand a report of an investigator who has found that in the last two years no less than 1800 new products have been put on the market. Incidentally the same study reveals that a majority of these new products are especially designed to lend themselves to advertising and salesmanship.

ANTICIPATIONS FOR SALE

MR. WALTER CHRYSLER has demonstrated that showmanship is salesmanship. His amazing campaign for the introduction of his new car, a campaign of teasing, suspense and climax, resulted in the placing of 19,000 orders before the car had been seen or the price known. The customers bought their own anticipations. That's what the motion picture customer always buys. That's all the motion picture purveyor can sell. And that's why selling in this business is quite as vital a factor as production.

THEY'RE BUYING AGAIN!

THE annual report of the Association of National Advertisers indicates that 35 per cent of the reporting member companies are increasing their advertising budgets for 1933, another 35 per cent expect to spend as much as in 1932, while only 22 per cent plan to decrease appropriations. The association represents a reputed $300,000,000 advertising expenditure per annum. More than half of the reporting members announced increases in sales volume in units, not dollars, for the last three months. In reflecting on the significance of this it need hardly be remarked that it is to be borne in mind that the spender's dollar of today is a rather larger coin than the dollar of 1929. The increase in unit sales is the important indicator. They are buying again.

BONNY DAYS ARE HERE

WORD comes from overseas that the Scottish National Development Council, made up of Scotch business men, has decided to launch "an intensive advertising campaign to advertise Scotland and its products." No one need hesitate now.

MR. CECIL BLOUNT DeMILLE, alchemist of the dramatic screen with "The Sign of the Cross," a road show classic of the years agone, as his pretext and title, has compounded a spectacle production richly encrusted with box office appeals and addressed to the people, the great common people of the motion picture audience.

It is a synthesized picture wherein the exhibitor will find all manner of selling material ready to his hand, for advertising copy, for lobby and billboard and ballyhoo.

The outstanding merit of "The Sign of the Cross" is that it is a motion picture, made in the utilization of the medium, delineating by action and type, not at all dependent on its spoken lines.

"The Sign of the Cross" is in nowise at any time hampered by addressing itself to any rudimentary powers of reasoning which might be chanced upon in an audience. Its appeal is entirely primitive, basically emotional, exclusively concerned with emotion.

Garbed as it is in a misty aroma of religious fervor it will permit vast audiences to vicariously enjoy pagan pleasures with a minimum of or no conscientious qualms. The musk and patchouli are muchly intermingled with incense.

The times being what they are and the mass state of mind being what it is today, it would seem that most likely Mr. DeMille will be found to have chosen his dramatic material with sagacity, or if not sagacity then with good fortune. It is just possible that it happens so, since "The Sign of the Cross" is in a sense in sequel to his "Ten Commandments" of 1923 and his "King of Kings" of 1927.

The picture is another epitome of the DeMille concept of the glamorous, the grandiose and the glorious, running the entire gamut with its symbols from martyrdom to a bathtub—a tub for the Empress of Rome bye the bye, filled with the milk of asses, and to prove it Mr. DeMille shows all the asses possible.

For those too old to remember and those too young to know, it is to be recalled that "The Sign of the Cross," which is still an excellent story, is the play in which Mr. Wilson Barrett evolved a Cinderella, Christian girl, also virgin, by name Marcia, in the locus of Rome, A.D. 64, and pitted her combination of charms, not to say lures, embedded in perfect faith, against Pagan Rome, personified mostly by a handsome Prince Charming, for this occasion none other than Marcus Superbus, the Prefect of Rome, second only to his unutterable highness Caesar Nero, Emperor-impresario. Marcus-the-Pagan discovers and rescues Marcia and loves her through persecutions until at last, throwing all that is earthly away to win her, he goes up the stairs of the Arena to die the death of martyrdom with her in the jaws of Nero's lions. There are sub-plots a-plenty and action all the while, each decorated with DeMillinery in that master's most embroidery manner.

The play in its more important dimensions is probably well measured for the great audiences of America today, an America tired of sophistication, tired of too much undigested science, too much authority that is not authority, too much preaching from voices filled with empty words, tired of the pursuit of riches that turn to ashes in the hand, and in the bank alike, tired of all that is material, disappointed in all that has substance, ready to "divorce old barren Reason" and ready to turn to something of the spirit that holds promise. The audience will doubtless be happy to be reminded again that there is a faith for which from Calvary to today men and women have given their lives, and that it is a faith pervaded by an all-embracing brotherhood of Man promising final delivery for all who believe from the travails of an unhappy sin-ridden world. The picture affords opportunity for observation that since Nero's days changes have been changes in manners, mostly. We still have that kind of world, and the faith born then is still available.

We have mentioned only the larger aspects of the piece on the screen. There are some minor aspects, minor but having unfortunately all of the conspicuous appearance of a floating fly in a bowl of buttermilk, if we are to be elegant about it. For instance, we are required to see Marcia, the altogether lovely heroine, projected into a Roman orgy and there, by command of her Prince Charming, the ultimately heroic Marcus Superbus, made to stand the immobile focus of a bombardment of Lesbian wiles offered by a dancing wanton through some three or four minutes of screen time. This amazing interlude is dragged into the plot by its tail, being the while entirely out of key with every element of such plausibility as the picture contains, and in addition a fertile source of objection in official quarters as well as an offense to the taste of the commonalty. Again among the scenes devoted to the sports of Nero is a flash picturing a next to nude Christian virgin lashed to a post to await the onslaught of a giant ape. This scene has its roots rather more closely in "Ingagi" than in early Christian history. Another entrancingly sadistic passage limning the approach of a herd of hungry crocodiles waddling to an arena feast of edible, white fleshed Christian girls, disappeared from the picture after early runs at the Rialto. The narrative value of these sequences is negligible.

Leaving the more obviously sadistic sequences aside, or eliminating them, the picture will be found to contain sufficient horrors, including such tidy bits as a pagan pigmy impaled on a scimitar by an Amazon, a boy subjected to ordeal by fire, a Christian hung by his wrists in the Arena dungeons, with no end of the lashing of street throngs, slaves and prisoners.

There is much of pictorial beauty and excellent composition in the spectacle and its flow of movement. In this Mr. DeMille usually does well, and the photography by Mr. Karl Struss supports his well established fame as a cameraman.

The whole of the piece becomes interesting in the completeness with which it is done in the most modern manner of execution and in the most Victorian of intellectual concepts. In this story all character drawing is in black and white. None is so wicked as the Roman Pagans and none so sweetly virtuous as the Christians. The whole cast does a good job of it. Nero is as bad as nineteen centuries of calling a dog a bad name can make him, resulting in his role, delightfully and dexterously played by Mr. Charles Laughton, being a grand storybook rubber stamp with gilt on it. Maybe audiences will not share the emotion, but one sufficiently susceptible can come away from the show feeling that it was just too bad that Nero was forced to be such a very bad, bad boy. Nero clearly enough had perfectly human impulses and was merely a good showman led astray by the yes-men of Rome. He might be considered as an example to Hollywood.

But as to the picture—they will shud-

MPTOA NEGOTIATES KENT PROPOSALS AS ALLIED LAYS LEGISLATIVE PLANS

New Optional Contract Accepted by Paramount, RKO, MGM, Fox, Educational-World Wide, and Universal

[Text of contract changes on page 16]

Adoption by the industry of Sidney R. Kent's proposals for correcting trade practices was nearer consummation this week. The optional uniform contract, with voluntary arbitration was accepted for three years by Paramount, RKO and MGM, which joined with Fox, Educational-World Wide and Universal, previous signers, in Mr. Kent's attempt to establish new and better relations between buyer and seller.

The national appeals board, second important plank in the Kent proposals, will next be taken up with the distributors. Preliminary discussions were held this week. It was confidently learned late Wednesday that, unlike the contract and arbitration, the appeals board will probably be adopted for one year, and not three as originally intended. The change is said to be mutually satisfactory to distributors and exhibitors, giving both an opportunity for experimentation with the broad scope of the board. Adjustments would be made at the end of that time, if found necessary, in the rules governing the body and its modus operandi. It is hoped, thereby, to create a more liberal board.

Distributors' Approval in Writing

Following complete dissolution of the "mental merger" between the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Association, it was indicated that these two national exhibitor organizations would not get together again while the present administrations hold forth, and that each would continue to pursue its separate and widely divergent policies, Allied following through on the legislation campaign, now six years old, and MPTOA continuing its efforts for a constructive program.

M. A. Lightman, president of MPTOA, continued negotiations with the distributors, while Allied rested, apparently satisfied in the possession of a federal legislation resolution, which, MPTOA charges, Allied "railroaded" through last week's exhibitor mass meetings in Chicago and New York. What Allied intends doing about its resolution was not specifically reported, but it is expected that the association, led by W. A. Steffes, Abram F. Myers, H. M. Richey and Sidney E. Samuelson, might cancel its campaign for governmental regulation in the event that the distributors adopt the Kent proposals, which is likely.

Conferences between distributors' sales executives and attorneys, and Mr. Lightman, held last weekend and early this week, reduced distributors' approval of the agreement from the verbal stage to writing. Practically all of the six companies so far lined up suggested minor changes in the contract and clarification of certain paragraphs. Arbitration, as a part of the contract, was simultaneously adopted. Changes made in the contract, which appear in detail elsewhere in this issue, were said by Mr. Lightman to have the full support of his association. He said they were "fair, reasonable and practical," and that they add to the instrument and clarify many points.

"Response of the distributors," Mr. Lightman reported, "was ample proof that they were not 'stalling,' as it had been charged at the mass meeting in New York. The only part of the Kent proposals still to be worked out is the construction and set-up of the national appeals board, and we expect that feature will be decided satisfactorily within a very short time. The distributors have indicated a willingness to co-operate. They require more definite information regarding the functions of the proposed appeals board."

Working with Mr. Lightman are Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis; Charles Picquet, Pinehurst, N. C.; Jay Emanuel and David Barrist, of Philadelphia. While United Artists previously turned down the proposals on the advice of Dennis F. O'Brien, counsel, it is indicated that Al Lichtman, general sales manager, is favorably inclined toward reopening negotiations and is enthusiastic about the proposals. Columbia, too, looks like a favorable prospect. Further conferences were held this week with Jack Cohn, vice-president, and Charles Schwartz, Columbia's counsel, said later that Mr. Cohn might adopt the program over his objections. Warners renewed interest this week, but asked for more time.

Elimination of a plank in the proposals curtailing the number of short subjects which would be sold with features satisfied Universal, Educational and Paramount.

It is hoped to have the contract available as an alternative to individual company agreements within a few weeks, for use on new product deals immediately after a designated date, probably January 1. It would be in general use with the next sales season, beginning in the spring. The agreement is to be in effect three years.

Principal objection to the national appeals board, it is understood, is the personnel structure proposed in the original program drafted last month in New York by Mr. Kent and a sub committee of the MPTOA and Allied. The plan of representation was only optional, so changes in the board's membership to effect equalization will not involve reconstructing the plank, nor will it jeopardize its adoption by either side, it was pointed out. Also, distributors have asked Mr. Lightman's committee to explain the functions of the board.

Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey and a national officer, said Tuesday that the program "should be a unified one and the MPTOA's dropping of the short subject and other provisions have emasculated the program." He pointed out that this opinion is only his own.

Appeals Board Vital to Allied

"I think the whole program should be a unit or nothing," he said, "and I personally would want the program as Fox originally accepted it." Mr. Samuelson argued that the national appeals board is one of the most important factors to Allied.

"Exhibitors will be the judge of whether the contract has been 'emasculated' or not," Mr. Lightman replied.

Revised copies of the uniform contract were ready Monday evening. They were to be dispatched immediately to all distributors and to state exhibitor associations. Seventeen of MPTOA's regional affiliates are committed to the plan and are unalterably opposed to federal legislation, regardless of Allied's future activities.

Allied leaders last week frequently stressed the point that the mass meetings were not joint sessions of Allied-MPTOA, but represented mass meetings of any and all exhibitors, and therefore, voiced a mass opinion, even though that opinion favored the program which Allied has been advocating for years.

Prior to returning to Allied headquarters at Washington, Mr. Myers, who is chairman of the board and general counsel, said that committees to carry on the legislative program will be appointed at once. The association seeks federal intervention on behalf of exclusive runs, block booking, protection and zoning and other factors of distribution. Administration would be vested in the Federal Trade Commission.

Allied's plan of action was first launched Tuesday at a meeting of New Jersey Allied. Members assembled at the Hotel Lincoln in New York were told to start contacting women's clubs and legislators in the move for federal regulation.

No Allied state association is on record as differing from the plan of the national organization, said Mr. Samuelson, who presided.

Although Allied says it will have a definite legislative program ready by January 1, including a plan for conducting its campaign, leaders at the New York meeting said that the resolution did not close the door for their joining in the adoption and use of the Kent proposals, if and when distributors accept. It appeared that Allied is not adverse to the proposals, but the association feels that a continuance of its legislative campaign is better strategy and might even influence distributors to expedite action.

Unexpectedly, MPTOA answered Allied by a communication Wednesday to all state MPTOA affiliates. After explaining the policies of the two national exhibitor associations, and recording activities which led up to the new industry program, the statement said, in part:

"Already organized propaganda is being spread that distributor cooperation is now being extended in the solution of these immediate and pressing problems solely because of the Allied resolution in favor of the Brookhart Bill. Let us consider that for just for a moment, in view of the facts: For six years their organization has staunchly supported such legislation. Even when their organization was at its peak no concessions or cooperation from the distributors were secured as a result of any of their efforts along this line. How can they now claim that by merely reaffirming their position, that all of a sudden the distributors would be 'bluffed' into making this new deal?

"While the MPTOA leaders who conducted these negotiations are of the firm opinion that it is a false inference, the facts are that the MPTOA leaders have staunchly opposed the Brookhart Bill as futile and misleading and a betrayal of the honest exhibitor in that it will accomplish none of the purposes claimed for it, and that it is certain to be disastrous to the small, independent theatre owner. For the first time at the Chicago joint committee meeting it was indicated that the MPTOA might support a considerably revised bill for Federal regulation, if all other attempts to secure reasonable self-regulation within the industry failed. The inference could easily be made that it was not the Allied continuous support of Federal legislation that had any influence on the distributors, but rather the possibility of such support by the MPTOA."

Differs from Sept. 20 Provision

The resolution passed in Chicago and New York differs considerably from the legislative provision adopted jointly by Allied and MPTOA on September 20 in Chicago. The original version did not mention support of a federal investigation of the industry or support of the Brookhart bill. In September, according to Mr. Lightman, "we drafted our own bill, which was to be sponsored only as a last resort, and we definitely discarded proposals calling for support of Senate Bills 170 and 3770. By including them in the resolutions passed by the mass meetings last week, Allied caused both sessions to go outside of the jurisdiction of their rights." The resolution was published in full in December 3d issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, page 10. Generally, it condemned the attitude of distributors, charged them with procrastination on the Kent proposals and commended Mr. Kent.

Allied says that it did not reject the Kent program because there was no definite program to act upon, and, without assurances of approval by distributors it had no alternative but to adopt a federal legislative program.

The New York mass meeting, held last Thursday at the Park Central Hotel, was practically a rubber-stamp copy of the Chicago session, which opened on the previous Monday and closed on the following day in a deadlock when MPTOA withdrew and officially severed its relations with Allied because of the legislative resolution.

Briefly, the MPTOA adherents who were gathered in New York pleaded with the mass meeting to withhold action on the resolution on the grounds that theatre owners had been waiting for years for a constructive program and a few more weeks would not make much difference. On the other hand, impatience, fiery oratory and the Allied leaders' picture of a "whip" to crack over distributors drew the majority sentiment into a veritable stampede to endorse a legislation program. The rising vote of about ten to one was in support of the Allied idea of governmental intervention and in opposition to the thought of the MPTOA that distributors had not yet been given a fair opportunity to pass on the Kent plan for industry self-government.

Party Affiliations Evident

Although the meeting was intended to promote "independence" of thought, the party affiliations, with their diametrically divergent views, were in evidence from the very first crack of chairman Charles L. O'Reilly's hard working gavel. The result of the vote threw the situation back where it was in Chicago on September 20.

However, Mr. Myers, Mr. Richey and other Allied leaders made definite commitments to the effect that they will be quite willing to accept the Kent plan following formal acceptance by Warners, Paramount, Fox, MGM and Radio. These companies were specifically named because they have theatre affiliations. The support of other distributor companies would be "helpful," Mr. Myers said, but "not essential."

In refuting the Allied leaders' contention that the move for federal intervention would be the best "whip" the exhibitor could possess, Mr. Lightman pointed out that, had the MPTOA likewise deserted the industry plan in favor of legislation, the door would have been automatically shut behind them all. "Mr. Kent told me today," Mr. Lightman said, "that if the MPTOA approved the legislative program at this mass meeting, he would withdraw his plan."

Mr. Lightman and his MPTOA leaders argued that "federal legislation would be the worst thing that could possibly happen to the motion picture industry." They also pointed out that the time element was not of vital importance, because "having waited twenty-five years for relief in the industry, we can certainly afford to be patient for a few more days or weeks."

"Sidestepping," Says Allied

On the other hand, leaders of Allied emphatically denounced the "sidestepping and evasions" of distributors. The time element, they felt, was of supreme importance.

"We once worked out a plan and then waited two years to learn that distributors who agreed to it at Atlantic City would not carry it out," Mr. Myers told the exhibitors. "Congress is meeting next week," he said. "We have waited as long as we can afford to wait. And don't forget that if this meeting votes for a plan for federal legislation, the distributors will undoubtedly make concessions."

Sidney Samuelson, president of the New Jersey Allied unit, told the exhibitors that Allied would go for a fair industry plan if they could have one, but, "all other means having failed, it is our position that legislation is necessary."

Mr. Samuelson continued by pointing out that the attitude of the distributors was not cooperative. All, he said, offered the excuse that they had not had time enough to study the contract. "The new contract is not important," he said. "You have no plan to vote upon. The distributors walked out on Mr. Kent and that was horrible."

Mr. Lightman then said that he was not discouraged about the situation and that he felt the sub-committee should continue to function.

A rousing cheer greeted Mr. Myers, who said that time was of the utmost importance and that "if there is a legitimate program, it must be organized and must manifest itself at once." Charging procrastination by distributors, Mr. Myers asked the exhibitors if they thought that federal legislation would prevent distributors from cooperating on an industry program. "If it hadn't been for the Chicago action," he declared, "we would not have gotten later proposals. That was what developed the situation leading to the invitation from Mr. Kent to come to New York. I still vision a unified, cooperative business. But I cannot believe in merely having faith, or in resting on my oars. The negotiations today are not defined . . . yet we are asked to wait until they are ready."

Butterfield Cites Problems

Earlier in the session, W. S. Butterfield, who operates 80 theatres in 30 Michigan cities, contributed a thought to the discussion when he declared that "the headaches of exhibitors are not caused by the distributors nor is it a question of regulating distributors, or even of how to sell pictures, but a question of finding local troubles and then solving them.

"The overpaid and the underpaid pictures about balance in 52 weeks," said Col. Butterfield. "There are too many theatres today and first class pictures are lacking for them. You cannot make profits if there are too many theatres. You must close some of them. with a 'gentlemen's agreement' to share costs."

One of the first speakers was Col. H. A. Cole, of Texas, who said that acceptance or rejection of the contract was not the issue, since it had not been approved by those who negotiated it.

A. M. Beck, of Liberty, N. Y., wanted the joint committee to form a legislative program at once, but withhold action on it for 30 days.

Mr. Richey of Detroit, offered as a substitute the resolution passed earlier in the week at Chicago, and Mr. Beck withdrew his resolution.

Vigorous protests against the campaign were voiced by Walter Vincent, of Wilmer and Vincent; Tommy Goldberg, a Baltimore exhibitor; Fred Wehrenberg, of St. Louis; M. Charles, Boston, exhibitor and former state senator; Sam Horwitz, representing Cleveland owners, and William Brandt, New York operator, who advocated one national exhibitor association. Others who spoke on behalf of the Kent proposals were Sidney Lust, of Washington; George P. Aarons, Philadelphia, and Ed Rappaport, of Salem, N. J.

One of the first speakers on behalf of Allied's program was Leo Brecher, of New York, followed by Abe Lehr, Al Suchman and H. M. Richey.

Excessive protection and overbuying by circuits are the big problems of the day, Mr. Myers declared. He explained that the national appeals board is basically intended to serve three purposes: Settlement of extraordinary and unusual cases which would work hardships on exhibitors; ironing out of protection and over-buying, and providing for the machinery whereby responsible people in the industry would get together.

CUT PRODUCTION TO 50 GOOD FILMS IN A YEAR, SAYS SAMUEL GOLDWYN

Producer Declares Fewer Pictures, Well Made, Would Return More Profit Than the 300 to 400 Now Being Turned Out

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Mr. Leo Meehan, in his articles on decentralization and what it means to production of better pictures as well as efficiency and economy of studio operation, presents in his third discussion the views of Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, who advances the interesting thought that show business cannot produce more than fifty profitable pictures in a single year.

"This is the show business. What it needs is 50 good pictures a year, and no more."

Samuel Goldwyn made this startling statement to me, and then with his usual incisive manner proceeded to tell why he believes it is fallacious to try to make 300 to 500 motion pictures annually:

"We have come to the point where it is a common habit to call this an 'industry.' It isn't—it is and always will be the show business. They call the places where we make our pictures 'plants.' So what? We attempt to grind out 'product' for our 'industry' from 'plants.'

"Martin Quigley is one hundred per cent correct in his estimate of the evils of one of our 'industrial' complexes—centralized theatre control. It did not work; it never will work. Neither will the making of large quantities of motion pictures by mass production methods work. And the sooner we all find it out, proceed to adjust our business to the facts, the better off we will be.

"Look at the New York theatre. Burns Mantle said the other day that only 2 per cent of the shows which had opened this fall have remained on the boards. Some of them were taken off before they had run one week. Yet we go blithely on, thinking we can produce three or four hundred pictures a year which will produce a profit.

"I say we can make only fifty profitable attractions a year, because it is my belief that there are not enough competent producers, competent directors, capable writers and important actors to make more than that. Furthermore, I believe that if we made those fifty, and made them well, they would gather in as much or more profit than all the pictures we now attempt to make.

"You cannot make me believe the depression and economic necessity is responsible for all the losses of theatre attendance. I observe that large masses of the public always seem to have the money to go to big football or baseball attractions; to big boxing or wrestling matches; to anything else that really appeals to them. But, with their restricted income, and with their much more discriminating tastes, they simply will not come out and spend their money on anything but superior entertainment."

Mr. Goldwyn says quality is the test of a production, now that the novelty of sound has worn off.

"There is no novelty any more to the talking motion picture. There is not much novelty even in big casts, lavish expenditure. Quality is demanded by a public which literally smells a good attraction even before it is advertised. You can't fool the public any more. They learn, and pretty accurately, what to expect of a picture before it is ever shown; and they respond accordingly.

"And don't allow anyone to fool you about 'production economy,' either. It costs more today to produce an attraction which will get the business and make a profit than it ever did. You have to spend the money for production, for cast, for story, for preparation, technical detail, everything.

"When I hear a producer say he is making pictures for $100,000 that are showing a profit, I say he is kidding himself. Perhaps those pictures do show a distribution profit. But what about the theatres that show them? Do they make a profit for the exhibitor who pays the rentals that make a profit showing on the company's books? It seems to me that no matter how much profit the producer or the distributor makes, if his retailer, the exhibitor, does not also make a profit, there is something fundamentally wrong.

"And another important point which prompts me to suggest the limitation of production to fifty pictures: There are only a very limited number of actors and actresses who are really capable of making these winning pictures. What are we doing now? Exchanging players in order to make casts stronger, more competent, with the result that you see this small group of really important players so often that you get tired of seeing them. That isn't good show business. It never was and it never will be. It may help improve quality for the moment, but in the long run it reacts against the value and importance of these outstanding personalities. That is another essential reason for sharply limiting production."

Asked what would become of the large studio facilities, the vast number of theatres, Mr. Goldwyn waved his hand:

"We are in a new era. Whether business picks up or not, we know very well it will be a long time before it will approach anything like the conditions which brought about this terrific expansion. We may as well face the fact, and the sooner we adjust our business to meet these new conditions the better for all concerned. Theatres will have to be closed, of course. Physical production facilities may have to be scrapped. Certainly a lot of expensive, unnecessary and incompetent personnel will have to seek other employment in other fields. The operation, like the surgeon's knife, may be painful to many. But out of it all would come a profitable, prosperous business, enjoying the confidence, the interest and the patronage of a public which is willing to buy the real thing in entertainment."

Milliken Predicts Film Theatre As Future Classroom

The motion picture theatre of the future will be looked upon as a laboratory of the social sciences and a classroom of art by universities, colleges and secondary schools, it was predicted by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in an address before the students of Mercer University, Macon, Ga., on Monday.

Mr. Milliken pointed out as indicating the trend the proposed London Film Society, the cooperation of Chicago University with Western Electric in producing a series of pictures designed for educational use, the experiment now being conducted by the National Council of the Teachers of English and other instances.

"Mr. Hays," said Mr. Milliken, "realizing the potential value to education in the sound picture, sought the opinions of the presidents of all the colleges and universities in this country regarding the possible uses of the motion picture for education. In more than 600 replies there was not a negative answer.

"The pedagogical efficiency of the sound picture is no longer questioned. . . . The method being sound, we should not hesitate to take advantage of the great economies which it offers; if the motion picture in the classroom can eliminate one-quarter only of the 'repeaters,' and there is evidence that it will do much more than this, the direct saving to the taxpayer would be sufficient to equip the schools with the most modern equipment in a very short time indeed. . . . We are hopeful that our universities, our colleges and our secondary schools may approach the social and educational influence of the motion picture in the theatre in the same constructive spirit; only so can the industry's serious attempts to deal with the great social, political and economic problems that confront us today prosper and yield their quota of contribution to our national and social evolution."

Study Indicates Films Cannot Replace Teacher

The talking motion picture can never take the place of the teacher, in the opinion of Dr. C. C. Clark of New York University, following a two-year study of the value of the talking picture as a medium of instruction. In a few cases he discovered a sound film especially prepared for instruction was about as effective as a lecturer. The ordinary news reel type of film, according to Dr. Clark's conclusions, produce poorer results than a silent picture with printed matter.

The report indicates that while talking pictures and similar aids are of value in the hands of a skilled teacher, they do not in themselves teach.

Court Upholds Paramount In Loan Adjustment

For the first time a court has passed upon objections to the bankers' agreement of last March whereby Paramount Publix Corporation readjusted its bank loans, when Supreme Court Justice Wasservogel this week sustained the position of Paramount in the suit brought by the Relmar Holding Company, a holder of some of the company's debenture bonds. The plaintiff asked a receivership for Film Production Corporation, a Paramount subsidiary, through which the bank credit was arranged, and an injunction restraining payments to bank creditors under the agreement. The court said:

"From the facts submitted it does not appear that the covenant in the indenture here involved against creating a mortgage or lien upon assets directly owned by the Paramount Company was breached by the arrangement entered into between the Paramount Company, the banks and the Film Production Corporation. Plaintiff has not shown itself entitled either to the appointment of a receiver or the injunctive relief which it seeks. Motion denied."

The court also held that the plaintiff had no capacity to maintain his action and ordered a reply to Paramount's defense which sets forth that under the indenture such a suit can be brought by an individual bondholder only if the trustee has refused or neglected to institute proper proceedings after being requested to do so by the holders of one-fourth of the bonds. Justice Wasservogel pointed out that the bonds in question are not in default.

A similar decision was made by the court at the same time in a case brought by Max Nathan.

In commenting on Justice Wasservogel's important decision, an executive of Paramount said: "At the time the agreements with the bankers were made, objections were variously heard and some of these opinions crystallized into suits. Because the corporation was well aware that these objections were without foundation, it was glad of the opportunity to bring them out into the open. This action involved most of the objections voiced originally. The court's decision now clarifies the situation and upholds our position."

The complaint filed on behalf of the Belmar Holding Corporation asserted that by the terms of the two bond issues, for $16,000,000 in 1927, and for $15,000,000 in 1930, Paramount agreed not to mortgage any of its property without securing its bondholders. On March 29, 1932, it was said, Paramount turned over 23 pictures and other properties to Film Production Corporation as a lien for a loan of $10,000,000, which, in turn, was turned over to various banks.

Justice Wasservogel's decision upheld Paramount's position right down the line.

Harry Cohn Goes to Coast

Harry Cohn, president of Columbia, left New York Wednesday for the coast, accompanied by George Brown, publicity and advertising director.

Three Fox West Coast Suits Settled Out of Court

Three anti-trust suits against Fox West Coast Theatres, totaling $1,875,000, have been amicably settled out of court by Spyros Skouras. These settlements also dismissed the actions against large distributors which were defendants with Fox West Coast.

In the first suit, filed September 26, Long Beach Theatres Company asked for $750,000 in alleged damages; the second, filed by Pacific National Theatres, Inc., sought $780,000 in damages; the third, filed by Glendale Capital Theatres, Inc., asked for $345,000. The two last named suits were filed several days after the first.

In all three suits the complaint was made that the independent circuits were unable to get 1932-33 product. In order to have the actions dropped, Mr. Skouras is said to have given the complainants a number of pictures which would enable them to maintain the first-run status of theatres involved.

Paramount Is Not In a Merger Deal, Says Adolph Zukor

Mr. Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix Corporation, issued the following statement Wednesday afternoon:

"Rumors have been published to the effect that Paramount Publix Corporation is taking part in negotiations or discussions leading to the combination of two or more motion picture companies. There is not a shred of truth in this report. Such rumors, especially when unfounded as this one is, are harmful and destructive to all companies involved in them, particularly in these times."

Joy Assumes New Position at Fox

Jason S. Joy, former director of the Producers Association in Hollywood, and his assistant, Lamar Trott, moved to the Fox studio this week. Dr. James Wingate, Colonel Joy's successor, is now in full charge at the Coast office of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The producers are understood to be considering the appointment of Alfred A. Cohn, scenarist, to be an industry contact with the Democratic administration.

The Coast organization voted on Tuesday against allowing the aviation committee of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to censor aviation stories. This action was taken following the difficulty that arose last week over the Warner picture, "Grand Central Airport."

Fox Reel to Use Air Freight

Fox Movietone News next week will begin the shipment of the South American edition of the newsreel by air freight to Buenos Aires. Shipments will be made via the Pan American Airways System.

Senator Sentenced As Asking Bribe on Sunday Shows Bill

E. D. Jordan, former state senator from the sixteenth Alabama district, has been convicted on a charge of soliciting a bribe from Lee Castleberry, Publix manager for Gadsden, Ala., in connection with passage of a local bill permitting Sunday opening of theatres there.

Judge Walter Jones of Montgomery county circuit court sentenced Jordan to two to two and one-half years in the penitentiary. Pending appeal Jordan is free on bond of $3,000.

Testimony introduced by the state during the trial indicated that Jordan had agreed to sponsor the bill in the state senate, but told Manager Castleberry that $250 expense money would be necessary. Mr. Castleberry testified that he did not agree to pay this amount, but referred the matter to his superior. The bill got on its way and passed the senate in short order. Jordan then sought to stop passage in the House by appealing to Representative Culver and when this failed, by urging Governor Miller not to sign the bill.

The state brought out that Jordan, in conference with Governor Miller and Representative Culver, admitted his reason for changing his stand on the bill was that some one failed to "pay off."

Jordan in defense claimed that the money asked for was expense only and that he was not to profit personally. He contended that this practice was common with various interests desiring favorable legislation and he saw no reason for an exception in his case. He insisted that his reason for changing his attitude on the measure was because of opposition offered by pastors of the city.

Quittner-Paramount Suit Opens in New York

Selection of a jury was completed Wednesday in the suit of Joseph Quittner against Paramount Publix Corporation charging restraint of trade, before Judge Francis G. Caffey in U. S. district court, New York. The jury then was dismissed until Friday. In the meantime counsel were to acquaint the court with details of the action. The taking of testimony was not expected to begin until Monday.

Arthur Butler Graham, of Graham & Reynolds, counsel for the plaintiff, on Monday traced the history of the motion picture industry to acquaint the court with the development of Paramount, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and various theatre circuits. Other counsel present were Fred Wood, of Cravath, De Gersdorff, Swaine & Wood, for Paramount, and Gabriel Hess, for MPPDA.

Examination of witnesses will not be undertaken until the counsel for both sides have presented their arguments to the court.

It was learned Wednesday that a similar suit involving the same principles has been filed in New York state court, which has ordered Adolph Zukor, Will H. Hays and Sidney R. Kent to appear for examination before trial.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

AMERICAN HUMOR. Being tried out by Ernst Lubitsch on Gaumont-British folk during the Paramount director's visit in England. He is shown at that company's studio with Victor Saville, director; and Hermann Fellner, supervisor.

CELEBRITIES LUNCH. At last week's AMPA luncheon in New York—Cecil B. DeMille, the principal speaker; Hal Horne, AMPA president; Wera Engles, RKO Radio's new German star just arrived in this country; and John C. Flinn.

COMPLETES ROLE. Dorothy Dix of the cast of "Drum Taps," the latest World Wide picture starring Ken Maynard, which was recently completed.

BLONDE. As ordered by the script. Barbara Stanwyck is shown as she appears in her new Warner Brothers picture, "Ladies They Talk About."

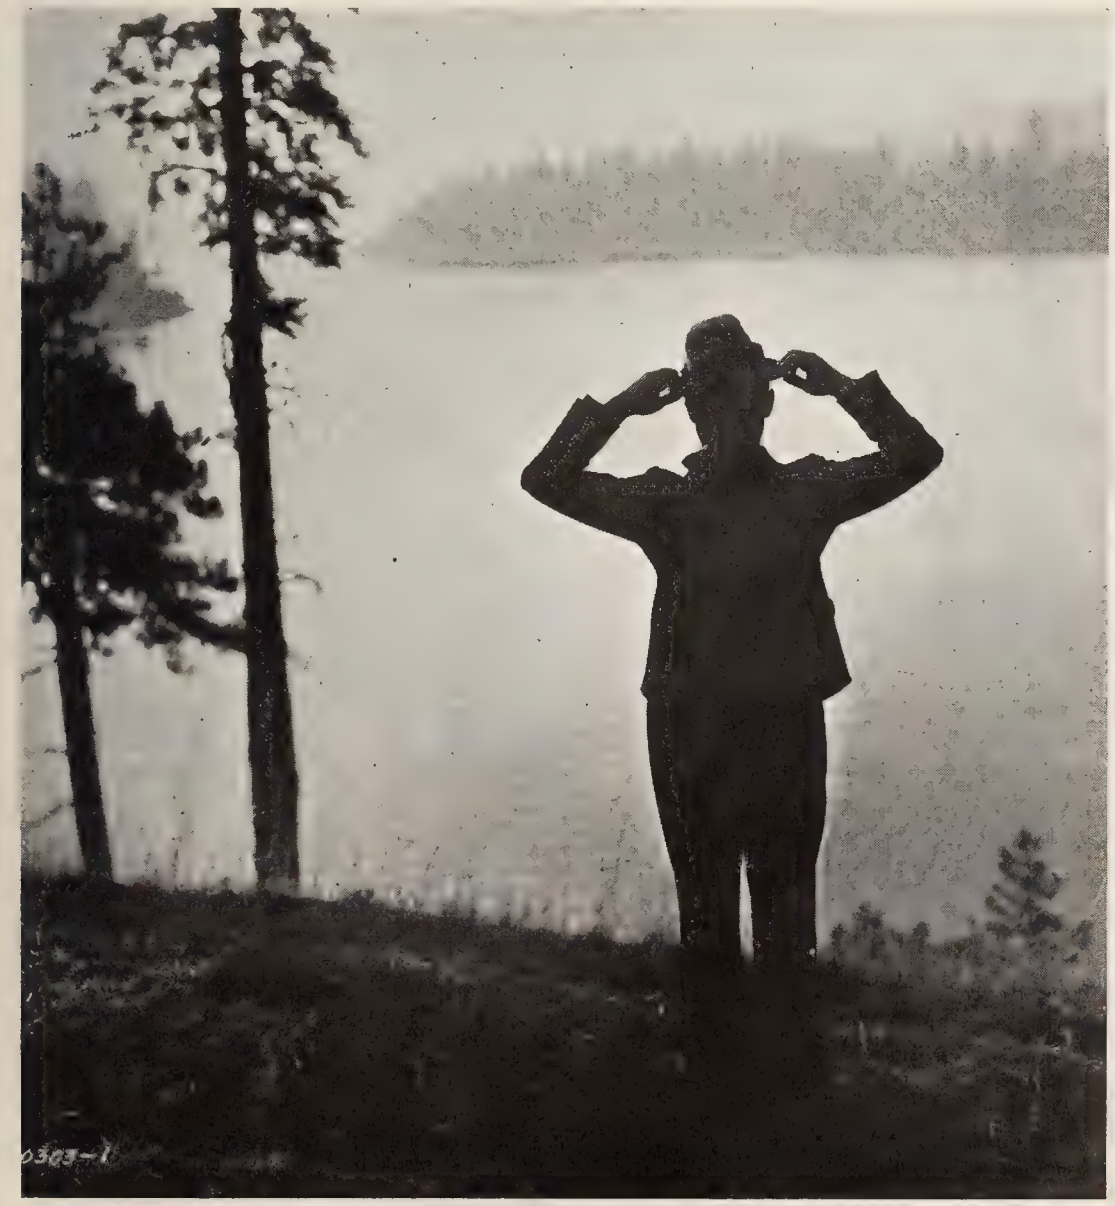
ON THE JOB. George Arliss, who is back at the Warner Brothers studio following his vacation in England, shown hurrying across the lot on his way to the set of his forthcoming production, "King's Vacation."

RAPPROCHEMENT. Something of an international friendly gesture participated in by Harold Lloyd (center) and Messrs. Long and Short, stars of the Danish film, "He, She and Hamlet," at a gala performance of the latter in Copenhagen during the run of "Movie Crazy" in the Danish capital. In the group shown are several Danish actors and actresses.

MULTIPLE SHOT. If you like your William Powell (and why shouldn't you?), here is a whole flock of him. The Warner Brothers star is shown in a concoction by the mathematical Bert Longworth, Warner studio photographer.

OUTLINES. And in or out, they're quite fetching—and here emphasized because characteristic of the cameo-like beauty of Julie Haydon, one of the newer RKO Radio players whom some liken to Ann Harding.

ELECTRICAL. (Below) How Warner Brothers' Western theatre in Los Angeles employed modern means to exploit United Artists' "The Kid from Spain."



VISUALIZATION. A new and striking study of Michael Curtiz, First National director. He is shown with the script of his latest directorial effort, "Wax Museum," which exploits a novel subject lending itself peculiarly to its Technicolor.

Warner, president of Warner Brothers, shown listening in Mr. Warner's office in New York, to the radio broadcast of the opening of "Silver Dollar" in Denver. The premiere of the picture, which celebrates old days in Colorado, was a State event.

SILLYETTE. (Below) The interpretative spelling being suggested by the fact that here, amid these manifestations, is Harry Langdon, as in Educational's "Tired Feet."

VISITING. James Cagney, newly returned Warner Brothers star, arriving in New York from Hollywood for a short vacation and also (we have it on the word of his employers themselves) to visit his mother.

TEXT OF CHANGES IN NEW CONTRACT

MPTOA continued negotiations this week with distributors on Sidney R. Kent's proposals for correcting industry trade practices. Fox, Educational-World Wide and Universal had previously accepted the standard exhibition contract as an alternative form, and also a clause in it providing for voluntary arbitration. Since the Eastern mass meeting in New York last Thursday, acceptances were forthcoming from Paramount, Metro and RKO. Minor changes in the contract were agreed to by distributors and the MPTOA committee, which was headed by M. A. Lightman, president. The contract was published in full in Motion Picture Herald on November 19, page 23. Changes are said by the MPTOA to be of minor importance, and do not alter the original meaning of the agreement, merely clarifying and adding to it. However, the road show clause which is appended at the end of the contract as an optional clause was almost entirely rewritten. Also, an entirely new clause was appended at the end which may, at the option of the distributor, be substituted for subdivision (b) of Clause Eighth, which has to do with "Description of Pictures."

Changes made are described below. New phrases and changes are printed in boldface type:

DAMAGES—FAILURE TO DELIVER (Under Second Clause):

(b) If the Distributor shall fail or refuse to deliver, or the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to exhibit during the term hereof, any of said motion pictures, excepting those which may be eliminated as provided in Clause Fifteenth hereof, and those which may not be generally released as provided in Clause Seventeenth hereof or if the Distributor shall breach any of the provisions of Clause Seventh hereof or shall deliver to the Exhibitor a print of any motion picture which print shall be determined was not in condition for exhibition and for the reproduction of sound as provided in Clause Second, the Exhibitor or the Distributor, as the case may be, shall pay the damage so caused and if such damage cannot be definitely computed shall pay as liquidated damages a sum equal to the fixed sum herein specified as the rental of each such motion picture or a sum computed as provided in Clause Third (c) hereof, if the rental of any such motion picture is to be determined, either in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre or any part thereof or upon a percentage of such receipts and a fixed sum; provided that any claim by the Exhibitor with respect to the condition of a print shall be deemed to have been waived by the Exhibitor unless notice of such claim shall have been given by the Exhibitor to the Distributor's exchange from which the Exhibitor is served, by telephone or telegraph, or in person, immediately after the first public exhibition thereof by the Exhibitor.

PERCENTAGE BOOKINGS (Under Third Clause):

(b) If the rental of any of such motion pictures is to be determined either in whole or in part upon the admission receipts of said theatre or any part thereof, the Exhibitor agrees to pay such rental immediately after the last exhibition upon the last date of the exhibition of each such motion picture or if requested by the Distributor at the end of each day's exhibition. In each such case the Exhibitor shall deliver to the Distributor immediately after the last exhibition upon each date of exhibition of each such motion picture a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon each such date. Such statement shall be signed by the Exhibitor or the Manager or Treasurer of said theatre and the Cashier thereof and shall include a statement of such facts and figures as may be provided in the Schedule to be furnished by the exhibitor, and if requested by the Distributor, shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor. ETC.

DELIVERY AND RETURN OF PRINTS

(Note: the following new phrase was substituted as (a) in place of the original):

FOURTH: (a) After each of said motion pictures is generally released for public exhibition and becomes available for exhibition hereunder by the Exhibitor, the Distributor agrees to deliver as hereinafter provided, a print thereof to the Exhibitor. ETC.

(Note: The original phrase which was deleted read as follows:)

FOURTH: (a) The Distributor agrees within a reasonable time after each of said motion pictures is generally released for public exhibition and becomes available for exhibition hereunder by the Exhibitor, to deliver a print thereof to the Exhibitor.

(Note: There were no changes in paragraphs b, d or e, but there was a change made in paragraph c, as follows:)

(c) The Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each of said motion pictures in the order of its general release by the Distributor in the exchange territory in which said theatre is located. The Exhibitor shall have the right to select any of the motion pictures, excepting the last deliverable hereunder, for exhibition out of the order of its general release, subject to prior runs and/or protection granted other exhibitors, on the date or dates determined as provided in Article Sixth hereof or otherwise agreed upon but only upon the following conditions. ETC.

ADVERTISING PRIOR TO FIRST RUN (Under Ninth Clause):

(Note: The following paragraph, designated as paragraph b, is entirely new. The paragraph which was formerly paragraph b, now becomes paragraph c:)

(b) The Exhibitor shall not advertise by any means of advertising any of said motion pictures which may be roadshown by the Distributor and not excepted and excluded from this license, until after the completion of such roadshowing in the United States, and then only as permitted in paragraph (a) of this Clause. ETC.

OPTION TO EXCLUDE IF GROUP LICENSED (Under Fifteenth Clause):

(e) Upon the failure or refusal of the Exhibitor to fully and completely comply with each and every condition hereinabove in this Clause specified and upon which the Exhibitor is granted the right to exclude any of the feature motion pictures licensed hereunder, or provided the parties hereto have agreed to arbitration as provided in Clause Twentieth, and the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to arbitrate any claim or controversy arising hereunder or to comply with any award in respect thereto, such right to exclude any feature motion picture and thereafter to exclude from this license additional feature motion pictures, shall thereupon forthwith terminate and shall not again be granted hereunder during the term hereof. ETC.

PICTURES NOT GENERALLY RELEASED

SEVENTEENTH: If any of the said motion pictures described in the Schedule, excepting those, if any, which may be roadshown by the Distributor, shall not be generally released by the Distributor for distribution in the United States during the period beginning ———— and ending ————, each such motion picture (The original said at this point: "not to exceed a total of five pictures," but this has been eliminated) shall be excluded from this license, upon written notice to such effect given to the Exhibitor by the Distributor prior to fifteen (15) days before the end of said period, unless the Exhibitor shall give written notice to the Distributor not later than thirty (30) days after the end of said period that the Exhibitor elects to exhibit hereunder all such motion pictures if generally released during the year immediately following the end of said period. ETC.

CUTTING OR ALTERATION OF PRINTS

NINETEENTH: The Exhibitor shall exhibit each print in its entirety and shall not copy, duplicate, subrent or part with possession of any print. The Exhibitor shall not cut or alter any print, excepting to make necessary repairs thereto, or when required by any duly constituted public official or authority or with the written or telegraphic consent of the distributor. The Exhibitor however may cut the print of a news reel, and in such case shall completely restore all parts cut therefrom, prior to the return thereof to the Distributor or shipment elsewhere if so directed by the Distributor, in the same condition as received by the Exhibitor.

OPTIONAL ARBITRATION CLAUSE

OPTIONAL CLAUSE: The following Clause Twentieth is optional with the parties hereto. If it is desired to make such clause a part of this license, the Exhibitor and the duly authorized representative of the Distributor shall sign their respective names where indicated immediately following this paragraph and unless so signed the said Clause shall be deemed excluded from this license agreement.

It is agreed by and between the parties that Clause Twentieth, providing for voluntary arbitration of disputes arising hereunder, shall be included as a part of this license.

(Note: The arbitration clause remains unchanged, except for the following in paragraph six:)

The Arbitration Board shall have general power to determine such dispute or controversy as shall be submitted, to make findings of fact in respect thereof and to direct specific performance of a contract, and/or that the same has been breached in whole or in part, and/or that damages on such account shall be paid. The Board of Arbitration shall have the power only to give force and effect to the provisions of this license agreement and the rights or obligations of the parties thereunder; provided that if after a full hearing of any controversy submitted for arbitration hereunder, excepting any submission to an umpire designated as hereinabove provided, the arbitrators or a majority of them are of the opinion that because of unusual circumstances beyond the direct control of the parties hereto disclosed at such hearing, a strict enforcement of the provisions of this license agreement would impose undue hardship upon one of the parties, the arbitrators or a majority of them may recommend in writing to the parties a settlement of such controversy upon such terms and conditions deemed by the arbitrators fair and just. ETC.

OPTIONAL CLAUSES

(Note: There were no changes ordered in the following optional clauses appended at the end of the contract: Advertising Accessories, or Midnight Shows, but the clause on Admission Price was altered as follows:)

ADMISSION PRICES

The Exhibitor during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of each of the motion pictures exhibited hereunder agrees to and shall charge for admission to said theatre the following prices:

Evenings: Adults, orchestra—balcony—children
Matinees: Adults, orchestra—balcony—children

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) to immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion picture shall forthwith terminate and revert to the distributor; or (b) provided the Exhibitor is granted herein a period of "protection" to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half in respect to each of the motion pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of protection is specified in the Schedule to withhold for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days notice of the date when each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor.

ROAD SHOWS

(a) The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit and/or cause to be exhibited as a "roadshow," at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder, such of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as the distributor may from time to time select and determine, provided, however, that such roadshow exhibitions shall be at theatres at which admission prices for evening performances, during such exhibitions thereof, of not less than one dollar shall be charged for the majority of the orchestra seats, and further provided that, except in the cities of New York and Los Angeles, not more than two of such motion pictures shall be so roadshown.

(b) If and when any such roadshow exhibition shall be in the City of New York and/or the City of Los Angeles, the Distributor shall have the right to except and exclude from this license not to exceed two of such motion pictures so roadshown if the Exhibitor's theatre is situated in the territory then served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges located in New York or in Los Angeles, as the case may be, upon sending to the Exhibitor written notice to such effect not later than four (4) weeks after the commencement of such road show exhibition and provided that the Distributor shall by like notice except and exclude such motion picture from all other license agreements containing this Clause and licensing the exhibition of such motion picture in such territory.

(c) If and when any such roadshow exhibition, excepting those in the City of New York and/or in the City of Los Angeles, shall be in the territory served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges serving the Exhibitor's theatre, the Distributor shall have the right to except and exclude from this license not to exceed two of such motion pictures so roadshown upon sending to the Exhibitor written notice to such effect within seven (7) days after the commencement of such roadshow exhibition and provided that the Distributor shall by like notice except and exclude each such motion picture from all other license agreements containing this Clause and licensing the exhibition of such motion picture in such territory.

(d) The inadvertent omission to send to any of such other exhibitors the notice provided for in Paragraphs (a) and (b) of this Clause shall not be deemed to affect the exception and exclusion from this license of any such motion picture.

Changes Made In Proposed Contract

(e) The Distributor may so exercise such right to except and exclude any such motion picture from time to time, in the respective territories, as above defined, in the United States. Any motion picture so roadshown in any place in the United States, and not excepted and excluded from this license as aforesaid, shall not be deemed available for exhibition hereunder until after the completion of such roadshowing of such motion picture in the United States, and such motion picture shall be exhibited hereunder when generally released by the Distributor and as and when available for exhibition by the Exhibitor, and the term of this license agreement specified in Clause Second shall be in respect to each such motion picture, extended to and including the date or dates of exhibition by the Exhibitor hereunder of each thereof.

(f) For each motion picture that the Distributor shall except and exclude, as aforesaid, the Exhibitor is hereby granted the option to except and exclude from this license (in addition to those which may be excluded as provided in Clauses Fifteenth and Seventeenth) one of the other motion pictures licensed hereunder, but only if the Exhibitor shall give to the Distributor written notice to such effect not later than fourteen days before the date fixed for the exhibition hereunder of such other motion picture. The Distributor may exhibit and/or license the exhibition of any and all motion pictures excepted and excluded from this license by the Distributor and/or the Exhibitor, as aforesaid, when and where desired by the Distributor, free from all claims of the Exhibitor in respect thereof and the license of each thereof shall forthwith upon exclusion as hereinbefore provided terminate and revert to the Distributor.

NEW OPTIONAL CLAUSE INSERTED

(Note: The following was inserted as an Optional Clause and is entirely new:)

The following Clause may be, at the option of the Distributor, substituted for subdivision (b) of Clause Eighth:

(b) The parties hereto agreeing that the popularity of different types of motion pictures is subject to constant change and that the Distributor may find it necessary or advisable in certain cases to substitute different motion pictures for those designated or described in the Schedule, the Exhibitor agrees, provided any such substituted motion picture is equal in box office possibilities to the motion picture for which it is substituted, to accept such substituted motion picture in place of the motion picture originally designated or described, with the same force and effect as if the substituted motion picture had been originally designated and described in the Schedule. If the Exhibitor desires to question the relative box office possibilities of the original motion picture and the substituted motion picture, the Exhibitor may do so within five (5) days after the receipt of written notice of substitution which shall be sent by the Distributor to the Exhibitor prior to or concurrently with the mailing of the notice of availability thereof. At the time of mailing of such notice of substitution the Distributor shall have available for screening at the exchange of the Distributor from which the Exhibitor is served, a print of the substituted motion picture. If the Exhibitor contends that the substituted motion picture is not equal in box office possibilities to the original motion picture, the Exhibitor shall, within said five day period so notify the Distributor in writing and in such notice shall designate an appraiser stating his name and business address, failing which the Exhibitor shall be deemed to have accepted the substitution. Within three days after the receipt of such notice from the Exhibitor, the Distributor shall, by written notice to the appraiser designated by the Exhibitor and to the Exhibitor designate an appraiser, stating his name and business address.

The appraisal to determine the relative box office possibilities of the said two motion pictures shall proceed within five (5) days after the designation of an appraiser by the Distributor and shall be held in the City in which is located the exchange of the Distributor from which the Exhibitor is served. The appraisers so designated, in determining the relative box office possibilities of said two motion pictures, may consider the suitability of the type of the substituted motion picture for the Exhibitor's theatre.

If the two appraisers are unable to agree upon the relative box office possibilities of the said two motion pictures, they shall appoint an umpire. If they cannot agree upon an umpire, an umpire shall be appointed by the President of the Chamber of Commerce or a person holding a similar position in such City; and the decision of the umpire upon such question shall be final and binding upon the parties hereto.

If within thirty (30) days after the receipt from the Distributor of a notice of substitution the Exhibitor shall elect, by written notice to the Distributor, to exhibit in place of the motion picture proposed to be substituted the original motion picture, if thereafter generally released by the Distributor, the Distributor shall deliver and the Exhibitor shall exhibit hereunder such original motion picture provided it is generally released by the Distributor within two (2) years from the date of said notice of substitution.

AUSTRALIANS UNITE TO PROTECT INDUSTRY

Unit Will Handle Problems of Political Attacks, Censorship, Taxation, Minimum Admission, Better Working Conditions

by CLIFF HOLT

Sydney Correspondent

A protective organization governing the Australian amusement industry in all its phases has been formed in Sydney after protracted conferences between distributor and exhibitor association representatives. It is proposed that the organization be federated with interstate branches throughout the Commonwealth, and that it be known provisionally as the Motion Picture Industries Council of Australia.

Objectives of the Council will be:

To bring about closer cooperation and more satisfactory working conditions between exhibitors and distributors.

To interest itself in all matters pertaining to the industry's affairs, particularly in respect to the combating of political propaganda.

To deal with censorship and onerous methods of taxation.

To protect the industry in industrial matters.

To stabilize minimum admission prices.

To deal with such matters that may be affecting the industry as a whole or in any branch.

It is expected that those eligible for admission to the Council will consist primarily of Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., Greater Union Theatres, Ltd., Fullers Theatres, Ltd., Federated Showmen's Association, Motion Picture Distributors Association, Famous Lasky Films, Fox, Warner-First National, MGM, Universal, United Artists, Greater Australasian Films (distributors of Columbia and British Dominion Films product), British Dominions Films, British Empire Films (distributors of British International product), RKO Pathe and Celebrity Pictures (distributors of independent American product). In states outside of New South Wales the Council will comprise distributor and exhibitor representatives yet to be appointed.

Specialists Sought

Because such a large membership will be difficult to handle, it is proposed that the Council, as a body, shall appoint sub committees. This would enable the organization to obtain the services of men who specialize in taxation and industrial matters, and so on. Further conferences will be held before the Council gets into working order.

A protective organization has not come before its time. Too long has the entertainment business here stood up against the attacks of politician and press; too long altogether has it had to battle the storm of verbal abuse, and, what is more directly harmful, the sort of taxation that could be imposed only in ignorance of its true financial structure. We have needed an organization consisting of influential men and representatives of influential companies, to protect us against these cripplers of trade, and now that it has arrived it is to be hoped that some use is made of it. For some months an Amusement Defense Association has existed in Australia, but its interests have been mainly those of the exhibitor and employee. It has no distributor representation, and so is not completely representative of the industry. The newly formed Council is representative, and with the weight of every Australian amusement company behind it, should wield a power that will be hard to deny.

A Place to Start

One of the Council's first acts might be to inquire of certain leading Australian papers just why they are conducting a campaign that is directly opposed to American picture interests and wholly out of step with what the public, as a whole, thinks of American film product. Let them nurse British films if they choose; but in so doing surely they should not find it necessary to slander those which come from the studios of Hollywood and New York. I referred to this matter in the last issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and I refer to it again. Certain Australian newspapers are deliberately conducting a day by day campaign against American films, not in their review columns, but in their news columns, where they are publishing regularly violent attacks on American pictures, individually or collectively, with the result that while British films of ordinary merit are getting away to remarkable business in proportion to their entertainment value, outstanding successes among American pictures are few and far between. This may be, of course, that British films are now appealing to Colonial audiences more than the films from a foreign country. If so, American producers, if they wish to retain supremacy in the Dominion markets, will have to do some hard thinking. But more likely, it is because the press is making Australian audiences British-picture minded, and they, the Australian audiences, obeying the press as is their wont, are forgetting that the average American picture is still undeniably superior to any other in the world. One important reason why the Council, as a protective organization for the entire industry, should endeavor to set this matter right, is this: American product is still 75 per cent of the programs of Australian exhibitors, a figure that will not vary greatly within the next few years—and while it remains so high, the success of Australian exhibitors is almost wholly dependent on the success of American pictures.

Doran Leaves Paramount

D. A. Doran, Jr., eastern story editor for Paramount, resigned on Monday. It is understood no successor will be appointed. He leaves for the Coast on Saturday and is expected to engage in legitimate theatre production on his return to New York in five or six weeks.

NATIONAL COUNCIL HAS CENSORSHIP SUBSTITUTE

Proposes Obscenity Laws Be Lone Basis for Prosecution, Restriction on Minors Be Enforced, Reviewing Expanded

A bill to repeal censorship in New York state is now being drafted by the National Council on Freedom from Censorship as the first step in a national campaign to establish a practical and reasonable substitute plan for censorship of motion pictures. It is expected that the bill will be introduced at Albany when the legislature convenes in January.

According to Gordon W. Moss, secretary, the National Council proposes the following plan:

1. Prosecution only under the obscenity laws.

2. Strict enforcement of laws prohibiting minors (under 16) from attending theatres without parent or guardian.

3. A more effective and widespread reviewing service — similar to the National Board of Review — whose sole purpose shall be to inform prospective patrons of the kind of picture being offered.

The National Council on Freedom from Censorship was organized a little more than a year ago. It has for its slogan, "Censorship Covers Up But Does Not Cure," and is concerned with anti-censorship work in the field of motion pictures, periodicals, radio, books and plays.

Leaders in literature and the theatre identified with the movement include Hatcher Hughes, chairman; Barrett H. Clark, Fannie Hurst and Elmer Rice, vice-chairmen; Harry Elmer Barnes, treasurer; Bruce Bliven, James Branch Cabell, Henry Seidel Canby, Edward Childs Carpenter, Marc Connelly, Walter Pritchard Eaton, Morris L. Ernst, Paul Green, Arthur Garfield Hays, Theresa Helburn, Sidney Howard, Rupert Hughes, Inez Haynes Irwin, Dorothy Kenyon, Kenneth Macgowan, H. L. Mencken, George Jean Nathan, Eugene O'Neill, Stewart Edward White and Harry Leon Wilson.

Morris L. Ernst, New York attorney, was a leading influence in organization of the National Council. Mr. Ernst, with Pare Lorentz, is co-author of "Censored—the Private Life of the Movies."

From the start the council sought a complete list of all cuts made by the New York state censor, and a bill was introduced in the state legislature. Dr. James Wingate, then state censor, blocked this effort. The National Council then applied to the board of regents of the New York state department of education and instructions finally were issued. The collection of this type of information from other states having censor boards, among them Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, Kansas and Ohio, will be continued. If more complete data are obtained, the National Council hopes to publish such information.

Mr. Moss said producers tend to emphasize the "wicked" qualities of their pictures, an influence that indirectly supports the idea of censorship.

Censor Blames Poor Pictures

Pictures, not the depression, are responsible for the condition of the theatre business today and the theatre managers are up in arms because they do not "get one decent picture in ten" William Cutts, member of the Portland, Ore., censor board and owner of the Kenton theatre, declared at a meeting of the board recently.

Mr. Cutts declared that theatre men have been forced to show pictures "that would not have been allowed in a bar room ten years ago" and that this has affected the box office receipts and aroused the theatre men to demand clean pictures. He stated that not one picture in five would comply with the producers own Production Code.

In the discussions it was asked whether the censor board considered the box office receipts when it acted on a picture. Robert M. Mount, chairman of the censor board, stated that the only consideration given the box office was on the basis that it was a reflection of public sentiment on the picture and that in case a picture had been a success elsewhere that fact was considered when the question of condemnation was up.

Mr. Cutts said, "Salacious pictures have been produced because the people seem to want them. They had a box office value. I don't believe that the censors of the city, however, should have any consideration whatever for the producers' investment because that producer is taking a chance on the box office when he makes the picture."

Feld and Chatkin Leave Paramount

Milton Feld and David J. Chatkin have resigned from Paramount Publix Corporation, where for many years they have been identified with the company's theatre management activities, and will soon go into partnership.

Sam Dembow, in charge of Publix theatres, will take over the duties relinquished by Mr. Chatkin. No successor has been named for Mr. Feld, who has been in charge of de luxe theatres operation. The Publix theatres in New England, the South and the Comerford division were under the direction of Mr. Chatkin.

New Canadian Company to Produce Quota Pictures

Commonwealth Productions, Ltd., an entirely British organization, has been formed at Victoria, B. C., for the production of quota pictures. George H. Callahan, American representative for the new company, has established offices at 220 West 42d street, New York.

Equipment is being acquired for a new studio, to be erected in Victoria.

General Theatres Suits Held Unwise

The institution of proposed suits by Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Wilmington, Del., receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., on behalf of the corporation, would be extremely dangerous to the reorganization plans now under way, in the opinion of J. O. Wolcott in Chancery Court in Wilmingon last week, Chancellor Wolcott expressed the belief that reorganization will be of greater benefit to creditors than could be hoped if the plans were disrupted.

Those who sought the inauguration of suits are understood to have stated that $14,000,000 could be recovered for the corporation if the suits were successful. The court indicated that the receiver had shown that, based on present values, the successful completion of the proposed litigation would result in only three cents on the dollar for creditors, while if the present reorganization plans are completed no litigation would ensue and active participation in the reorganized corporation would be saved to the creditors to the extent of 10 per cent of their claims. The court further stated that if there is merit in the proposed suits they can be instituted later with no harm resulting from delay.

One Kaplan Suit Settled; Coercion Trial December 12

A settlement has been reached in the trial of the suit brought by four members of projectionists' Local 306 against Sam Kaplan, its deposed president, following the announcement that Mr. Kaplan and other officers had been removed by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Empolyees and M. P. Operators. Justice McCook in New York Supreme court said both sides had agreed to have him act as arbitrator in deciding the sum to be paid the plaintiffs, who were asking the removal of Mr. Kaplan as president and damages to the amount of $20,000 on the ground that they had been discriminated against and kept out of work. Those suing were Nathaniel Doragoff, Ernest Giesemann, Charles McDermott and Samuel Simon.

The trial of Mr. Kaplan and 21 other ousted officers and members of Local 306 on a coercion indictment will commence before Judge Allen in general sessions court on December 12.

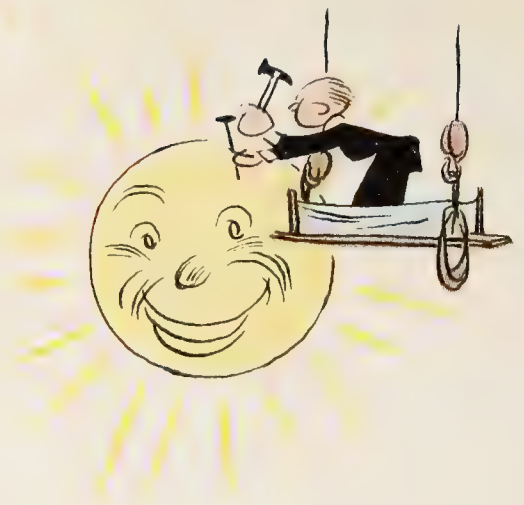
Patent Fight in Denmark



The Nordisk Tenafilm Company, Copenhagen, Denmark, owner of patent rights for sound motion pictures, has instituted a campaign against American films produced by the Western Electric system. The company contends Western Electric violated patents the Nordisk company took in April, and stopped a Copenhagen performance. The Nordisk patents are said to cover all film produced in Norway, Sweden, Finland and Germany, as well as in Denmark.

Prior to that, Mr. Griswold had been financial editor of two Chicago newspapers and for two years was western manager of Dow, Jones and Company.

Trans-Lux Theatres Corporation is prepared to issue franchises for its rear-screen projector to companies outside greater New York who wish to establish theatres similar to the combination newsreel and short subject houses now operating in the city. While the Broadway Trans-Lux theatre recently has been enlarged, the Madison Avenue property will not be, due to lack of available space. A newsreel, cartoon, travelogue or scenic, and a two-reel comedy comprise the average bill at the Broadway theatre.

MUSIC CLEARANCE BUREAU ORGANIZED

Would Make Copyrighted Music Available at Once for Recording and Reproducing Under Proposed License Plan

Members of the Music Publishers' Protective Association are organizing a music clearance bureau to make copyrighted music immediately available for recording and reproducing by motion picture companies under the terms of a new license agreement which is expected to give interested parties a more favorable deal all around.

A preliminary meeting was held last week and another was scheduled for this week, with Major Edward Bowes, of MGM, chairman of the producers' committee, to meet with the publishers in drawing up an interim arrangement. A final definitive agreement probably will be ready early next year. John Gregg Paine, chairman of the association's board, will head the new group.

According to Major Bowes, one of the important questions to be decided is whether Electrical Research Products, Inc., will be continued as the industry's representative or whether the producers will negotiate directly with the publishers. Major Bowes said Tuesday that no temporary arrangement had yet been reached and the meetings were being continued.

Special Arrangements Needed

Since September 5, when agreements with respect to the use of music were terminated between the producers, Erpi, RCA Photophone and the publishers, the situation has been considered most unsatisfactory. Under contracts prior to that date, the producers had available about 150 catalogues of music publishers. Today, it is said, there is no definite and simplified method whereby producers can obtain the rights to copyrighted music. Special arrangements of musical compositions are often necessary. Then, too, producers now find that they run the risk of infringement in the case of original compositions written by their staff men, whereas they previously were protected.

The costliness and other unsatisfactory features of this situation recently led producers to request the association to work out some better plan. Through the new music clearance bureau the industry is expected to have available a much larger number of compositions, since all the copyrighted music in the catalogues—either owned or controlled—of the 57 association members will clear through it.

Within recent years the music publishers say they have suffered an almost complete loss of sheet music market in the home. The result has been that publishers have had to look to the mechanical users of copyrighted music for revenue.

Two Rights Must Be Acquired

So far as picture companies are concerned, there are two different rights which must be acquired in connection with the use of music in synchronization with films. The first is the right to mechanical reproduction, plus necessary adaptation. This right, under the plan now being formulated, eventually will be obtainable through the music clearance bureau. The second right has to do with the performance of this music in theatres and is obtainable through the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. At present, an annual tax of 10 cents a seat is in effect, payable by exhibitors.

During the last five years the music publishers have received approximately $500,000 annually from picture producers.

In the pending negotiations, the definition of terms is of first importance. Royalty payments probably will be based on the type of music used and the type of picture in which it is included.

In the issue of September 17, MOTION PICTURE HERALD published an extensive analysis of the domestic music situation as it related to Erpi, the producers and the publishers.

J. D. CLARK TAKES OVER GRAINGER POST AT FOX

Assumes Sales Supervision as Grainger Gets Leave Pending Contract Settlement; Points Out Differences With Kent

S. R. Kent, president of Fox Film, late last week announced that James R. Grainger, vice-president and general sales manager, is taking a 60-day leave of absence and that John D. Clark had taken over his duties.

"Mr. Grainger's future status will be determined during that period of time and our good will follows him wherever he may finally go," Mr. Kent stated.

Mr. Clark, who left immediately for a visit to 15 of the company's exchanges in the south, middle west and far west, announced the appointment of H. G. Ballance as district manager for the southern territory, comprising Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis, Dallas, Oklahoma City and New Orleans. Mr. Ballance's post is a newly created one and will not affect the present exchange set up.

With Paramount 16 Years

Before joining the Fox sales department Mr. Ballance had been with Paramount for 16 years, having started in that organization with Herman Wobber on the west coast as exchange manager at Los Angeles. Subsequently he held the positions of district manager for New England, home office division manager for the south and east, and district manager of the south.

W. J. Kupper, in charge of sales for the western and Canadian divisions, will accompany Mr. Clark on part of his swing around the Fox exchanges and Max Roth will join them in Oklahoma City. Before returning to New York Mr. Clark will visit the Fox studios in Hollywood.

A statement issued by Mr. Grainger said:

"Honest differences of opinion with reference to distribution policies of Fox have arisen between Mr. Sidney R. Kent, the president of the corporation, and myself. The exchanges of views between us were carried on in the most amicable and understanding manner, and at no time have there been any but the most friendly relations between us. In view of the fact that this discrepancy of views occurred, it was deemed advisable by Mr. Kent that the corporation and I attempt an amicable adjustment of my contract and that in the interim I take a leave of absence on full pay pursuant to my contract, pending the consummation of such settlement. These negotiations will be carried on in my behalf by my counsel, Mr. Saul E. Rogers, with counsel of Fox Film. Until negotiations are consummated for settlement of my contract I naturallly cannot make any plans for the future.

"The severance of my relations with the company will naturally be regretful after the many years I have spent with the company, but I am happy that the parting will take place with mutual expressions of good will. I wish Mr. Kent every possible success in the solution of his problems."

James R. Grainger went to Fox as general sales manager in March, 1924, from MGM, where he had occupied a similar post. When Harley L. Clarke assumed control of the Fox interests in May, 1930, a new board elected Mr. Grainger vice president in charge of distribution. The Motion Picture Almanac says that he was born in New York and educated in Boston and that he entered show business while still in teens, serving as advance man and publicity agent for road shows. Later he was business manager and advance man with circuses and other outdoor attractions. Left outdoor amusement business to handle the big roadshow screen attraction, "Cabiria." Then became western divisional sales manager for Edison Pictures, his territory including that west of Chicago with headquarters in San Francisco. Assumed general managership of Thomas Ince Pictures Corporation. Upon death of Ince he joined Fox as assistant to Winfield Sheehan and a year later resigned and organized Marshall Neilan Productions. During the time he was general manager for Neilan he represented Charlie Chaplin on distribution of "The Kid" and others and also represented William Randolph Hearst in his association with Famous Players-Lasky, through which he was distributing pictures at that time. He then became vice president and salesmanager of the old Goldwyn Company.

Mr. Clark, in his initial statement to the sales force of Fox on Monday, assured the department that its manpower would be strengthened, rather than reduced, asked for complete co-operation and pointed out that product is being improved.

Sales Cabinet Formed

He announced the formation of a sales cabinet with which he will meet once each week beginning in January. The cabinet includes Jack Sichelman, Tom H. Bailey, W. J. Kupper, William Sussman, Sidney J. Towell, George A. Roberts, Clarence A. Hill, N. B. Finkler, Earl Wingart, Lee Balsley and Roger Ferri. Beyond the appointment of Mr. Ballance, no personnel changes were announced.

Mr. Clark's statement, in part, said:

"It is not Mr. Kent's policy to take from manpower. Our efforts will be dedicated to strengthening our present manpower to the fullest and greatest possible degree. No organization can have too much good manpower.

"All I can expect and ask is the 100 per cent co-operation of every man. I want to earn your loyalty and the affection of every man in this organization.

"I have nothing but admiration for the sales manpower. An organization that could have gone through the turbulent two and a half years that you boys have gone through must have capable and fighting manpower.

"To exalt and strengthen this manpower by additions—and not subtractions—is our aim. Every man stands on his own two feet. No man will want for the opportunity to give full play to his ability.

"Beginning with the first of the year you can look forward to a brand of product that will assure us greater revenue. Meantime, it is the duty of every manager and salesman to close every situation that has not already been sold on the current season's product. Let us concentrate, too, on playdates. Let every man see that our pictures are properly booked and the right playdates furnished."

LOEW NETS $7,961,000 IN 1932; ASSETS LISTED AT $124,785,000

Earnings Equivalent to $4.80 a Share on Common and Regular $6.50 on Preferred; Net Was $11,829,994 in 1931

Current Assets: $35,000,000; Current Liabilities: $5,347,000

Loew's, Inc., reports a net profit of $7,961,314 for 1932, in the face of general economic conditions during that period. Earnings and the corporation's financial position as set forth in the statement issued last week-end to stockholders reflect the efficiency and progressiveness of the administration, both in Culver City and New York. General operating expenses are the lowest in four years, or longer.

After making provision for depreciation, amortization, federal taxes and subsidiary preferred dividends (to MGM), earnings for 1932 were equivalent to $4.80 a share on 1,464,205 no-par shares of common stock, and the regular $6.50 per share dividend on preferred. This compares with a net of $11,829,994, or $7.43 a share on the common in the preceding fiscal year.

Operating profit for 1932 was $14,126,076, before depreciation and federal taxes. Net profit was $9,288,218, but this was reduced to $7,961,315 by deduction of $1,002,046 for minority interests' share, and $324,857 for Metro's preferred dividend.

Total assets on August 31, 1932, were $124,784,945, of which $34,908,872 were current and working assets, including $8,431,927 in cash and short-term U. S. Government securities. Current liabilities were only $5,346,845, which further indicates the favorable position of the corporation and its subsidiaries and affiliates, including Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. In 1931, the company reported current assets at $40,028,397 and current liabilities of $7,719,323.

Land, buildings and equipment and leaseholds, including $18,255,325 reserve for depreciation, were valued at $89,725,009, or net of $71,469,780. The corporation, as of August 31, had investments totaling $14,898,878 in stocks, mortgages, sinking fund requirements, deposits, etc.

Obligations included: $149,174 in long-term notes; $9,934,000 in 15-year six per cent debentures, due 1941; bonds and mortgages of subsidiaries totaling $11,922,466; first lien six per cent bonds of subsidiary, due 1947, $8,560,300; MGM preferred stock outstanding, $4,690,818; 140,497 shares of preferred stock, no-par value, $6.50 cumulative, totaling $13,276,966, and $36,576,580 in 1,464,205 shares of no-par common.

Gross income for 1932 was $107,416,036, of which $99,311,967 was earned by film rentals, accessories and theatre admissions. The corporation got $4,525,648 from store rentals and office space, and $1,374,140 in booking fees and commissions.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EXPANDS ACTIVITIES IN PROTECTION PROBE

Attorney General Warns Against Easing Up Enforcement of Antitrust Laws, While Suggesting Temporary Relief

The Department of Justice enters its last few months under the present administration at Washington with renewed interest in its widespread activities as official investigator of the conduct of American business and as prosecutor under federal antitrust statutes.

Currently the motion picture industry is the object of more than passing interest of the department's agents. For two years or more the government has been quietly investigating the protection and zoning situation and its many ramifications, and now, on the eve of a new government, it appears that the efforts of these special agents have been doubled.

Of all government agencies, the Department of Justice probably has the most consistent policy, and that is the enforcement of laws enacted by Congress. The department rarely attempts to put its own interpretation upon those statutes, preferring to leave that to the courts. Because of its pronounced reluctance to premature discussion of the findings of its agents, or the results of what usually represents thorough investigating, it is impossible at present to learn the status of the current zoning and protection inquiry, or the nature of testimony gathered.

Attorney General Issues Warning

Investigation by the department does not necessarily imply that prosecution is inevitable. However, pointing to the prosecutions conducted during the past year as an evidence of the intention of the department to continue its enforcement of the trust statutes without relaxation, Attorney General William D. Mitchell, in his annual report just submitted to Congress, warns against any easing up of these laws, although suggesting the possibility of formulating some measure of relief "as a temporary expedient in the present emergency without a permanent departure from the fundamentals of our present system."

This subject, he declares, should have prompt and sympathetic consideration from Congress as an aid to the recovery of economic and financial stability.

Three antitrust cases involving the motion picture industry were pending at the close of the fiscal year on June 30 last, the report shows. The suit against Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., et al, alleging violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act in the acquisition by Warner Brothers of stock of First National Pictures, was pending in the southern district of New York, to be tried shortly.

With the exception of one defendant, regarding whom the case is still pending, the consent decree was brought to a conclusion in the civil case in the northern district of Illinois against Balaban and Katz Corporation, et al, enjoining the defendants from granting to theatres affiliated with them in the Chicago territory any arbitrary or unreasonable protection or clearance over competing unaffiliated theatres in obtaining films.

The third case involves Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, et al., against whom a criminal information was filed in the northern district of Illinois, involving an agreement between exchange managers and MPPDA to refuse to deliver films during the existence of a labor dispute in Chicago in 1927. Pleas of not guilty have been entered by the defendants and, when the report was written, the case was awaiting further action.

"In the field of antitrust laws," the attorney general declared, "it is evident that overproduction and low prices have increased the pressure from business for legislation allowing combinations and concerted action to limit production and thus increase prices without awaiting gradual readjustments from the natural law of supply and demand. It is also evident that if present restrictions against such combinations are withdrawn, the consuming public will have to be furnished governmental protection against excessive prices.

"We cannot do away with our competitive system without substituting governmental supervision of some kind to prevent unreasonable exactions from the public, and the prospect of projecting the Government further into business regulation, by way of supervision of prices, is not an attractive one.

"This department has consistently maintained the position that the prohibitions in our antitrust laws have not been abrogated by the business depression and the fact that industry has been operating in the red, and that the place to amend the antitrust laws is in Congress and not in the Department of Justice."

Agents Gathering Testimony

Special agents continue to gather testimony in many territories for a complete study of protection and zoning. Exhibitors, exchangemen and others in key cities have been contacted, particularly in New York, Pittsburgh, Kansas City, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Seattle, Milwaukee and Philadelphia.

At the Eastern exhibitors' mass meeting in New York last week, Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied in New Jersey, read a communication which he said was sent by the Department of Justice, urging theatre owners to visit department headquarters to discuss protection and to file complaints with three special agents who have been assigned to delve into zoning practices and alleged abuses. However, J. E. Dunne, chief agent in New York, said that the message which Mr. Samuelson delivered to the mass conference "was not done at our suggestion or invitation and was wrongly interpreted." He said the attorney general's department has been conducting a zoning investigation, but it became active in the New York territory only recently. The Philadelphia and Pittsburgh inquiries are also of recent origin. Suits already have been filed in certain key cities.

Loew's Net for Year $7,961,000

$120,479,511; expenses, $101,609,074; 1930, gross, $129,521,029; expenses, $107,120,614. 1929, $116,201,937; expenses, $97,770,774.

Surplus as of August 31, 1932, after providing for adjustments and other factors, was $33,562,787, representing an increase of about $240,000 over the preceding year; $5,000,000 over 1930, and about $13,000,000 above 1929.

The company paid $5,856,567 in common dividends last year, and $927,451 in preferred, compared with previous years as follows: 1931, common, $5,710,786; preferred, $946,354. 1930, common, $4,817,122; preferred, $953,963. 1929, $4,034,076; preferred, $969,800. Miscellaneous income last year, including discount on bonds and preferred stocks retired, totaled $422,663.

Amortization schedules were revised as of September 1, the beginning of the current fiscal year. The company listed $27,560,374 as amortization of films during 1932. In submitting the 1932 financial statement to the directorate, Price Waterhouse and Miller, Donaldson, certified public accountants, said: "Cost of films has been amortized against rentals received during the year ended August 31, 1932, on a basis in accord with the company's experience prior to August 31, 1931, as determined by independent verification. Beginning with September 1, 1932, the company has arranged to revise its tables of amortization of picture costs to give effect to its experience during the fiscal year just ended, which indicates that a greater percentage of the total cost should be written off during the earlier earning life of the pictures than in former years. If the new rates of amortization had been applied to the inventory of released films at August 31, 1932, these inventories would have been reduced by approximately $2,500,000. Based on present conditions, we concur in the opinion of the management that inventory of released films as stated, even without making any adjustment, is below its net realizable value."

The company's foreign subsidiary corporations and branches whose accounts are consolidated had combined net current assets of $1,661,037.58, of which $674,852 were represented by companies resident in Great Britain.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Miss Tallulah Bankhead is to be congratulated. She, of Jasper, Ala., New York, London and Hollywood, arrived in town Monday from the Coast, with eight trunks, 48 pairs of shoes and Edie Smith, maid and companion—but with nary a word of criticism or condemnation for the movieland whence she came, admittedly unable to successfully hurdle the obstacles of stardom.

"I'm going to be original," news writers quoted her as saying. "I'm not here to pan Hollywood, but to praise it. Hollywood's all right," she went on. "So are the people. But the sunshine's lousy."

Mr. Hoover took the offer under advisement, posed with Roxy for photographs on the south lawn of the White House, and news writers covered the event to the satisfaction of Mr. Rothafel and his sponsors at Radio City.

The School of Thoroughness has pervaded the industry! When Sidney R. Kent left Paramount some months ago to join Fox he started a train of changes that seeped into the selling force and down into the secretarial strata. But the high mark came the other day when we found the bootblack who graced the Paramount headquarters during other days shining things up for the "Old Guard" at Fox's headquarters on Tenth Avenue.

Decision of Allied to renew its efforts for federal legislation brought mixed reactions in New York. Improbabilities of the ultimate success of such a campaign were voiced informally far and wide following the Eastern mass meeting at the Park Central. Exhibitors congregated in small groups about the hotel and continued the discussion far into Thursday night. One gentleman, who occupies an important position in the industry and knows a thing or two about the political aspects of Capitol Hill, made the very interesting observation that, in his opinion, proponents of a federal bill have overlooked the fact that the Presidential pen controls the important power of veto and that several members of the opposing element within the industry enjoy the friendship of Franklin Delano Roosevelt!

MR. LAEMMLE ENTERS BUSINESS

Carl Laemmle is getting ready to celebrate another anniversary, his twenty-seventh in the motion picture business. The Universal chief attaches much sentiment to these occasions.

Early in February in 1906, F. Worthington Butts, who printed Mr. Laemmle's first poster, accompanied "Uncle Carl" to the front of a little 200-seater located on Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago. The night was bitter cold and both stood for hours secretly "clocking" the customers. Mr. Laemmle had opened negotiations to purchase the theatre and he wanted to satisfy himself that he was not buying a "lemon." The crowd was large and both agreed that it was a successful property. Mr. Laemmle learned later that about two-thirds of the admissions on that night were passes.

The Wrigley influence is at last coming to the surface in the Paramount organization. The late William Wrigley, Jr., who died suddenly on January 26, 1932, entered the Paramount picture with John Hertz and became a member of the board. Last week Publix officials notified house managers of the circuit that a Wrigley gum gift package is available for youngsters at Christmas kiddie matinees, at absolutely no cost to the company. This comes as a result of an exclusive tieup with the Wrigley Company, of Chicago. The package contains one stick "of each of all the fine flavors made by Wrigley," says Paramount, and includes card-board cut-out dolls of the Wrigley trade mark characters.

Censoring of "Grand Central Airport" by aviation leaders raises a question which will have to be settled definitely, and that is whether outside interests should be allowed to interfere with the filming of a picture descriptive of their business to the detriment of realism and plot, according to Jack Moffitt, motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star, who wrote the original air story. It is understood that Jack Warner effected a compromise with aviation interests and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

"The major complication in the story arises out of the efforts of an air line official to suppress news," said Mr. Moffitt. Some of the scenes which are said to have raised objections called for air crashes of commercial skyliners and close-ups of passenger wrecks. One sequence depicted the shooting of a pilot injured in the crash of a burning plane, to save him from agony. This, according to Moffitt, actually happened.

We may now expect the railroads to yowl about the venerable train wreck, and the automobile manufacturers to complain about auto crashes hurting their business.

SUPERIOR ARTISTRY IN NEW FILMS

And Technical Perfection, Too, Says Meehan of "Farewell To Arms" and "Animal Kingdom"

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Two pictures which will be among those noted for superior artistry and technical perfection among the season's offerings were previewed in the past week. Paramount presented its keenly anticipated version of Ernest Hemingway's "Farewell to Arms," and RKO Radio screened the notable Philip Barry stage success, "The Animal Kingdom." Both represent the very finest production intelligence Hollywood has, which, believe it or not, means the best in the world. It is interesting to note that each of them in its original form, one a novel and the other a stage play, was of such a nature as to make it very difficult material for transmutation to the screen. In each there was a delicate extra-marital relationship which might cause much censorship and criticism.

In "Farewell to Arms" Benjamin Glazer and OliverH. P. Garrett have succeeded admirably in getting around the unusual romance between an American ambulance driver and a British war nurse on duty on the Italian front. Add to this the subtle direction of Frank Borzage, who did a similarly excellent job last year with "Bad Girl," and received for it the Academy award; and add to that an unforgettable screen performance by another Academy winner, Helen Hayes, and you will realize at once that the picture merits the respectful attention of all. It is beautifully done in every way. I doubt if there ever has been a better job of sound reproduction, and the photography is outstanding in an era when fine cinematography has become almost commonplace. Gary Cooper supports Miss Hayes admirably as the American ambulance driver, and the remainder of the cast also is excellent, including the work of a newcomer, to us at least, Mary Philips. There will be those, of course, who will criticize the moral premises of the story, but they will be pretty well disarmed by the utter sincerity and beauty of the picture.

Ann Harding Comeback

Noteworthy in connection with "The Animal Kingdom" is a real comeback for Ann Harding, following several roles in which she has been far below par. Never has she appeared more beautiful, and she gives the role the warm sincerity and humanness that characterized her performance in "Holiday." Once again Leslie Howard registers himself as one of our foremost actors, stage or screen. The other important role is filled by Myrna Loy, who for once has something to do besides posing as a vampire of the post-Theda Bara era. As the luxury loving, somewhat too commercially sensuous wife of Howard, Miss Loy gives possibly her best screen performance.

E. H. Griffith, who has been more successful with Miss Harding than any other, directed the picture with a keen perception of the intimate psychological and pathological values with which Mr. Barry likes to endow his plays. There is, of course, a great deal of dialogue, and not any too much action, but it is very deftly done by all. William Gargan, who played the marine in the Joan Crawford version of "Rain," turns up as an excellent comedian, an outstanding hit in the picture. Sets by a new RKO art director, Van Nest Polglase, are charming.

The box office fate of these two productions, naturally, lies with those whom Abraham Lincoln so naïvely called "the people." But if the "peepul" are interested in cinema, superbly done, they ought to like them, provided they are not "massecrated" by the censors.

Wallace Beery as a Wrestler

Now comes Mr. Wallace Beery as a delightful German wrestling champion in "Flesh." It is one of the finest performances he ever has given; I liked it best of all. The role is deeply sympathetic, with a grand admixture of pathos and comedy. So how can it miss?

Wally is the innocent but willing victim of two arch-schemers, Karen Morley and Ricardo Cortez, and Cortez here is one of the heaviest heavies that ever hit the screen. Miss Morley's performance is excellent, though in one or two spots her wavering between going straight and staying crooked is pretty far-fetched, which is no fault of hers, but of the scenarist. However, there is a world of entertainment in "Flesh."

Another screen favorite who hasn't been seen to advantage for these many moons, Ruth Chatterton, gets a better break in a typical Warner-First National high-powered melodrama called "Frisco Jenny." It may be that if the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce can stop it you never will see this picture, however, for it actually shows that an earthquake of no anemic proportions preceded the famous "Fire" of 1906. Frisco Jenny lives her whole life in the underworld, has an illegitimate son who, adopted by an Oakland family when a baby, grows up to become a reform district attorney of San Francisco, and sends his mother to the gallows at San Quentin, her lips still sealed with the secret of her son's parentage. Very melodramatic, and well done. Miss Chatterton is excellent, speaks good American dialogue, and is supported by an exceptionally strong cast.

Speaking of shocks, Paramount evidently set out to put an end to the horror pictures by outdoing them all in "Island of Lost Souls. A "scientist" on a South Sea island, where scenarists and writers like H. G. Wells seem to think anything can happen (probably it's the climate), produces human beings from animals, if you like. Peculiarly, they run to males, but he does turn out one female, and quite a gal, too. She is, incidentally, the winner of Paramount's "Panther Woman" contest, Kathleen Burke, of Chicago, where "panthers" carry machine guns. Pretty pantherish, all right. Charles Laughton gives a great performance as the scientist.

"Fast Life" features Bill Haines in a speedboat racing yarn into which all sorts of thrills and good old hokum comedy have been jammed. Incidentally, if you look closely you will find that the radio announcer is none other than Pete Smith, the feller who makes all those funny wisecracks in MGM's sport shorts. It is Pete's screen debut in person.

Columbia's "Man Against Woman" starts off with the familiar background of night clubs and racketeers, but switches off to a Bermuda locale and an unusual romantic climax. Jack Holt plays a different sort of detective, who does his best job after he has been fired from the force for seeming neglect of duty. Irving Cummings keeps up the suspense and the melodrama expertly.

The two-reel operalogues which Kendall-De Vally Productions is making for Educational release merit the attention of showmen who want something different, with high quality, in their short program. Screening grand opera never has been much of a success so far as features are concerned. Much of it is too stuffy, or too highbrow. But this group boils down the essentials of an opera to two-reel length, mounts it with gorgeous photographic backgrounds. It is just long enough to be delightful, even to those untutored to the finer things in music. With people educated to good music through the radio, there should be a lively response to such subjects for "the spice of the program," as E. W. Hammons puts it. Probably the toughest part of the job will be to sell the exhibitor. But the pictures ought to come as pleasant relief from many short subjects of the day, so far as the public is concerned. One thing the producers should do, however, is stick to the better known and more popular operas. At least until the merits of the subjects become well known.

The Animal Kingdom

(RKO Radio)

Drama

In adapting this successful stage play to the screen, Radio has added to the sparkle and deep human interest that made it so popular with metropolitan audiences. Yet its plot, the old but always effective eternal triangle, has been so differently treated, in a manner that practically will force the audiences to exercise their imaginations to surmize the various phases, that it appears that the picture's appeal will be rather to the more intelligent portion and, unless the advance publicity is thoughtfully handled, somewhat beyond the grasp of the rank and file.

For those who must have their conclusion drawn for them in bold vivid characters, it will be necessary to impress upon them that they must pay close attention to every spoken line in order that they may understand and appreciate this classy piece of entertainment.

The plot may be explained briefly. For several years Tom has been intimate with Daisy. While she is in Europe, he becomes infatuated with and marries Cecelia. On Daisy's return, Tom wishes to continue their former relations—under cover, of course—a condition to which Daisy refuses to accede. In various ways it is evident that Cecelia knows of her husband's regard for his former paramour, but the manner in which she tolerates it, so that only the keenest minded will sense her ultimate purpose, adds charm and dignity to what otherwise might be construed as sordid.

The climax is brought about by Cecelia endeavoring to persuade Tom to accept a large check and the opportunity of living in his father's luxurious town house, which is brought to a conclusion by Tom endorsing the check over to her—without her knowledge—leaving his home and going to the woman whom he always has considered his wife. In short, Daisy is proved the true love and Cecelia the crafty gold-digger.

There is more than good story and good direction of appealing sequences and dialogue. The manner in which Leslie Howard handles his difficult role should not fail to win approval, and Ann Harding's work is her best since "Holiday." Likewise the way in which Myrna Loy is cast, occupying next to Howard most of the footage, presents her in a light sure to win much commendation. But the character in whom average audiences will find most delight is William Gargan, who as the punch-drunk, ex-prize fighter, bosom pal of Tom, butler, contributes all the comedy relief.

Naturally everyone should take full advantage of all the names in the cast. Even though Ann Harding has suffered from some recent pictures, you can promise them that here they will again see the charming Ann they once know. All advertising must necessarily be dignified, but it should not be too tony, lest you scare away the great mass of patrons which makes for successful box offices. Then, the title will suggest to some that they are going to see a lot of lions and tigers.

The real interest will be confined entirely to adults. To them can be directed many bold selling lines. It would be advisable to see the picture in a pre-showing, if possible; otherwise watch carefully how the bigger first run houses handle it.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Farewell to Arms

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

In a picture that deals with a daring theme, yet presents that story in such a manner that none but the most strictly narrow-minded could object, and offers a star of the calibre of Helen Hayes, it would seem there is entertainment pleasing to all classes of average audiences.

To realize properly the entertainment values of "Farewell to Arms," recall that the novel on which it is based was one of the best current big sellers.

Much of the material in the book which was found objectionable by some readers has been eliminated and the remainder has been treated delicately. Though the title suggests war and the locale is the Italian front during the World War, there is comparatively little actual war material in it. This fact should be made known in order to eradicate any impression of another blood and thunder, highly heroic war story.

It is an emotion-stirring dramatic romance. Marked by impressive acting by the entire cast, Helen Hayes' characterizations being particularly outstanding, the straight-from-the-shoulder story is gripping, though not heavy. It is, however, distinctly an adult attraction.

It should not be difficult to arouse more than usual adult interest. Comprehensive exploitation of Helen Hayes recalling her role in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" should not be neglected, likewise the fact that she won the Academy award this year. Other names in the cast, Cooper, Menjou and Mary Phillips, should be used to the fullest extent that local conditions warrant.

Without leaving yourself open for adverse comebacks, the novel also is a worthwhile showmanship value, but copy should stress the romantic angle.

Audience appeal is not solely to the intelligentsia. The subtleness that characterizes its suspense has been so worked out that the rank and file "fan" will have no difficulty in fully appreciating the complete story.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Fast Life

(MGM)

Comedy

For "Fast Life" MGM has taken one of the lesser producers' pet plots, the roaring speedboat racing idea and dolled it up with conglomeration of glamour and hokum to provide a farcical salt-water comedy thriller.

Here are William Haines and Cliff Edwards as an exciting pair of heroes, who as a couple of ex-gobs, just out of a Navy that was glad to get rid of them, are the inventors of a gasoline-turbine engine, guaranteed to drive a speed boat anywhere from 100 to 150 miles an hour. There is Madge Evans for the love interest, besides bevies of diving beauties. The producers even have the poor old man, Arthur Byron, stake his all on the turbine only to go broke when it explodes; they've even made Conrad Nagle the villain, who would steal the old man's rights and marry his daughter on the proceeds, and they top it off by making him the finance man for a gang of rum-runners.

Numbers of hoary old gags have been modernized—for instance, a voluptuous damsel smacks Edwards and there's a sign showing that she is a mind reader for a blackout. In succession they make Haines and Edwards unwanted by successful concession operators, mechanics in the Jameson boat building works, racing boat rivers, pirates who leave I. O. U's. for their loot, unwelcome romeos, kidnapers and finally a pair of geniuses.

There are thrills, dives, leaps, jumps, accidents, rescue, escapes, a multi-episode serial crammed into about six reels. The fun is climaxed with a spectacular race, interspersed with a snappy line of Pete Smith radio announcing.

As the preview audience was in continuous laughter, so should every audience that sees it laugh. There's not a serious moment in it. Even the scenes that are supposed to be romantic, tragic or dramatic only work into sequences that inspire further hilarity.

Adults, old and young and both sexes, unless they absolutely don't care for farcical comedy, will enjoy "Fast Life." It's the kind to set the youngsters cheering.

Ideas for advertising, publicity, exploitation and showmanship are unlimited, and all should be just as cleverly funny as the picture.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Man Against Woman

(Columbia)

Melodrama

A "cop" story with a different twist—that's "Man Against Woman." Portrayed against the familiar background of night clubs, racketeers, iron-willed police officials who recognize no such thing as sentiment in police work, it tells the story of "Strong Arm" McCloud, a confident "dick" who doesn't carry a gun but before whom gunmen quake in terror.

In love with Lola, a torch singer in Ennis' cabaret, but unable to make any progress because Georgie is the apple of her eye, he pins a case on Georgie and is escorting him up the river, when, under the spell of Lola's blandishments, he permits him to escape. The chief puts McCloud on other work. O'Neill tries to kid him into getting his mind off Lola and Georgie, and as they are both out on a silk robbery job, O'Neill is killed as McCloud sees his quarry fleeing. Chasing them, McCloud's car is wrecked and he loses the trail. He's fired from the force.

Ennis sees a chance of putting a slug in Mac, but Georgie, who in the meantime has gone to work for Ennis in his Bermuda headquarters, is doing a little slick double crossing and figgures he'll kill two birds with one stone by sending Mac after him.

Up to this point the story follows the more or less general pattern. Then it switches off. In Bermuda, Georgie is two-timing Lola, and when Mac arrives, she comes to realize that he's not such a bad chap after all. A little high heroics and the expected romance ensues.

Then the different climax. Ennis' gang has arranged a nice welcome home "ride" for Mac and Georgie, only to have their car surrounded by a squadron of motorcycle officers.

A lot of dramatic action is crammed into the unusually short running time. While its probably not the type of picture that big first-run houses can kick up a lot of excitement about, it has more than its quota of drama, different romance and human interest.

Suspense is carried along in nice fashion and the familiar introductory phases are presented in such a way that the odd climax is made stronger. Holt is cast in a role that early seems to make the hero a heel, or just the kind of plain clothes man that nobody likes. The story build-up sways audience sympathy at first to Gavin Gordon, who seems to be an innocent victim of a lot of crooks, and to Lillian Miles, who is fighting to save him from the "cop."

There's plenty of the standard elements to please adults, and enough high heroics to interest the youngsters. Strive for a good opening day on this one and word of mouth advertising will help.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Self Defense

(Monogram)

Melodrama

In this melodrama of the Alaskan woods three phases are outstanding: quality of story, which departs materially from the general formula; effective acting, under good direction and with just about the right amount of dialogue, and the manner in which the various angles are welded to form a consistent whole. It packs that entertainment punch that should appeal to patrons of smaller cities and neighborhood theatres.

Katy is the proprietor of a miner-lumberjack gambling house, a fact which she never wants her daughter, Nona, who is in an exclusive boarding school, to learn. Closing this sequence, her two aids, Tim and Dan, trap Jeff using crooked dice, and Katy warns him to leave town.

For revenge, Jeff loots the safe and leaves behind a gun and braclet that belonged to his paramour, Alice, with whom he has come to a parting of ways. Suspicion is cast on Alice, who has left town.

After a wire from Nona saying she is coming home, Katy transforms the gambling house into a dude ranch. As Tim goes to Prince Rupert to meet Nona, he runs into Alice, who gives him the lowdown on the robbery.

Tim kills Jeff and as he is being tried by a citizens' court, Nona enters the courtroom. If Tim makes a defense, Nona is sure to learn the truth about her mother. The jury is deadlocked and the Doctor, presiding as judge, stakes Tim's guilt on the role of a pair of dice. Switching in Jeff's loaded pair, Tim throws an odd number and is freed.

The heavy drama is not overdone, and the thrill and suspense hold interest. The comedy, though there's comparatively little of it, tends to strengthen the general theme, being introduced more to build up what follows than to lessen the dramatic tension.

Because of the manner in which romance and human interest is worked into the story, women should enjoy this picture. And there is enough action drama and outdoor atmosphere to hold the interest of the men folk. All but the youngest juveniles should find little difficulty in understanding it. It is clean and wholesome throughout.

Note that it is adapted from a Peter B. Kyne story, a publicity angle which may make it possible to attract other than regular partons.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Devil is Driving

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Here is an exciting combination of melodrama, romance and thrills, of better than average program classification. Against the background of a metropolitan garage, one of the chief activities of which is the dealing in "hot" cars, you have a story rich in suspense, rowdy in its love interest, yet packing an element of human interest.

While not quite as spectacular as the two preceding Charles R. Rogers productions, "70,000 Witnesses" and "Madison Square Garden," the new picture (with an alluring but not exactly appropriate title) possesses more than its share of moments which the vivid action is finely balanced by romance, drama, comedy.

In the manner in which the different phases are handled there is a sustained build-up. For instance, when Gabby gets a job in the garage, of which his brother-in-law Beef is foreman, and the first vivid hint of the stolen car business is shown, it becomes evident that something serious is going to happen. What does happen and how it happens is the peg upon which the story is hung. The fact that the hardboiled "kept woman," Silver, falls for the wisecracking Gabby; that Beef and Nancy are apprehensive; that Jenkins is ruthless, and that little Buddy is predestined to be the victim of the whole rotten business lay the basis for the crippling accident as Ticker recklessly speeds a stolen car to the garage, Gabby's resolution to get Jenkins, Beef's murder and the spectacular down-the-ramp death crash that wipes out Jenkins, Dummy and Ticker.

The casting of the players should prove pleasing to your audiences. All have an opportunity to display their best talents and types. This and the novelty of the story permit punchy contrasts.

"The Devil Is Driving" is not so heavy as to be out of the children's entertainment class.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Iron Master

(Allied)

Romantic Drama

In terse dramatic fashion, "The Iron Master" tells the story of a young man who rose from the scrap pile to the guiding head of a great steel plant. There is a story there of hard work and honest ambition, but behind that story is another that is more important from an entertainment standpoint. It is one of a jealous, aristocratic family, which resents the intrusion of this "commoner" into its affairs, supplying it with a dramatic and romantic punch, that, properly presented in your advance campaign, should win audience appreciation.

It brings out all sides of human nature, presenting Denny as loyal to the man who made it possible for him to get on in the world, to stick to his trust despite the insults of the members of the Stillman family, to save the family from their ill-advised ambitions and bring about a romance with Janet.

Early scenes are laid in a steel plant and, other than a tricky meeting between Steve and Janet which starts a feud between them, spectacularly show some of the processes of steel manufacture, the relation between Steve and J. C. Stillman is full of human interest. But with Stillman's death and the reading of his will in which all his family and business affairs are placed in Steve's charge is the first dramatic punch.

The second episode, Steve's endeavoring to keep the money-squandering Mrs. Stillman and David and the resentful Janet in line, constitutes a vivid character study, in which Virginia Sale's sly comedy and Richard Tucker's scheming to wed Lila Lee and gain control of the Stillman works send the story off on a number of angles that add to the suspense. This, followed by the Stillman family's double-crossing and Steve's sacrificing his own money to keep the plant running, is sharply dramatic. The climax is brought about by Janet's realization that Steve is unselfishly working for the good of everyone.

Because of its theme and development, "The Iron Master" is essentially adult entertainment. It contains enough drama and romance to catch the fancy of both men and women. Yet the story is probably a little too deep for the youngsters, even though a couple of child actors are included in the cast. The title sounds quite intriguing and the cast presents a number of well known names.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Under-Cover Man

(Paramount)

Drama

George Raft, whom Paramount is zooming to stardom, as is his own ability, becomes automatically the prize-package of the exhibitor bent on selling "Under-Cover Man." Paramount, in this instance, has done much of the showman's work for him, in the particular of popularizing the star's name, at least. That does not mean, however, that the exhibitor is in any position to let the selling stop there. The public has come to recognize undoubted ability in the performance of the suave and considerably handsome Mr. Raft, so that his name should be given all the play possible.

His support has one or two top-notchers and several "dependables." Those two which merit —and warrant—position immediately under Raft's are Nancy Carroll and Gregory Ratoff. The "dependables" include Roscoe Karns, Lew Cody, David Landau. The cast is well-rounded, capable.

Granting that the story has something of a gangster tinge, it is nevertheless novel, dealing as it does with the difficulties and at the same time the importance of the police under-cover man, scorned by the police themselves, posing as a criminal, apt to be shot in the back. Raft turns out a splendid performance. Briefly, Raft, crook, becomes a police under-cover man to unearth the murderer of his father, who had been a receiver of stolen bonds. Miss Carroll agrees to work with him because her young brother had been murdered when carrying a large parcel of bonds. Between them they succeed in ferreting out the leader of a gang of securities thieves, getting, at the same time, the murderers of Raft's father, Miss Carroll's brother.

A neat touch comes to light in the closing sequence, when it is revealed that one member of the gang, whom no one could have suspected, was in reality also a police under-cover man.

Give Raft the big play. He not only deserves it, for performance here as well as for future work, but he becomes in this instance the backbone of the entertainment. He has unquestionably a "lure" for the feminine patron, so that an appeal to them should take care of itself through the mere exploitation of the name. The masculine portion may well be drawn by the story's theme. The question of whether the youngsters should see a portrayal of the methods and murders of big-time crooks, even though they are captured, may best be left to the individual exhibitor's knowledge of his own community. It is an entertaining picture. —Aaronson, New York.

Yorck

(Brecher)

Historical Drama

Ufa here presents another chapter from the history of Prussia in the early nineteenth century, which as a motion picture becomes interesting dramatically principally through the work of Werner Krauss in the title role of Yorck, famed Prussian general.

The absence of super-imposed English subtitle translations of portions of the German dialogue tends to make the film less adaptable to showing in other than those houses which regularly make use of foreign pictures or those which may be reasonably certain of drawing upon a fairly large share of patronage with a knowledge of German.

Krauss performs admirably as the beloved leader of the Prussian army who is torn between his feeling for the safety of his men and the requirements of duty which make it imperative that he place himself and his army at the disposal of Napoleon in his concentration on the Russian attack. The king, played well by Rudolf Forster, had signed an alliance with Napoleon. Seeking to retire, Krauss' plea is refused and he is forced to prepare for the alliance with Napoleon's armies.

An element of romance enters into the picture, with Krauss' daughter, Grete Mosheim, and his aid, Hans Rehmann, supplying that feature in acceptable fashion. Complication takes its place with the arrival of a liaison officer from the French army, who, in addition to watching Yorck, conceives an interest in his daughter. Rehmann discovers a dispatch among the papers of the French officer revealing the burning of Moscow and the disastrous retreat of the Napoleonic army. He carries the news to the king, who is undecided. Secretly, at the risk of court martial, Yorck signs a treaty with the Russian leader, saves the situation and delivers a farewell address to his loyal army.

The picture is rather long, but succeeds fairly well in retaining interest. It is interesting chiefly through the historical episode indicated and the mental struggle through which the military leader passes in attempting to reconcile regard for his men with orders from above. Krauss should have some following among patrons of the German cinema output.—Aaronson, New York.

The Mask of Fu Manchu

(MGM)

Melodrama

There is in this picture the possibility of reasonably satisfactory results, chiefly by reason of the origin of the story and the players involved. The latest of the melodramatic concoctions of the extremely productive Sax Rohmer, concerning the machinations of the redoubtable and villainous Dr. Fu Manchu, is unquestionably melodrama.

Rather unfortunately, it has become melodrama of the more incredible sort, with the weird and fantastic methods of torture inflicted upon his helpless captives by the notorious Manchu, set in most lavish surroundings within his palace tending to mitigate against the effectiveness of the film from the dramatic standpoint.

The ably made up Boris Karloff takes his turn as the Chinese doctor, who in this instance seeks the long buried golden mask and great sword of the once mighty war lord of the Chinese, Genghis Khan, and plans with these instruments of power to lead the yellow hordes in a great wave by which to eradicate the white races. An expedition of the British Museum seeks the same relics, but for a different reason, and thereby hangs the tale.

In addition to the important Karloff name, from the selling viewpoint, there are Lewis Stone, leader of the expedition which goes to the rescue of the scientist captured by Manchu; Karen Morley, daughter of the captive; Myrna Loy, Manchu's lovely daughter, and Jean Hersholt. These names should provide suitable box office material, and the cast does satisfactory work.

The best bet for the exhibitor is, of course, the Sax Rohmer story. The author unquestionably has a sizeable following over the country, and the proper and extensive exploitation of the title of one of his many works, in conjunction with the fact that Karloff plays the Fu Manchu role, should be good for a considerable attendance. The juvenile will get real satisfaction from the picture.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Charles Brabin. Story by Sax Rohmer. Screen play by Irene Kuhn, Edgar Allan Woolf and John Willard. Photographed by Gaetano Gaudio. Film editor, Ben Lewis. Release date, November 5, 1932. Running time, 67 minutes.

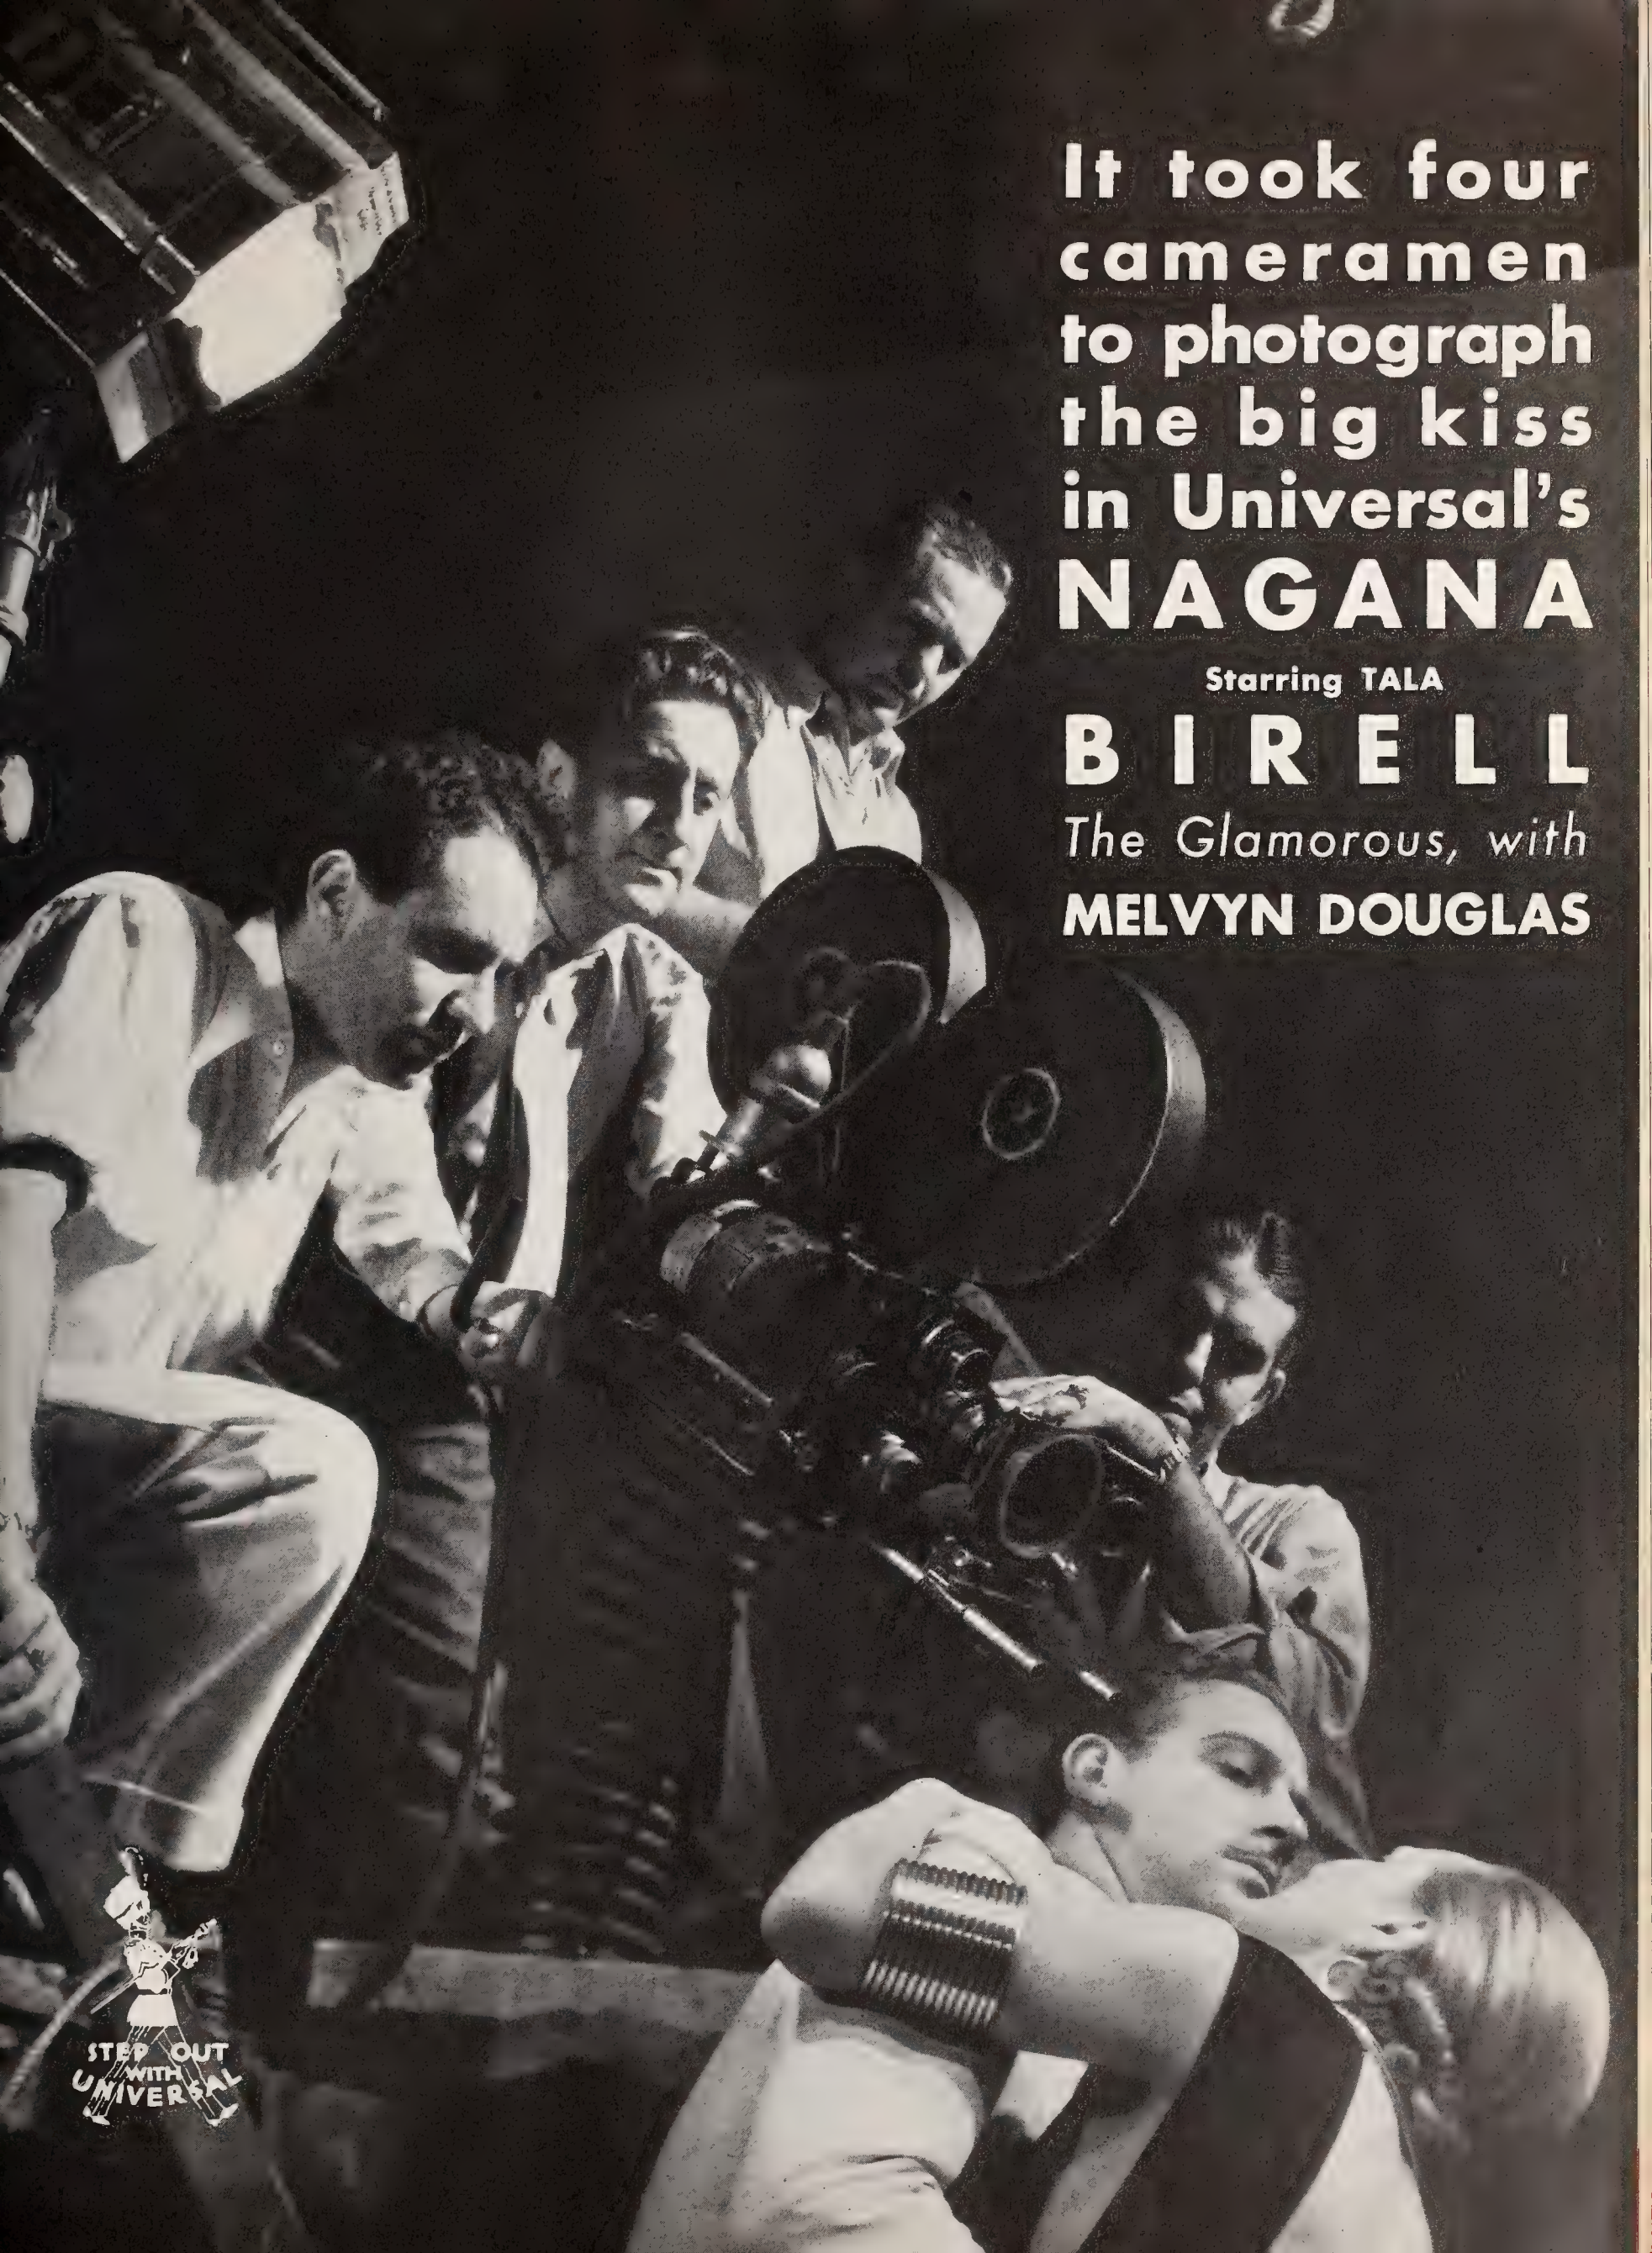
Island of Lost Souls



(Paramount)

Melodrama

Box office results of "Island of Lost Souls" will either write finis to the cycle of terror pictures or start a new vogue of super-shockers. This picture is all terror and should be sold as a terror picture. In view of the finished product, there is no other advertising or publicizing medium open that will really bring in the money.

The locale is an uncharted South Sea Island. There Dr. Moreau is engrossed in a scientific experiment that steps up evolution 100,000 years. From animals he has bred human creatures, one of whom, Lota, is a woman. His final problem is to mate one of these super-creatures, particularly the woman, with a human being. Parker falling into his hands, Dr. Moreau sees the opportunity and for your own information, just when Lota has Parker all steamed up, he notices several bestial characteristics of the creature and sets out to do away with the creator of this grotesque species.

Every development of this picture is tended to inspire terror, the kind that starts audiences screeching and shuddering; the type that will make them afraid to go home alone after seeing the show. There is no comedy, although there are many awesome instances that provoke laughter, particularly the weird makeup of the scores of creatures, which is a triumph of makeup artists' imagination. The little romance and human interest between Parker and Ruth is there because those two elements are supposed to be in every picture. In fact, everything that does not concern Dr. Moreau is incidental, but necessary.

The picture is essentially adult entertainment, and it should be sold to them, not in a way that will scare them away from the theatre, but through a campaign that will lure them to see it. Besides a terror-inspiring campaign that should be limited only by the extent of your own imagination and ingenuity, there are several excellent exploitation angles. First, the story is based on a novel by the eminent British author, H. G. Wells, whose highly impossible yarns have enjoyed a wonderful popularity. Secondly, the interest that accrued to Paramount's search for "The Panther Woman" some months ago ought to be revived. As far as stunts and gags are concerned you can write your own ticket.

The picture should not be shown to children. It is too gruesome and its main plot too vividly sexy for juvenile consumption.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comradeship

(Associated Cinemas)

Drama

Despite its tendency toward "brotherhood of man" propaganda, "Comradeship" is intense, dramatic film fare, highlighted by able use of lighting technique in production, carrying a strongly sustained suspensive interest, and containing those qualities which make for strong entertainment.

The picture is of course in German, but so intelligently has the dialogue been subordinated to the dramatic action, with pantomime and mass motion expressing in themselves what words could not conceivably have accomplished, that the non-German speaking audience may appreciate it as readily as those with a knowledge of the language. In addition, ample use has been made of the superimposed translation, via subtitle, of crucial bits of dialogue, so that the foreign dialogue is less an obstacle than in almost any other recent importation from Germany. Since the action takes place in its entirety on the border between Germany and France, both German and French are used, adding much to the effectiveness and authenticity of the picture.

The cast names are of no moment in this country. Those who appear do their work with marked capability. The story centers about the activity of workers in a large mine located half in France, half in Germany, each portion operated by a separate company. The picture itself is based on an actual incident, a disastrous fire and explosion on the French side some time ago which was rated as a major mine calamity in both countries. The time, just after the World War. German miners go to the rescue.

Only one war scene is pictured, yet the production as a whole does much to indicate the sadly uncompromising spirit inculcated in a whole people by national rivalry, producing national hatred. For the brief moment, at least, these miners forget political affiliation, national boundaries, and become what they really are, miners, workers who are bound only by their duty to their fellows and their families who depend upon them. The film concludes with mutual felicitations at the border as the Germans, wounded in the rescue work, return to their country, a scene which drew applause from a New York audience.

The film is a human document, intense, direct, forceful in its concentrated action. Played as such, it should be made to draw not only German patronage, but the English-speaking as well. The foregoing must make obvious the type of selling the picture requires.—Aaronson, New York.

Sally Bishop

(British Lion)

Drama

This is the sort of thing that is calculated to appeal to the feminine part of your audience, and if you play it up as a woman picture you may achieve some success with it. Do the names of Temple Thurston, best selling novelist, and John Drinkwater (the man who wrote the life of Laemmle), mean anything to the inhabitants of your city or town? If they do you may find these names among the most potent of your selling arguments. On the other hand, the appeal may come through the story of the girl cast off by her lover after several years of happiness and the way in which she eventually wins him back.

It goes this way. Jack Traill, wealthy bachelor, pursues Sally, the romantic and pretty typist, and, having got her where he wants her, decides she is too good and pure for the likes of him. But he's wrong, for, though he explains his distaste for matrimony, she won't let that stand in the way of their love; and they spend three happy years together. Jack's social-climbing sister, however, sets a trap to free him from the affair, contriving matters so that he falls hard for the metallic Evelyn Standish, and he leaves Sally. Only the devotion of her friend Janet saves Sally, who retires to a cottage in the country, where a young farmer—played by Anthony Bushell—lays siege to her aching heart. But just as he is about to take it into his custody, Jack comes back disillusioned, confesses his caddishness, gets the verdict, and we know the wedding bells are at last about to ring.

Tell me you heard all that before; maybe you have, but it's still entertainment, isn't it? The story (its book sales are something in millions) gives ample opportunity for emotional acting, though it must sadly be stated that whenever such a chance appears the players become melodramatic and unconvincing. However, the picture still has its tender moments, and the personality of Joan Barry in the name part should be ample excuse for a little handkerchief wetting. The best thing in the picture, though, is a cameo performance by Emlyn Williams, as the bumptious bank clerk who wants to marry Sally. Incidentally, he's playing on Broadway at present—remember that on your publicity sheet.

They'll cry over Sally, and isn't that what they want?—Charman, London.

Most unusual is this subject in the Magic Carpet series, in which is seen the manner in which Polish sailors man a training ship which sails the high seas as the old windjammers after which it is modeled sailed them years before, in a marine era nearly forgotten. All the action takes place aboard the ship, where the sailors are seen in their daily round of work and recreation. Hoisting sail, furling sail, scrubbing decks, all combine to make a short notable for its subject matter, excellent in its pictorial value.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Interesting

One of the first of the Naturgraph series released by Educational, this subject pictures, with unusual detail, the life of various species of birds, in the process of gathering the insect food which sustains them and at the same time is of material aid in ridding crops of the pests. The manner in which the birds guard and feed their young is interesting material, well handled. Running time, 8 minutes.

Pigskin

Clever

The routine which a big-time football eleven goes through in pre-season training and conditioning is brought to life in clever fashion in this short subject. The various exercises and calisthenics which build strong bodies and supple limbs are demonstrated. Also the reasons for such training are explained by Dick Hanley, coach of the Northwestern football team. Smart Pete Smith chatter adds a zip to the subject which otherwise might be lacking. Running time, 12 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Betty Boop's Ker-Choo

(Paramount)

Light

Bright and light, and amusing is Betty Boop, Paramount's animated little girl, as she enters an automobile race, wins after more or less usual cartoon mishaps, with an occasional new twist, and sings a song or two in her own inimitable fashion.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Mickey in Arabia

(Columbia)

Amusing

Mickey and Minnie, the rodent stars, travel the desert aboard a camel and encounter trouble when Minnie is captured by a vallainous looking bandit. Mickey succeeds in the rescue after amusing animated action in the castle. Funny shot when the camel drinks the wrong thing, wanders away highly inebriated.—Running time, 7 minutes.

'SELF-DEFENSE' PROVIDES MONOGRAM WITH A WINNER

Story, Direction, Acting Excellent

"SELF-DEFENSE"
Monogram-Lackey

Direction .....Phil Rosen
Original by.....Peter B. Kyne
Screen Play.....Tristam Tupper
Photography .....Archie Stout
Cast: Pauline Frederick, Claire Windsor, Theodore von Eltz, Robert Elliott, Barbara Kent, Jameson Thomas, George Hackathorne, H. B. Walthall, Willie Fung, Lafe McKee, Si Jenks, George Hayes.

It's got what it takes, this latest picture by the Trem Carr organization, "Self-Defense." An hour's diversion is had watching it and, if its preview audience is any criterion, it's going out to clean up in every theatre whose owner is wise enough to grab it for himself. There is an increasing, mounting interest throughout the picture and there is never a lag nor a stumble in any scene.

Trem Carr can well be nominated the standard bearer for the entire independent field; for here is an independently-made picture that has a sensible story, expertly treated, capably directed, cleverly enacted, sanely dialogued and adequately mounted.

Pauline Frederick runs a gambling-drinking joint in a wilderness town of British Columbia. Instead of being the usual picture character, she is an ordinary business woman who plays fair. Ashamed of the source of her income, she has her daughter reared in the states. Naturally, she loves this daughter, Barbara Kent, and doesn't wish her to know of her trade.

Jameson Thomas, an unprincipled scoundrel, runs up against her, tries to put her out of business by bringing her daughter on the scene in hope of exposing the mother and gathers his reward when Theodore von Eltz, one of Miss Frederick's faithful retainers, kills him in self-defense. The girl is kept ignorant of her mother's occupation and a dual love interest is supplied by von Eltz getting the daughter and by an old love between Miss Frederick and Robert Elliott, her house manager.

The parts are so apportioned that everyone gets a break and succeeds in shining individually without overshadowing anyone else. Pauline Frederick, Theodore von Eltz, Robert Elliott, Barbara Kent and Claire Windsor (whose return to the screen reveals that she is better looking and more capable than ever) are sincere and true in their acting. Tristam Tupper on story, Phil Rosen on direction and Archie Stout on camera are uniformly fine. W T Lackey is the smart producer.

Efficiency Note

Warners wanted a scene in the Cagney picture, "Hard to Handle," showing some thousands of people wrecking a hamburger stand, but didn't want to pay thousands of extras. So they built a stand at Ocean Park for eighty bucks, spread word of a $500 treasure hunt, and had the stand wrecked by at least 5000 people at a total cost of $580 for the scene.

"BREACH OF PROMISE"

with Chester Morris, Mae Clarke

World Wide 67 mins.

DRAMA WITH UNUSUAL LOVE ANGLE CLICKS WITH FINE STORY AND WORK OF MORRIS AND MAE CLARKE.

Based on a story, "Obscurity," by Rupert Hughes, this author's exceptional skill as a plot constructor is everywhere apparent. It is entirely out of the beaten track, filled with little surprise twists and unexpected developments that keep building the suspense to an unusual ending. The obvious seldom happens in this film, but always the unlooked for, which makes it very refreshing and intelligent entertainment. Chester Morris gives a convincing and stirring performance as the candidate for Senator who is almost ruined socially, politically and financially by the breach of promise suit instituted by Mae Clarke. Miss Clarke plays her role with fine repression and understanding. Worthy of special commendation is Charles Middleton for his part of a hard, narrow-minded foster father, which conveys a sense of gripping power. The girl's final atonement for the wrong she has done the man she loves is cleverly handled in a succession of very moving scenes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Marshall, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

Marshall is located close to the edge of the largest oil field in the world. This is five miles wide by sixty miles long and the oil derricks are as thick as quills on a porcupine's back. These wells produce from one thousand to thirty thousand barrels of oil a day when they are allowed to flow to capacity, but the output is curtailed to fifty barrels a day because of over-production, and we still pay the same old price for gasoline. Crude oil got as low as ten cents per barrel but the gasoline stations never heard of it. Gasoline is one commodity that is never affected by the cost of production. It is based on your ability to pay, and the stations generally inquire into this before they fill your tank. If you look prosperous, they fill her up, otherwise they ask you how much you want, meaning, how much can you pay for. There is probably a future existence for oil companies, but we don't know just where it is.

R. E. Blivens and Bennie Swetcoff are building a new theatre in Sherman. They expect to have it opened in a couple of weeks. This will make the fourth theatre for Sherman and that ought to be a plenty.

Sherman is in a cotton section and dependent largely upon this crop, and cotton is the lowest in price it has been in many years and this makes business rather tough for Sherman, although it is a right snappy town.

E. B. Moore operates the Texas theatre in Bonham, and Bonham is another cotton town, but E. B. doesn't seem to be downhearted on account of present conditions, for he has that optimistic disposition that seems to prevail with all of these Longhorns. "Business is not good, but it's going to get better" is the way these boys all seem to look at it.

W. B. Smith is the assistant manager of the Amusu theatre at Winnsboro. The manager, like a lot of others we have called on this week, was in Dallas, and we failed to meet him. W. B. is a snappy young fellow right on the job for business and we surmise that the Amusu is doing a good business under his able direction. We left Winnsboro in a rain and we had about twenty miles of red mud to plow to get over here to Marshall, and boy, how we plowed 'er. When we got here April Shower looked like she had wallowed through a vat of yellow ocher, but that's nothing for April Shower, she's used to it.

W. L. Gelling operates both theatres here in Marshall for the East Texas Theatres Corporation of Beaumont. The Paramount theatre is a very beautiful house; more so than one generally finds in towns the size of Marshall. Mr. Gelling is a delightful fellow with a long experience in the show business. He told us he was probably the first man we ever saw who came from the Isle of Man, and we guess he is.

Arthur Brisbane tells us that Australia sent a lot of lady bugs to Florida and California to fight the scale on fruit trees, and that Florida sent a lot of bugs to Australia to fight their pumpkin bugs, and that's what we call reciprocity. And now if some country will send us some bugs to work on the jazz orchestra and crooner bugs we ought to come out all right.

Lufkin

C. T. Thompson manages the Aladdin at Longview for the East Texas circuit, and Knox Lamb manages the Strand at Kilgore for the same circuit, and if all the managers for the houses belonging to that institution are as efficient and courteous as those we have called on so far, that company is to be commended for its ability to pick real managers.

W. H. Mercer is the manager of the Crim at Kilgore and he is also a swell chap and a manager one likes to meet. Both of these boys gave us the glad hand and neither of 'em had a shotgun.

If it should be raining when you come through Longview and Kilgore, stay on the walks or you will mire down. These are oil towns and the big oil trucks keep the streets a mess of mud.

S. L. Oakley operates the Austin for the East Texas company in Nacogdoches (there is no darn sense in their putting the "g" in that name) and Mr. Non Benion operates the Pines theatre here in Lufkin.

Both of these houses belong to the East Texas chain and these two managers are just like the rest of 'em, mighty swell fellows who make you feel glad you called.

L. M. Threet operates the Texan here in Lufkin, an independent house, and he had us up to his house to dinner today, and the dinner his mother served made us wonder why we hadn't hit this town sooner. These Texas folks certainly know how to treat you. They are the most polite people in the world. If you go into a store and buy only a penny box of matches the clerk will say, "Ah sure do thank you sir, come back and see us again some time, sir." Back in the eastern states they wouldn't thank you if you bought a house and lot, that's the difference in 'em. There are some merchants up in our home state who ought to acquire this habit.

We are headed southeast for Corpus Christi and the west coast of the Gulf of Mexico, and listen here, Elmer, when you get down there if we hear that one of those typhoons or simoons is headed across the Gulf in our direction you will see us head April Shower for Salmon, Idaho, and put both feet on the gas. That's a baby we don't care to get tangled up with.

When we get to Aransas Pass and we go out in the Gulf and catch a nine foot tarpon we don't want any of you birds asking any leading questions; it won't be ethical; our word will be good, and we don't want Andy Anderson at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, or Elmer Gailey at Wayne, Nebraska, writing to us for proof. Those tarpon have scales on their backs and we can tell exactly what they

These Texas folks are just the kind
To make you feel at home.
There's no other state that you can find
In which you'd sooner roam.

For things that's right they'll all stand pat
You can have their shirts or have their hats;
No matter if they're Democrats,
They're just as fine for that.

THE TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—My patrons like Joe E. Brown and always get a lot of laughs out of his picture. Give us more of him.—Fred Myr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kans. Neighborhood patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: And so do I, to give a classy little picture like this such a name. It is a dandy show with good direction and a good cast and really very little sin in it. My pet peeve is the rotten names they give nice shows. This is a nice show though and pleased my small crowd 100 per cent. You can promise them a pleasant surprise and receive one yourself in this picture.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

Fox

CHANDU THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Fair business. Kids seemed to want to see this after hearing Chandu on the national radio program. Pleased everybody. Running time, 74 minutes.—Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kan. Neighborhood patronage.

CONGORILLA: A good jungle picture but it did not draw and I lost money. It is as good as any of the jungle shows.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural community patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers and Irene Rich —Best Rogers I've seen. Extra drawing power.— R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—We played this Thanksgiving and it proved to be a good holiday picture. It did not draw as well as it should have, because of cold and rainy weather, but it pleased all who saw it. It is not up to the usual Will Rogers standard but should be worth playing anywhere. Played Nov. 24-25.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La.—General patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—Very good. Running time, 80 minutes.—Mrs. P. J. Zorn, Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers—Clever comedy drama; a bit spicy in spots. This is not necessary with as charming a star as Sally. Played Oct. 28-29. Running time, 64 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers and Ben Lyon—Not so hot. Seemed to satisfy about 80 per cent.— R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marion Nixon—A swell, clean picture that will please everybody, and swell the box office.—Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kans. Neighborhood patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Charles Farrell and Marion Nixon—The patrons thought this rather silly and weak, and it did not give very good satisfaction to the regular Sunday and Monday crowd. Opened on Sunday to 90 per cent of average Sunday business and dropped on Monday to 50 per cent of average Monday business. Doubt if it would have pleased any better with Janet Gaynor in it, as this girl Marion Nixon gave a swell performance. It's a nice little picture for those who like mushy stuff. Played Nov. 6-7. Running time, 80 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—Serious type drama. Clean and entertaining, especially so, to older patrons. Played Nov. 20-21. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter — Below average for Fox. Hardly worth playing. Played Nov. 10-11.—Cecil Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Ark. College town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AS YOU DESIRE ME: Greta Garbo—There is only one way my patrons desire Garbo. That is for her to stay on the other side of the ocean.—Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kan. Neighborhood patronage.

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies—Full of interest for general patronage. Held the attention of our patrons all the way through; plenty of action. Played Nov. 26.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Mixed country patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—This picture did not please the majority of my patrons. Many were sadly disappointed because it had practically no plot. It is heavy drama with very little comedy relief. Also the price is so high that the exhibitor has no chance to make any money. Played Nov. 27-28. Running time, 115 minutes.— Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionell Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Good picture, but did not draw. About the worst licking I ever took on a big picture. Running time, 115 minutes.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka Theatre, Exeter, N. H.

LETTY LYNTON: Joan Crawford—Another one of Metro's fine big downtown pictures that I wish they had run exclusive. Without a doubt the worst picture I ever looked at. Played July 6-7.—Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kan. Neighbor hood patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—Audience in general did not care for this picture. Played Nov. 28.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. General patronage.

PROSPERITY: Dressler and Moran—Another great family picture.—Harry Pace, Crescent Theatre, Audubon, Iowa.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Very good and we consider it a clean picture. Jean Harlow a good comedian. Good story. Good draw considering the roads. Running time, 90 minutes.—Harry Pace, Crescent Theatre, Audubon, Iowa.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—A very interesting picture of its kind but it certainly is not for children or for the family trade. Did not draw near as I expected—about half as much as it should. Played Nov. 20-21.—P. A. Stallings, Majestic Theatre, Bowie, Texas. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March —Had more people tell us this was the best picture they had ever seen, than any other movie we have UNASHAMED: Helen Twelvetrees—Not near as bad as some reviews say it is. Was fairly well liked and attended.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: Lionel Barrymore—This picture is extra good, good story fine acting, a 100 per cent picture. Played Nov. 4-5. Running time, 86 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. Good patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: This is a great vaudeville show. Sell it as such and it will please everyone who likes that kind of a show. It is variety entertainment with plenty of laughs and music. Give the cast the big type. People will be disappointed in the radio stars as they have placed them on "superman" standards and the movie brings them down to earth, but it is a good show.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams, and all the big radio stars—One of the best drawing pictures of the year if not the biggest, and will please them after they are in. Played Nov. 29-30.—P. S. Stallings, Majestic Theatre, Bowie, Texas. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams and radio artists—Truly a great picture—different and a natural. The wellknown radio artists are known to one and all; consequently it drew well. Played Nov. 13-14-15. Running time, 80 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Genwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Deitrich—First half of picture not so good, but the last half more than makes up for it. Played Nov. 30.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich — A great picture and another picture that we say will not offend, unless very narrow minded. Drew fair.—Harry Pace, Crescent Theatre, Audubon, Iowa.

DEVIL AND THE DEEP: Tallulah Bankhead and Gary Cooper—Nice picture but did not do anything extra. Charles Laughton steals the picture. Played Nov. 19. Running time, 70 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall and Sari Maritza—An enjoyable piece of etnertainment of the program variety. Herbert Marshall very good. Charlie Ruggles as usual is good and Sari Maritza seems better than in her last picture. Played Nov. 12.—Cecil Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Ark. College town patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Low and Victor McLaglen—This picture good for all audiences for small towns. The only picture I ever liked McLaglen in. Title bad for small town. Running time, 80 minutes. D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: This is dandy show after you get by the name. I can offhand think of a dozen names that would fit the story more appropriately than this title, but then they didn't ask me to name it, merely to pay for it, so I couldn't object. It does entertain if you can get people to come and see it. The stars haven't made box office history nor will they, but the story is entertaining and the crowd makes it a dandy picture.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. Family patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin and Alison Skipworth—A fair comedy. No box office and not much to think back on after you've seen it. Just another picture. Alison Skipworth not creating much interest. Played Nov. 5.—Cecil Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Ark. College town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—This is just as good as their other shows and some thought better. Where they are liked it will go over big. It drew some extra business.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wantoma, Wis. Rural community patronage.

JOE HEWITT CALLS FOR AMMUNITION

Get busy—send one of the very first contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" some of your report blanks for the renewal of that "Good" department which you lately announced . . . and thank "Dad" Jenkins for resurrection of this department. — JOE HEWITT, Home Theatres Circuit, Robinson, Ill.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Did the best business of the year. Everybody laughed their heads off. Running time, 68 minutes.—Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kan. Neighborhood patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—One of Harold Lloyd's best comedies, but he certainly doesn't get the busines any more. Pleased the few who came.—P. A. Stallings, Majestic Theatre, Bowie, Texas.

MOVIE CRAZY: This is the best show Harold Lloyd has made since "The Freshman," and will please everyone. The kids will come and you must make the adults come as they will enjoy it after they see it, though the last few Lloyds have made people think of him as a "kid show" star.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Patrons disappointed, very few laughs. Several patrons said they did not care for him anymore. Probably the type of story has been overworked and people are not interested in the workings of studios. They want entertainment. Running time, 95 minutes.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—The flop of the year at the box office and did not compare with any of his old silent films for laughs. Patrons about 50-50 on this one; some of them liked it and some did not. It will not make money if bought at high rental. It looks as though Harold Lloyd is an also ran at the theatre box office. Running time, 96 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—A good picture but Harold Lloyd's pictures are too few to get much at the box office. Goodby Harold.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Very good but failed to draw and cannot understand why. Running time, 95 minutes.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka Theatre, Exeter, N. H.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook and Mary Boland—Good. Will please all classes. Charley Grapewin steals the show. You can boost this and not have to hide when the patrons go out. All players excellent. Running time, 80 minutes.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Francis Dee—Better step on this one. Very clever, heart interest, clean, fast and sparkling. — Harry Pace, Crescent Theatre, Audubon, Iowa.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan, Claudette Colbert, Jimmy Durante—Splendid comedy drama. Clean fun. Played Thanksgiving to pleased crowd. Played Nov. 24-25. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan and Claudette Colbert—This is clever musical comedy entertainment and should please any audience. Well directed, well acted and an interesting little moral behind the slapstick musical comedy story.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan and Jimmy Durante—This picture pleased a very good attendance. Music interwoven beautifully. Support very good and Durante as always a vow. Played Nov. 13-14. Running time, 78 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

This type picture is always popular in my situation. Played Nov. 17-18.—Cecil Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Ark. College town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—A very fine picture for the sophisticated. Very few went in but most of them that did liked it. Recommend it for the class trade only. Running time, 73 minutes.—P. A. Stallings, Majestic Theatre, Bowie, Texas.

RKO Radio

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Best picture I've seen for six months. No driving power.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Joel McCrea and Dolores Del Rio—This picture drew little better than average business on Sunday and Monday and held up good for the second day, but lot went out saying it was not as good a picture as they expected to see, and I personally thought that it was a rather weak production to turn out from material of this kind, but it will draw well. Running time, 80 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—Great. Good business too.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: Frank Buck—This one has been badly over-rated by the producers and the critics and it led the public to expect considerable more than they get. We were lucky enough to run it at regular admission prices and had very few kicks on it, and it drew 15 per cent better than average business on the days it ran. It's box office. Played Nov. 20-21.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: One of the best shows of the year. Great business too.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix—Big western. About four reels excellent.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

GIRL CRAZY: Wheeler and Woolsey—For the average small town, this is one of the best pictures I have run for months comedy and slapstick. Played Nov. 19.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Mixed country patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Based on Florida chain gang tragedy. Held interest of all. Richard Dix, as usual, very good in his role. Played Nov. 4-5. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Good Friday and Saturday picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: This is a heavy show and not good for the children who are apt to be Richard Dix's best friend. The "big brother" theme is hidden behind too much brutality. It is a real "he man" show and can be sold as a rough brutal picture of prison life. It is well produced and an interesting story and picture, but heavy.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—A fair show but not well attended.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzie Green—Good kid picture.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Leslie Banks—Something different. A little gruesome, but clean and entertaining. Played Nov. 13-14. Running time, 78 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

PEACH O RENO: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—Very clever picture and pleasing to Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey fans but it seemed that those fans had scattered since we last played a picture of theirs. Played Nov. 7-8.—A. T. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: This is a good mystery show and the public is waiting for it. Radio publicity has helped the sale of this so that it is able to bring in dollars usually untouched. Just a run of the mill mystery. No better or no worse than half a dozen others you have already shown.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix—Very poor sound, very poor photography and we did a very poor business. Running time, 76 minutes. Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kan. Neighborhod patronage.

ROAR OF THE DRAGON: Richard Dix—Not so hot. No entertainment value.—Carl E. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Mont.

WESTWARD PASSAGE: Ann Harding—We ran this on our lowest admission night and to a patronage that is easy to please for they do not expect very much, but this one failed to give satisfaction or draw the average gross for this night. It's a very weak picture with two good stars doing their very best. Played Nov. 4. Running time, 73 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

WHAT PRICE HOLLYWOOD: Constance Bennett —Supposed to be a very fine picture but rated only fair here. It seems that most all of these laid-in-Hollywood pictures fail to collect very big for us. It is of course a good picture of its kind.—P. A. Stallings, Majestic Theatre, Bowie, Texas.

Tiffany

DRUMS OF JEOPARDY: Warner Oland—An excellent picture of the "Fu Manchu" type, and if your patrons like that you can promise them plenty of thrills and nerve tingling escapes in this. THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen, Andy Devine and June Clyde—Excellent for this type. Running time, 80 minutes.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.

Worth playing and plugging even after the season is officially over. Played Oct. 25-26.—Cecil Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Ark. College town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—The kind of a picture we need to get before they started them talking. It's a sweet picture, pleases almost 100 per cent and builds business after first showing. It's okay for any theatre on any day of the week. Saw many faces at the box office that had not been there for months. Played Nov. 22-23. Running time, 84 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN HOLLYWOOD: George Sidney and Charlie Murray—An awful lot of kicks on this picture here, but my customers have never cared for the Jew-Irish stuff in this town so that may be the reason.—A. T. Keith, Strand Theatre, Branbury, Texas. Small town patronage.

DESTRY RIDES AGAIN: Tom Mix—Tom Mix went over mighty well in his first talking picture. Western lovers liked it and the business was very satisfactory. Played Oct. 21-22.—A. T. Keith, Strand Theatre, Granbury, Texas. Small town patronage.

MY PAL, THE KING: Tom Mix—Great for the kids. Can't see it for adults. Too much serial style. They make them better than Mix today. Running time, 60 minutes.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka Theatre, Exeter, N. H.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—One swell show that everyone enjoyed. The only show that Lew Ayres has clicked in since "All Quiet on the Western Front." Drew no business but in the good times this would be a good three day picture anywhere. Played Nov. 5.—H. J. Eagan, American Theatre, Wautoma, Wis. Rural community patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—A good picture that failed at the box office.—Fred Meyr, Pershing Theatre, Kansas City, Kan. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner Brothers

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell—I doubt if there is any place in the smaller towns where this one will go. It's just something that small towns cannot understand and never will. It opened very poor and did lots worse after the first night. Work it off on a weak night. It's a weak picture. Running time, 68 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Nancy Carroll—Poor box office draw and failed to please those who saw it. Played Nov. 13-14.—Cecil Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Ark. College town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

ADVERTISING, AND OTHER THINGS!

LONG, LONG AGO we stressed the importance of your newspaper advertising and called to your attention many angles that should have guided you out of the pitfalls to bad copy. This advice was really aimed at the men who had to make up their own newspaper copy in addition to their many other duties. But some of that same advice might come in handy for numerous other showmen who think they know all there is to know about ad layouts. None of us is that smart, but we should all be eligible for a few pointers now and then.

We are not going to play teacher for the simple reason that you know your own conditions better than anybody who happens to be several hundred or a thousand miles away from your town and theatre. But regardless of where you are located, there are a few common-sense angles worthy of more than passing consideration.

First: Your preparation of copy. Remember, no newspaper composing room man can read your mind. Even though you may not have a thorough knowledge of type faces and sizes you can show, by reason of the way you lay out your ad-copy, just what portions are to be emphasized. The best way to do this is to draw a box of the exact size of the ad you are making up. Then pencil in your copy, mat illustrations, etc., in proportion to the size you want them set.

Second: Mats. Can be broken up so that any part of them can be worked into your ad. Have a talk with your composing room man if this is not clear to both of you. Don't drop an effective mat because it won't fit your allotted space. Try to work out some way of using the most important parts of it.

Third: Proofs. Of course, the question of proofs is not so easy to discuss since every paper and theatre work that angle out between them. But on all announcement and opening day ads, you should try to send in your copy far enough in advance to see proof before it is run. Considering the importance of opening day announcements, you can improve your ad if you don't like the way it looks on the proof.

We have been publishing many newspaper ad layouts so that all members and readers can compare their own ads with those of other showmen, and at the same time grab a new idea here and there. We shall continue to publish these layouts because we believe it's a great idea to always see what the other fellow is doing.

WHILE ON THE SUBJECT of advertising, Bob Sisk, in RKO'S NOW, calls upon all managers of that circuit to . . . "look under the table for new angles . . ."; and of course we may be pardoned if we assume that he's referring to the "Round Table." At any rate, RKO managers, as well as other managers, can be sure of finding something new in the way of ideas under or above the Round Table.

A GOOD WAY TO PREVENT additional headaches at a time when such aches are all too prevalent is to check up on the following "unimportant" items before they are called into use and found wanting.

For example, the fire doors. Are the panic bolts in good working order? Do they open and shut easily? Then, if you have a regular stage; do you lower the asbestos curtain once a day regardless of whether local fire regulation make it compulsory? And have you climbed up to the gridiron lately to see that everything is shipshape? From lack of use the various lines and stage hardware up there may be going to the dogs. Very inexpensive to keep in good trim, but costly as hell to replace.

What about the roof tanks. Have you made certain that the heat lines are functioning? Are the pumps all ready for use? And the stand-pipe lines? When did you last try one of them out to insure good working order when the emergency arises?

We know most of this sounds trite and unnecessary, but when other worries crowd your busy days you may be overlooking little things that can lead to endless grief and aggravation. Regardless of how good or bad business may be there are certain formalities in the operation of a theatre that must never be neglected. We refer particularly to those items in which the safety of your patrons is concerned. The few mentioned here happened to mind while writing these observations, but there are many others, of more or less importance, depending on what kind of a theatre you are operating.

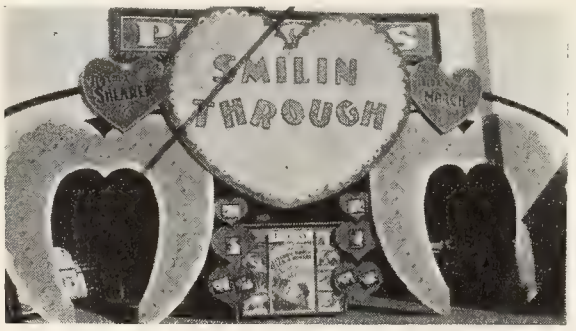
LOOKING BACK OVER what we have written thus far for this page, we observe advertising hints and panic-prevention hints. What a heck of a lot of territory a guy must cover these days to earn his bread and butter. Oh well, March Fourth is not so far off and then will things be better! I'm asking; not telling. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Believe it or not, this one is on the level. And it's happened before, too, especially in the "sticks". Thanks to Degenharte, Dick was able to take the suggestion and turn it into a "Laff". Now, just glance through that box at the bottom of this page and be guided accordingly.

POAG STILL MAKING LOW-COST DISPLAYS DOWN IN TEXAS CITY

It's been some little time since we've heard from P. J. Poag, manager of the Princess Theatre down in Del Rio, Texas, but information recently received at Club headquarters is ample evidence that this Round Tabler is still very much in the game and building the usual, attractive low costs fronts which we've had several other occasions to comment upon.



All his displays are, of course, constructed with the object of arresting attention and, as stated above, built of beaver-board and painted with water colors at very low cost. In addition to the accompanying reproductions of his fronts on "First Year," showing stars' faces brought out in trellis windows, and the novel arrangement of the theatre entrance for "Smilin' Through," the following ideas were used on pictures listed below:

For "Broken Wing" an airplane effect, with large cutout head of Velez in centre of board sign bearing star's name and picture title; for "70,000 Witnesses," large board sign bearing title only; "One Hour With You," both star and title were featured; "Tiger Shark," large, illuminated cutout letters with flasher attachment; "Miracle Man," title featured plus paintings of stars; "Congorilla," a street display on vacant lot; animals in cage; atmospheric lobby and front; "Down to Earth," hand-drawn lobby display and front; "Grand Hotel," large illuminated cutout title letters.

More information is lacking at this writing but we can advise Poag's fellow Round Tablers that he is a genius at turning out these fronts at an astonishingly low figure. Practically all material and letters are filed away in the work shop, repainted and used again and again on other pictures. If several other snap-shots of his fronts were not so faint as to detail, we'd be glad to reproduce them. The two we picked out were the sharper of the lot. At any rate, we're mighty glad to hear from this Club member again and will look forward to receiving further word of his activities.

HARMAN CASHED IN ON M-G-M AWARDS FOR GOOD CAMPAIGN

Extensive billing, tie-ups and a number of novel exploitation stunts featured the prize-winning (3d) campaign made on "Red Headed Woman" by H. H. Harman, manager of Loew's State Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and, consequently swelled his wallet with one of the awards made by M-G-M for best work on the picture.

Sixty-eight 32x52 inch snipes were posted on Catalina Swim Suit boards two weeks prior to opening, which only cost the theatre the snipes and posting expense. The space on the 24's was promoted through the Catalina district manager. Twenty-five hundred book matches, carrying picture copy over red silhouette of Harlow, were distributed through the 29 local Walgreen drug stores the week prior and during run of picture.

Further effort included a Harlow-M-G-M "dimple" story with 3-col. art in a local newspaper the day before opening; distribution by Postal Telegraph boys of 10,000 miniature telegrams; posting of 350 streamers in all "Eugene" beauty shops one week before opening; use of 1,000 menu inserts in 29 drug stores; distribution of 10,000 inserts in out-going packages from same drug concern; Harlow hat featured by ladies' shop; the promotion of "lost word" contest in "Shopper's News"; promoting 1,000 red carnations for distribution to ladies, and a tie-up with a beauty shop that resulted in a 100-line co-op. ad.

Cutouts of Harlow, taken from the 24-sheet lithos, were mounted on each end of the marquee during showing, with baby spots illuminating them at night time; special one-sheet displays of Harlow stills were placed in beauty shops; newspapers all carried Harlow art, stressing the player had "gone red head" especially for new picture; use of 14 special readers on Harlow in as many weeklies, and many other special stories, art, etc., in all leading daily publications.

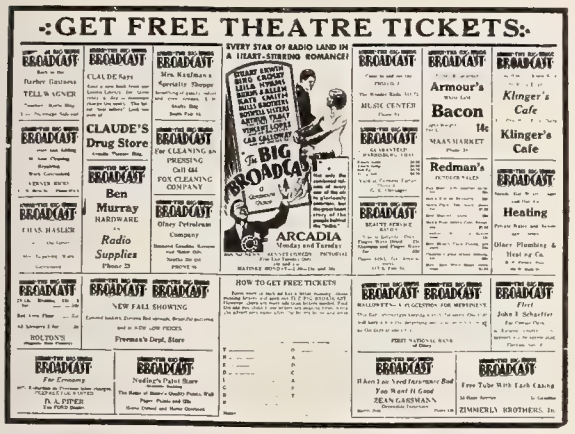
It's a little late to record Harman's campaign, but the matter was held pending announcement of the winner only a few weeks ago. To all appearances he put over a most comprehensive piece of work and deserved to share in the M-G-M awards for outstanding exploitation. We will look for further evidence of what he's doing to put over shows at the State.

Ad Rate Cut in Memphis

Following several conferences with theatre managers in Memphis, Tenn., business managers of leading local newspapers have agreed upon a cut in theatre ad rates which will run into thousands of dollars annual savings for various circuits represented in that city.

KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Dick's cartoons are one of the most welcome features of the Club section, and have been for the past three years. Having been a showman, and a darned good one, too, for many years, he can quickly grasp the humorous side of any situation and illustrate it with a large measure of success and a hearty laugh besides.



Dick has never asked us to pay him for his contributions. All he wants are suggestions direct from the field. You drop him a line care of the Club, set forth as briefly as possible the incident which you think rates a cartoon, and Dick will do the rest. Due credit is always given by Dick to whoever submits the idea.

So come on, fellows; scribble down that funny thing which happened in your house and send it along to Dick. We want his Lobby Laffs to continue for a long time to come and we want them to come right from the boys on the firing line.

HICKS HAS A STUNT TO CHECK ATTENTION GIVEN TO 'PAPER ADS

With the idea in mind that his newspaper ads, although attractive as the general run of such matter, were not getting the proper attention, Vernon Hicks, manager of the Arcadia, a Phil H. Heyde house in Olney, Ill., used a gag that not only produced desired results in that direction but materially increased box office receipts.

With the local telephone directory before him Hicks picks out fifteen names each day, inserts these in his ads with an invitation for those so designated to attend the theatre as guests for the current show. Nine out of ten bring friends along, thus making the gag a sort of a two for one, but with the added incentive of making people search each day's ad for their name. Proof of the latter is brought out by the number of people who constantly ask when their names are to be printed.

Hicks tells us he used this same gag several years ago with the same amount of success and we've had occasion to publish accounts of somewhat similar moves made by theatre men tying up with the old classified page gag of inserting names of local people in a number of small adds.

He also puts over cooperative ads out his way, as you can see from the accompanying reproduction of one he promoted for "Big Broadcast." Note that every small ad carried the picture title in large, bold face type. The missing letter gag was used as an interest-getter.

Thanks, Vernon, for your contributions and let's hear more about what you're doing. Fellow Club members will appreciate your help.

CHERRY OBTAINED SPECIAL DISPLAY IN LEADING SHOP

Special window displays in an exclusive shop featured the campaign made on "Red Dust" by James H. Cherry, manager of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas. Cards, on which there were several poses of Jean Harlow, carried the following copy: "Wendel's can duplicate this lovely dress worn by Jean Harlow, who co-stars with Clark Gable" (title, theatre and playdates).

Additional effort included a tie-up with Remington Rand for Gable typewriter stills; a Hamilton watch display with Gable still the center of attraction, and another Gable still tie-up with a window of turtleneck sweaters. While the picture was playing twenty-five word announcements were sent out daily over two local radio stations. Cherry also arranged to have a hotel carry announcements on menus.

JOE KINSKY PULLED SMART ELECTION GAG OUT IN SIOUX CITY

Among the many election stunts brought to our attention this season was one from Joseph Kinsky, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, which, to our way of thinking, rates considerable praise for the ingenious way it was put over.

The accompanying photo really tells the story, but for your further information the one sheet cards you see in one of the city's 27 precinct stations were hung there on election day by special permission of the Mayor and election commissioners in return for a trailer on the screen urging every one to turn out and vote their respective tickets. About 200 of these cards, which gave the current show a heavy plug, were placed in each of the stations.

The cost of the cards was negligible as printing was paid for through a tie-up Kinsky made with a local newspaper. In addition, the paper gave him 95 inches of free publicity on the show, including two 3-column by 10 inch display ads plugging both stunt and current attraction. Despite the fact that a pre-season swept the city all day and night business was well above average. Other special attractions in the city were cut short on election night because of poor attendance.

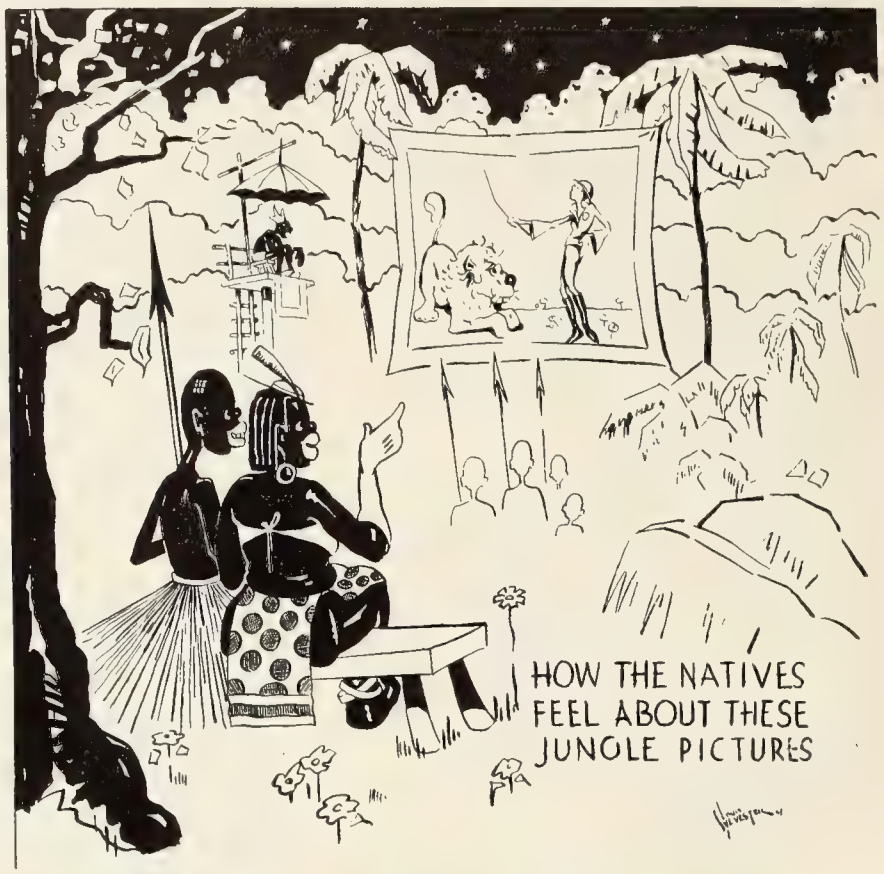
Well, all we can state right now is that Joe Kinsky sure must know his way 'round Sioux City to get away with the stunt described above, for it certainly took some sort of a stand-in with city officials to obtain permission to hang one-sheet cards in election booths. Okay, Joe, you win by several lengths! Let's have some more of your stunts.



STEVE BRODIE DOING GOOD JOB ON HOUSE ORGAN FOR HUFFMAN

The latest issue of the "Denver Mirror" to come to our attention discloses that Editor Steve Brodie is still carrying on his up-to-date little publication in the interests of the Harry Huffman theatres.

Papers such as Brodie is getting out serve a variety of purpose and often develop into the unusual. We have in mind a tab-sized newspaper that Dave Sablosky, manager of the Erlen Theatre, Philadelphia, started as a house organ several years ago. Now Dave has his bear by the tail and can't let go; moreover, he doesn't want to let go, for his sheet has the largest circulation and carries more advertising than any other in North Philly. We mention this for the reason that local advertising is becoming evident in Steve's tab. At any rate, good luck to him and his associates.

WE OFTEN WONDER!

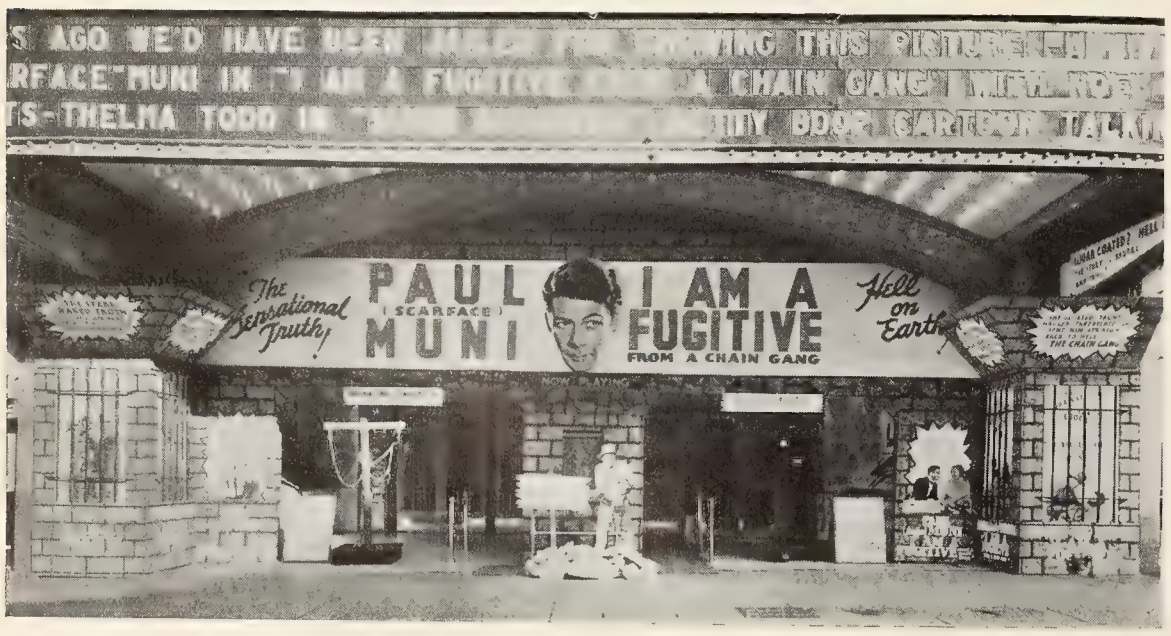
By LOU SYLVESTER

Having heard a doctor once express himself on the subject of movie operating technique, we are of the same questioning mind as Sylvester. We'd certainly like to know what the natives, themselves, think of those African, Bali and South Sea pictures.

SENSATIONAL FRONT MADE BY PAUL SHORT ON CHAIN GANG FILM

Despite alleged sensitiveness below the Mason-Dixon line on the subject of the chain-gang system, Paul Short, manager of the Melba Theatre, Dallas, Texas, took his Texas bull by the horns and played up the "sensational truth" angle of "I Am A Fugitive" when it opened there by means of the strikingly elaborate front pictured in the accompanying photo.

One of the outstanding features of the display was a large cut-out of Paul Muni, in chain-gang costume, working over a pile of rocks. A near-by sign post read: "Ten Years Ago We'd Be Jailed For Showing This Picture. . . Now Nobody Fears The Unvarnished Truth!"



Another interesting feature was the exhibition of torture instruments, such as a whipping post, sweat box, perforated lash and regulation ball and chain. Across the top of the front Short placed a large horizontal sign with a head of Muni in the centre, surrounded by picture title and catchlines. Scenes from the picture were blown-up and placed in various spots on the front, which was decorated to resemble a prison wall.

Copy used throughout carried plenty of wallop. Such lines were used as: "Sugar Coated? Hell No! The Story is Brutal And True!" "She Taunted, Gloated, Threatened, Nagged, And Sent Him Back To Hell—The Chain Gang." "He Won't Go Back Alive—Where Pores Sweat Blood!", etc., etc.

Coming on the heels of the recent nation-wide publicity given the death of a chain-gang victim of a sweat box, Short's display attracted an unusual amount of attention. Certainly it was an elaborate piece of work and typical of this showman's brand of exploitation.

More Mouse Clubs!

Premiers of twenty-five additional Mickey Mouse Clubs were held in Los Angeles Dec. 3, thus rapidly bringing the membership near the 1,000,000 mark.

LOU HART LOCATED UP AT CROTONA AND AUDUBON IN BRONX

We'd almost given up hope of locating Lou Hart, former publicity director for the Academy of Music, New York City, when a member of the Club detective squad reported his whereabouts in the Bronx, where he is taking care of publicity for two sister houses of the Academy, the Audubon and Crotona, and doing a bang-up job.

When exploiting "Horsefeathers" at the Crotona, two catchlines used at the downtown Rialto caught his eye and inspired him with the idea of making a tie-up with some nut growers' association. These were "Sure, We're Nuts to You" and "Nuttier Than Ever." Through one of the agents of the California Nut Growers he contacted an executive of the company and arranged for the give-away of 100 bags of nuts.

As you can see from the accompanying photo, nuts were very much in evidence in all parts of the lobby and patrons were made "nut-minded" for over a week in advance. Nuts were strung from lobby fixtures by means of adhesive tape and cord. It was not foreseen that the tape would dry up after a day or so and let go a nut on some patron's head, but this additional atmosphere helped the gag along. Patrons were also invited to estimate how many nuts were in a container and deposited over 10,000 answers while this gag was in force. In addition to having its advertising agency run a photo of the Crotona's lobby in local Jewish newspapers, the nut company paid cost of printing and distribution of 100,000 heralds, made of stock heavy enough to hold a walnut in a perforation arranged for this purpose.

Hart has been using another gag which was found very useful putting over revivals. Hanging in the Crotona's lobby is a large blackboard to carry a list of 10 available pictures. Patrons are advised through a screen trailer and on programs that they may vote for any picture on the list. Names and addresses are taken and 15 of the voters who selected the picture receiving the most votes were sent guest tickets to the picture. A young fellow dressed as a college professor stood in the lobby and called attention to the list by means of a long stick, such as is used in schools. The trailer sells the idea and the Saturday Midnight Hour, during which the revivals are shown, has grown tremendously.

We're mighty glad to get a line on Lou Hart's work again and now that we've located him will be on the lookout for a lot more interesting dope on what he's doing to keep the Audubon and Crotona in the black. That was a nice deal he put over with the nut concern and congratulations are in order.

DAVIS INSTITUTED "BACK-TO-THEATRE" MOVE THAT CLICKED

Some time ago this department reproduced a number of advertisements of a "Back-To-The-Theatre" movement instituted by Hearst interests at Chicago and we are informed by F. W. Davis, operator of the Alva Theatre, Morganton, N. C., that he picked up and successfully used the same idea.

We are reproducing one of a series of four ads he ran in Oct.-Nov. issues of his local newspaper and we believe many of his fellow Club members will recall the copy on "Let's Go to the Movies."

Another ad was headed "Entertainment" and called attention to that and Recreation as two vital necessities of life. A cut of the theatre and coming programs, with plenty of white space, completed the full page. Two other full pages were devoted to current and coming attractions, with a variety of attractive mats and appropriate copy.

Other members of this organization have found the above method an excellent tonic to revive drooping box offices when their advertising budgets allowed the extra splurge. We gather that Davis did not have to sell others than himself and, of course, that made the matter a lot easier. He recommends the stunt and so we're passing it along as a reminder to others.

Pritchard Buys Out Gregg

William L. Pritchard, active in showbusiness in Weston, Va., for the past twenty-eight years, recently purchased full control of the Camden Theatre there from his former partner, Guy F. Gregg. Pritchard's brother, Robert H., is also interested in the venture. The Camden was completely remodeled about three years ago and equipped with the finest sound and other modern theatre apparatus obtainable and should prove a real attraction for Pritchard's community.

MYERS IS QUALIFIED TO JOIN CLUB'S ONE MAN MANAGER CLIQUE

Albert R. Myers, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Hood River, Ore., and one of our recently elected Round Tablers, is hereby nominated for membership in the one-man-theatre-manager division of this Club. Aside from management, Albert has charge of the projection room, advertising and exploitation and all sign and poster work. He tells us he's not so hot as an artist but that Mrs. Myers, a talented artist, gives him a helping hand in that end.

Fellow members interested in putting on charity affairs will be glad to know that Myers made a real success of his by tying in with a football eleven, the C. of C. and all local merchants. One-sheet cards especially prepared for the occasion were donated by the local newspaper. These were headed: "For Charity." Title of the current attraction, a football theme picture, was set up in vertical form on the left-hand margin. The balance of the card was devoted to the program and stressed the 25% donation of gross receipts to local relief work.

We're mighty glad to include Myers among Round Table membership and to hear that this department has helped him over some rough spots. We'll expect to hear a lot more about what this versatile showman is doing to put his Rialto over the top.

ARTIST MADE FINE 24-SHEET ON LOT!

In order to catch the very spirit of "Kid from Spain" while it was in the making, a well known Hollywood artist was called in and told to do her darndest toward putting down on paper what she saw, which, to all appearances, was a rather capricious lady astride the head of a bull. Lynn Farnol was the gent behind the move, and we are indebted to George Gerhard, of U. A., for sending along the photo. It's certainly an attractive piece of work.

MURPHY AND LEACH EXCITED CURIOSITY WITH AN AQUARIUM

A large amount of publicity on "Tiger Shark" was obtained by Manager Murphy and his assistant, Walter Leach, of the Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J., through promotion of an extensive collection of tropical fish. The aquarium was furnished by a local concern and is valued at $1,200. To further carry out atmosphere three marine paintings were promoted from an artist in a nearby town. The aquarium studio also furnished 5,000 circulars, describing the fish and calling attention to the coming picture.

PHOTOGRAPHIC PROOF THAT ED HART IS ON DUTY IN PLAINFIELD

Four photographs—no more, no less—without any descriptive matter attached, is the only evidence we have at hand at present to inform the many friends of Ed Hart, formerly of Utica and Troy, N. Y., that this well known showman and Round Tabler is still engaged in his vocation and back with Paramount at the Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J.

Two of the shots deal with "Bring 'Em Back" and two with the opening of "Chandu." For the former he built a bamboo hut around the box office, which was flanked at either end with scene stills from the picture. One of the striking animal posters issued by the company for the picture was placed across the top portion of the lobby entrance. Another photo shows that Ed made a tie-up with a pet store to get his message before the many people who daily stop in front of the windows of this type of store.

In the photos on "Chandu" we can certainly see that there was considerable excitement over in Plainfield the day Hart put on his free street show to ballyhoo the opening of this picture. We can see that a platform was built over the stake body of a large truck and that a performer was engaged with his act of charming the spectators with an exhibition of magic. What is more important, however, is that this stunt gave the theatre capacity on opening day.

Even though we can't tell you any more at this time concerning Ed Hart's activities, it's gratifying to get a line on his work again and we'll be on his trail for further information.

OCCASIONAL STUNT HELPS SMALL HOUSE, BELIEVES REHFIELD

Located in a town of 2,000 population, with a tri-weekly change of program, it does not behoove H. E. Rehfield, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Bloomfield, Iowa, to wage extensive exploitation campaigns, even though he does indulge every now and then in some unusual publicity which generally proves its worth as a garnerer of public attention.

For instance, when he played "Congorilla" he used a street bally of a man dressed in a gorilla costume sent from Des Moines. It was a pretty "ornery" looking gorilla, advises H. E., but even though the shaggy disguise was more representative of the Ghetto than an African jungle, after being properly placarded front and rear with copy pertaining to picture, theatre and playdates, it materially helped box office returns.

He also secured excellent results from employing "Electro," the mechanical man, for solicitation of gifts from merchants for give-away at night performances. The self-styled robot appeared at the merchants' stores during the day and invited customers to estimate his age, etc., on cards especially prepared for the occasion. Of course it was necessary for the customer to be on hand at the theatre to participate in the give-aways. This stunt also aided the box office.

Getting away from exploitation for the nonce and turning to the subject of advertising, let us broadcast an appeal from Rehfield to his fellow Round Tablers for more examples of weekly or bi-weekly newspaper ads. He changes Sunday, Wednesday and Friday, generally, and the paper comes out in his town on Tuesdays and Thursdays; hence he has to advertise week-end and Sunday pictures in one paper. He uses two local newspapers, two or three out-of-town papers and about 1,000 weekly programs. Four small ads on the back covers of the latter take care of program expense. He considers window cards for every picture too expensive, so uses program cards, with two or three changes on each card, unless a picture comes along like "Grand Hotel," when 22x28's are brought into play.

Now that Rehfield has had a few words on exploitation and advertising in the small towns, let's hear from some of his fellow Club members similarly situated. Send in newspaper tear sheets, showing attractions at one time, and dope on anything else which will prove of interest to managers in the smaller communities. Do that—and we'll see that the rest is taken care of from this end of the Table.

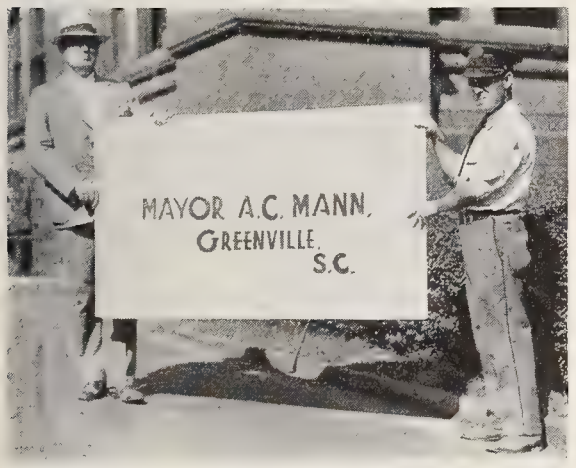
NO GRASS GROWING UNDER FEET OF DICK LASHLEY, GREENVILLE

Advertising tie-ups, a fashion show, space grabbing stunts and discovery of a talented musician on his staff of ushers, were among the recent activities of H. T. Lashley, city manager for Palmetto Amusement Co., Greenville, S. C., with headquarters at the Carolina Theatre.



One of the accompanying photos shows how he tied-in with the local street railway company for Greater New Movie Season, securing a street car bally and three free

30-inch ads in the newspaper. The slogan was: "The Street Car Carries You Direct to Your Favorite Theatre" and "Don't Miss Greater New Movie Season." Note the banner on the car advertising "Love Me Tonight" and the tie-in copy, "Ride the Street Cars to See This Picture."

Practically an entire page in a Greenville newspaper was given over to stories and ads from local merchants on a Fashion Show held at the Carolina. The page carried a five-column streamer head, "Fashion Show at Carolina This Evening," each of the several large ads tied-in with the theatre and excellent publicity breaks for the theatre were obtained in the accompanying text.

When campaigning for Greater New Movie Season Lashley received another nice newspaper publicity break by using the huge invitation post card stunt on the city's Mayor. It cost him exactly $4.52 to hire Uncle Sam to transport the big card to the Mayor's office, but the stunt rated a deep two-column photo and story in next morning's paper, with a break for Dick, his theatre and the current attraction.

Robert Bruns, the Carolina organist who some day may be crowding Jesse Crawford for honors in his profession, as far as we know may be the only usher-organist in the field. At any rate, Lashley smoked him out one day, let him try out the big Wurlitzer and now he's being featured daily on the instrument. "Talent is all around us," says Dick, "and it's often a life-saver." A local reporter was wised-up and as the result of this a signed story appeared in his paper.

That's all for this time about Dick Lasley's work, but it's quite enough to let his fellow Round Tablers know that he hasn't been letting any grass grow under his feet down in Greenville. More news next time, just as soon as our Carolina representative makes another report.

Whitbeck Resigns

Frank Whitbeck, one of the best known advertising and exploitation men in the motion picture field, recently resigned his post with Paramount on the coast, where for some time he has been in close touch with production-exploitation activities. His future business plans are unannounced at this writing.

IT DOES PAY!!!

That old adage, "It Pays to Advertise," was most forcibly brought home to Julius Lamm, manager of the ace Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, a short time ago, following publication in this department of an article to effect that he had successfully put over a tie-up with the manufacturers of a new type of bicycle for the kiddies.

He always believed in advertising, advises Julius, until the above mentioned article caused him to be deluged with requests for more information on this particular give-away, details of exploitation, etc. It took him one whole day to take care of correspondence.

And we know good old Julius faithfully answered every one of the letters, despite the fact that we could have helped him out on this end if we had been given any inkling that he was in such a peck of trouble. However, we know from past experience that he is always ready to help his fellow Round Tablers, and in their behalf and ours we thank him.

ABOUT PRINTER'S INK

In Which a Practical Showman Expresses Some Worthwhile Views on an Important Subject!

by DAN KRENDEL

Manager, Capitol Theatre, Windsor, Canada

IN our endeavors to sell entertainment to our fellowmen, how few of us pause to analyze the psychological significance attached to each individual sales talk as reflected by the daily quota of newspaper advertising? Far too many engaged in this and allied industries regard advertising and copywriting as a necessary evil, to be rid of as quickly as possible. Others do not give it a thought. Advertising is the backbone of the motion picture industry, ranking second in importance only to the actual production of the individual picture. A production may be a jewel from point of view of text, direction and sterling performance, yet may not be worth the cost of the negative where it is not properly handled by those entrusted with the task of imparting to the waiting public the information it is eagerly anticipating. One hundred per cent of the success of a production depends on the capabilities of the publicity man, and his ability to exercise them to maximum advantage. Good advertising may elevate a production to new heights of popular appeal. A poorly developed campaign, on the other hand, may be the means of losing for the picture, whatever prestige it originally commanded.

It Takes Experience!

The knack of properly publicizing a picture cannot be acquired overnight, or by virtue of association with the industry for one, or over a period of years. The one vital pre-requisite is an inborn desire to create, and an alert mind to supervise such creative powers, and mold them along approved channels consistent with the ever-changing trend of public opinion.

We are paying heavily for the privilege of using the press as a medium for imparting to the buying public such information as will guide them in their selection of entertainment to suit individual tastes. It is a pity to cram our allotted daily space with idiotic excuses for such desired information. Yet far too many "ink-pot" addicts are allowed full sway, splashing the newspapers of the country with incoherent masses of alphabetical atrocities. With proper application PRINTER'S INK is an invaluable ally—yet may be converted into a harmful negative influence with very little encouragement. White space, plenty of it, properly distributed, is the only antidote to such an overdose of this same ink menace, and should be conscientiously applied where the copy itself is not such as to merit special citation.

The Safety Valve!

White space is the safety valve governing the attention-arresting qualities of any ad. A small ad artistically laid out, carefully spaced with special attention paid to typographical exactness does considerably more good than one consuming twice or three times the lineage, minus those qualities which go to make it a dominant factor in the saleability of the production it supposedly covers.

Regardless of average newspaper space consumption, and in spite of sliced budgets, newspaper ads may very easily be reduced to a new low level, without losing one iota of their sales value. It may be of no particular significance where only one house is concerned, but when considering the saving which may be affected over an entire circuit of theatres, the idea may be well worth some consideration.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Other members are invited to express their views on the ever-important subject of advertising. Or perhaps you would like to give some individual opinion regarding Mr. Krendel's article.

AVOIDING LIABILITY IN INJURY

by M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

(Reprinted from "Better Theatres," Issue of November 19th)

A 300-pounder enters your theatre and seats himself. The seat gives way and the 300-pounder brings suit for personal injuries. A woman catches her coat on a projecting nail in a seat, causing it to rip and sues for property damage. In both instances, one of the most important issues on the trial will be: Was the seat that caused the personal injury or property damage, regularly and thoroughly inspected?

"The owner," says the Supreme Court of Connecticut, "assumes the duty * * * of exercising reasonable care to see that the seats are in reasonably safe condition for its guests. It performs this duty by having its servant examine the seats each day and report their condition, and thereafter repairing the defective ones." By the Supreme Court of Alabama we are told that "such inspection must be sufficiently frequent and thorough to determine the condition and to insure a reasonably safe condition." The rule in these two cases is the same in all the states.

Inability to prove upon the trial of an action for personal injuries, or for property damage, that seats were frequently inspected, is likely to result in a verdict for plaintiff.

Now while the courts insist upon "frequent and thorough" inspection, they never go into details as to how frequently or how thoroughly a seat should be inspected. Nor can they be expected to do so. Having outlined a general duty, they must wait for a specific case to be presented to them, and then determine upon the evidence whether or not a theatre owner has met this duty. However, I believe that the careful observance of the following inspection standards should satisfy any court that all possible precautions have been taken to prevent seat accidents.

How thoroughly should seats be inspected and what to look for in inspecting them? The best rule to follow is to anticipate the happening of seat accidents. Think of the different ways in which a seat may become faulty and of the different ways in which that defective seat may cause injury—then look for these defects in your seats. Look for looseness, rips in the upholstery, splinters. If a seat looks doubtful, have it immediately replaced or repaired, or if this cannot be done at once, have the seat roped off until it can be done.

I recommend the practice in use throughout several circuits, of assigning each usher to the inspection of a certain number of seats. After the last performance, each usher walks through the rows assigned to him and turns up every seat, listening for the squeak which would indicate a possible defect, and looking for any signs of looseness. He turns his flashlight on the upturned seat to detect splinters and projecting nails. If a seat appears to be out of order the usher reports it by row and seat number to the cleaner.

To avoid the shifting of responsibility for repairs, and to provide yourself with a record of inspections, the cleaner should be required to fill out and sign a report giving the location of any defective seats and the steps taken to prevent injury: i.e., replacement, repair or roping off.

"Find the defects in your equipment yourself. Don't let your patrons find them for you!"

KRENDEL REOPENED WITH GALA SHOW; A DISPLAY FROM ZELIG

Information concerning the work of Dan Krendel, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Windsor, Canada, is always interesting and this time, among other data, we are privileged to reproduce a photo of the attractive lobby display turned out by poster artist Harry Zelig to exploit new season product. It's neat, don't you think?

Krendel recently pulled a regular New Year's Eve midnight show when his house reopened with "Horsefeathers" with the slogan "A Happy New Year of a Hundred Happy Hits." All advance and current copy carried "New Year" captions, until the public really began to wonder if it hadn't done a Rip Van Winkle and that the New Year was actually at hand. Balloons, noisemakers and what-not were used for atmosphere in night of the preview and results more than justified this unusual angle of exploitation.

He has effected a corking good deal with a local broadcasting station whereby the theatre receives liberal mention over the air in return for a couple of passes per show. As Dan states, this gag doesn't do a bit of harm and saves quite a slice of coin for use in other advertising mediums.

It's always good news when Krendel reopens for the new season and now that this event is past we'll be looking for the usual crop of interesting show-selling slants from his neck of the Dominion. His views are always welcomed by the other members of this Club.

HARRY STONE LOCATED!

Just when the Club Missing Persons Bureau had given up hope of locating Harry N. Stone, former manager of the American Theatre, Butte, Mont., we received word from Tom McDonald, present manager of the American, that Showman Harry never even left Butte and is carrying on in his same old aggressive form as skipper of the Rialto Theatre there.

That's good news and thanks to Tom for helping us out. Harry is one of our old time members, and we certainly don't want to lose track of him. We'll hope to tell you more about his activities in a future issue.

TWO VIEWS OF NEW HOUSE MANAGED BY ROUND TABLER LAMM

This is the first opportunity we've had to show the fellow Club members of Julius Lamm, manager of the Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, what a fine house he now has charge of for Warner Bros.

The view of the interior of the Uptown's spacious lobby will convey a fair idea of what Lamm has to play with in that part of his house and what it takes in the way of advertising material to make the proper impression. At the time this photograph was taken the large frames were plugging a pre-Xmas drive, Hallowe'en Night Carnival, Election returns and advance features. Note the attractive art work and the big reproduction of the book, "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang."

As the other photo so clearly shows, the big lobby was just the place to stage a successful masked party for the kiddies on the Saturday prior to Hallowe'en. Prizes were awarded to children appearing in the most novel costumes and the usual stage games, consisting of pie-eating, balloon-blowing and other gags, entertained over 1,000 youngsters. The stunt proved to be a corking good will getter for the theatre, as well as boosting current box office receipts.

We're mighty glad to hear that Julius is getting along so nicely with his new assignment at the big Uptown and will hope to hear a whole lot more about what he's doing to put this Warner ace over the top. What it takes to keep a house in the black we sincerely believe Julius has and his methods are always of particular interest to his fellow Club members.

Incidentally, have you other members noticed how frequent the name Lamm appears in the Club section? And how useful their activities are to other showmen in need of new ideas—or old ideas with new twists? That's what we like about those two boys, and probably their immediate superiors feel the same way about it.

DEARTH AND EARLE CONSTRUCT A FINE FRONT IN MEMPHIS

A number of Club members down below the Mason-Dixon line have been turning out some corking displays and ballyhoos on "Cabin in the Cotton," of which the work done by Gene Dearth and Earle Davenport, members of Howard Waugh's staff at the Warner Theatre. Memphis, doesn't have to play second fiddle to any.

Let's begin on the outside where tickets are usually purchased and see what was done to the cashier's booth. Here we have a complete cabin built around the booth with copy on roof reading "You-all Must Come See Cabin in the Cotton." Underneath each side of the big marquee of the Warner were attractive compoboard sections that carried a large head of Barthelmess in a field of cotton. The front ends of this structure carried the star's name, title of picture and a sketched replica of a cabin. Bales of cotton were also sketched on the entrance doors.

There isn't any descriptive matter with another photo we have at hand, but to us it looks as though either Waugh, Dearth or Davenport put over a fine window display. A plot of earth, walled in with the netted burlap used to bale cotton, was used for the base of a miniature "one-mule" farm. In the center was a replica of a typical country cabin, designed by a local authority on such things. A small fence surrounded the cabin and a tree and other "fixins" lent to the general scheme. A banjo was propped up off to one side and real stalks of cotton rounded out the display. Nothing else in the window except a sign reading "Come in and hear Cabin in the Cotton—Tuneful Song Success As Played in the Warner Picture Now Showing at the Warner Theatres," so we judge that the tie-up was made with some local music dealer.

Very attractive work, all of it, and we're mighty glad to get a line on what Howard Waugh, alias Old Doc' Memphis, alias the Old Colonel from Dixie, alias his latest nom de plume, The Old Astrologer, has been doing since he returned to his old stand in what he calls "Tennememphisee." Apparently he has two able co-workers with him in the persons of Dearth and Davenport and we'll certainly be on the watch for other examples of their handiwork. So long for this time, Old Walrus, and be sure to keep in closer touch with headquarters.

MIKE NEWMAN'S ATTRACTIVE FRONT!

The front on "Smilin' Through" pictured above was used to excellent results by Mike Newman, manager of the State Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., and the local newspaper thought it so attractive that mention was made that "it was the most beautiful front seen in the town for years." The background was lattice-work, painted light blue and covered with flowers. The cutout of Shearer over the box office was made from the 24-sheet and cutout letters.

MANY GOOD STUNTS USED BY GATES TO SELL ANNIVERSARY

Tie-ups, cooperative ads, birthday cake, a cider gag, classified page stunt and other effective exploitation and advertising activities featured the 5th Anniversary campaign made for the Granada Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, by Manager Arnold Gates. "Grand Hotel" was the attraction and all advance work carried copy on the picture.

One week in advance a 50 gallon barrel of cider was mounted in the outer lobby and the beverage was dispensed to theatre patrons and passers-by. A small bar was erected for this stunt.

The numeral "5", symbolic of the Granada's anniversary, was tied up in a number of ways in the campaign. One deal was made with a newspaper, whereby children might earn guest tickets to the theatre by making extensive collections of 5's from any available magazines, papers and other periodicals. It was necessary to cut them out and paste them neatly on sheets of paper. A number of neighborhood stores were also banded together to run ads with the numeral "5" in stated prices. For instance, a gift shop advertised special dollar value hosiery for 55 cents.

A huge birthday cake was promoted from a local baker, who distributed 2,000 tie-up circulars in each package sent out from his shop during the week. When the cake was placed in the theatre lobby patrons were invited to test their keenness of mind by correctly estimating the weight of the cake. This gag was handled in the usual manner. A local florist also contributed large baskets of cut flowers for the occasion.

Five large star heads of Garbo, the Barrymores, Crawford and Beery were placed around the proscenium and front sidewalls one week in advance. A large valance along the mezzanine level featured the picture title and "Greatest Cast in Screen History." The valance was spotted from star to star and then the spot would move to another identical valance on the other side.

The stunt of having a registration book in the lobby several days in advance, so that patrons could register their names and participate in a guest ticket gag also proved very popular. Later on, permission was obtained from the police department to move the book to the "Busy Corner."

Additional effort included a parade of Boy Scouts the day following opening, headed by motorcyle escort; a tie-up with a restaurant for an attractive window display; use of half-sheet proclamations in three large west side stores so that patrons might sign and participate in another guest ticket gag; promotion of a full page co-op ad among "Big 5 Merchants" on west side; special newspaper stories, an editorial and a variety of art; use of pennants and streamers; use of large floodlights borrowed from W. E. to light front of theatre; teaser trailer two weeks in advance; anniversary week trailer thanking patrons for past patronage, etc.; distribution of 10,000 trailers with anniversary copy; posting of a 24-sheet and three 3-sheets at special location, and distribution of 2,000 mimeographed copies of the Schenck wire congratulating the Granada on the occasion of its 5th Anniversary.

Certainly a complete campaign and typical of the way Gates always works when putting over an effort of this sort. There can be no doubt but that Cleveland's west side was well aware that the Granada was five years old. We'll be on the watch for other Gates campaigns.

AVOIDING DRAUGHTS

This is the time of the year when a manager hears many complaints about draughts. Patron after patron demands that the manager be brought to his seat and forced to sit in it. "Then he'll see what it's like to sit in a draught," is the wail.

Due to the construction of some theatres it is practically impossible to eliminate all draughts. But it is possible to check them somewhat. In some of the what we might term Class B Houses, glass partitions have been placed on top of the marble rails at the back row of the orchestra. In other houses, dark colored curtains have been hung, and, in the event of standing room, so draped that they can be moved to the side. These mediums have helped no end in checking draughts. Another method of keeping out unwelcome breezes is to weatherstrip the doors and windows of the house. This may be done at small cost and with very little trouble.

Another reason for draughts is the starting or running of the exhaust fans when the house gets too crowded. It is extremely poor policy and bad management to permit your house to get too hot or stuffy and then turn on fans full blast. The more sensible way is to watch the house temperature closely, especially when the business gets brisk, and start the exhaust or blower going slow enough to keep fresh, clean air in circulation without actually causing a draught or breeze.

Like all other details of your theatre's operation, proper heat and ventilation, plus close attention to avoid draughts, is important during the winter months.

SELETTE DOING WELL AT HELM OF STRAND, NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Apparently the same selling methods used by Eddie Selette in other New England posts is proving successful in putting over the Strand Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., where he was assigned a short time ago.

We refer to a variety of promotional activities, such as tie-ups with local merchants for give-aways of useful articles for old and young people; special heralds; samples of "lifesavers" in envelopes; use of the manilla book covers with theatre ad for distribution in schools; radio audition contests; "Warning" heralds, which we have described before; popularity contests, in which holder of most votes secures bicycle, and other gags of like nature.

He recently arranged two other tie-ups with a large meat market and a cleaning and dyeing company, in which the former was tied up with the book-cover ad and the latter with the distribution of programs in pockets of cleaned garments. He also has a deal on with a store whereby animals are always available for display in the theatre lobby.

We're glad to get a line on Selette's activities again and to hear that he's doing so nicely with his recent assignment. Eddie has a flock of tried-and-proven recipes, as you may glean from the above, and his gags always seem to work.

Big-Hearted Exchangemen!

Local exchangemen in Denver have opened up their heart strings to the extent of offering a cup to managers in the Rocky Mountain Division of Fox-West Coast for the best campaign on any picture. The cup will be awarded for original and best campaign efforts, not merely as outlined by the home office. All the boys are thrilled.

GOLDBERG WORKING OUT GOOD PLAN TO DISTRIBUTE ORGAN

We'll have to take off our hat to Lee Goldberg, manager for Warner theatres in the Louisvile, Ky., zone, for the working out of what appears to be a corking plan for circularization of an eight page house organ among the various cities in his territory.

In every city on his circuit he has chosen twenty-five young women, ranging in age from eighteen to twenty-five or thirty years, to act as correspondents, or local editors of the "Warner Bros. Movie News." In order to reach a certain class of patronage the young women were picked from representative families, with the understanding that they are to distribute 25 copies of the "News" to their friends each week. Thirty copies are mailed each week to each local editor, which means a total circulation of 750 copies per week in each town. It costs approximately nine cents postage to send the copies in bulk to each correspondent, who distributes them direct to a selected list of people, receiving in return for her efforts two passes each week to current Warner shows.

An idea of the calibre of the local editors may be gained from knowledge that one in a certain city is secretary to a university, meaning that the weekly reaches the faculty. Some are high school girls, teachers, secretaries to well known business executives, etc.

We will advise more fully about Lee Goldberg's plan as it is developed. At the present it is reported a most effective method for obtaining high grade circulation at low cost and a strong testimonial to his ability as a showman of the highest calibre. The stunt bears all the ear marks of being an original—what do you say?

ART, TO ENHANCE THE BOX OFFICE APPEAL!

GOOD art work will oftimes prove to be the final tug that pulls some of the customers to the box office. This is especially true of theatres located on busy, transient thoroughfares, and many time just as important for the average small city theatre regardless of location but playing to a large percentage of the population.

Through the courtesy of Frank (Francois) Bonait, poster artist for Shea's Theatre in Erie, Pa., we are privileged to present a group of unusually fine posters which are a regular occurrence at the Shea Theatre. Other artists, in particular, and managers as well, will agree that the likenesses achieved by Frank are swell. Here is an artist who, apparently, can inject real appeal into his star's portraits. Just cast your eye along the photos below and see how true this statement is.

One must have experience with this type of material to really appreciate what these posters look like when finished. If you are in that class then you can picture, mentally, the finished work and the various colors used to make them even more life like that the photos show them here.

Vance Minton, manager of the Shea house in Erie is also deserving of no small amount of credit because of the suggestions and encouragement he gives his poster man. This is most essential if one hundred percent results are to be obtained.

We know that Frank will overlook the delay in getting his first contributions into print but, as we have explained before, we have been devoting so much of our limited space to important manual and feature stories that it was almost impossible to keep pace with the art material being submitted by so many of our friends and members. Send us some more material Bonait.

ACT NOW—FILL IN THAT BLANK!

PHIL GODEL

is a new member of the Club's Canadian contingent and we're glad to announce that his application has been duly received and recorded. Phil manages the Westmont Theatre in Montreal, Quebec, and we hear he's making a good job of it. His fellow Club members will be interested to find out what methods he's using to boost box office receipts and if he'll just take off enough time to jot down brief accounts of his advertising and exploitation work we'll see that word is passed along the line. What say, Phil?

is the chief of the Palace and Marion Theatres out in Marion, Ohio, and a cordial welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler. He frankly confesses he should have enrolled in the Club long, long ago, but he's been stepping around so much in the past two years that this is the first chance he's had to settle down for a while. He's been from Australia to Honolulu in the interests of theatre management and is now city manager for the Young Amusement Company in Marion. We know for a fact that he has some excellent dope up his sleeve for taking a house out of the red and hope he'll pass along full details. We'll be checking up on this, Al, so please keep it in mind.

is the assistant manager of the Empire Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and his application for membership in our Club is sponsored by Irving Feinman, who is at present doing special exploitation work at the Empire for Harry Brandt, of Brandt Brothers. According to Irving, Tom is a capable showman and destined to go on up the ladder of success in his field. We'll be keeping an eye on his climb and, in the meantime, will look for news of what's going on at the Empire from both these boys.

has the job of assisting Arthur D. Rabe with the management of the Mosholu Theatre, Bronx, New York City. He's still another assistant to file his application for membership in the Round Table Club and his boss advises us that Neville is an A1 man on exploitation, displays, etc. He is 21 years of age, has been at the Mosholu for the past two years and was promoted from doorman to his present post. We'll be keeping an eye peeled on Neville.

not only owns but manages the Shastona Theatre out in Mt. Shasta City, Calif., so he's another owner-manager in line for introduction to his fellow Round Tablers. We're also glad of the opportunity to acknowledge his application and hope he'll contribute his full share of material which goes to make up this department each week. Shoot along some dope, Patterson, on what you are doing to boost the box office and we'll pass it along the line.

is the proprietor and manager of the Strand Theatre in Caro, Michigan, and a note from him, though brief, says a whole lot. "Please enroll me as a member of the Managers' Round Table Club. Business is exceedingly good." That is good news, Richard J., and we are pleased to both enroll you as a newly elected Club member and observe that your box office is in a healthy condition. Keep up the good work and when you get time let us know about your show-selling methods. All your fellow members will be interested.

MISS OLGA G. SWERTLOW is the capable lady-manager of Lee Och's Tuxedo Theatre, located in the Bronx section of New York City, and we're mighty glad to have the opportunity to acknowledge her application for membership in the Round Table Club. Soon, we have a hunch, she'll be sending in some stories about what's going on in showbusiness in her neck of the Bronx. In case anyone doubts that this lady eats, breathes and even lives theatre atmosphere, we'll let you all in on a secret: sssh! her real name is Mrs. Ronald W. Failes and her husband is the skipper of the Kingsbridge Theatre, another Lee Ochs house in the Bronx. We'll introduce hubby later on.

is another assistant manager to join the ranks of the many assistant managers already listed for membership in this Club. He has the job of helping Manny Schulman, skipper of the Crescent Theatre, Astoria, L. I., N. Y., and became associated with him about two months ago. Yasna is an experienced showman, having been with Warner houses for the past six years as manager, etc., but like many others these days is wearing the title of assistant. He's helped this department out before with contributions and we sincerely hope that both he and Manny will again put their shoulder to the wheel. We'll be looking for news about Crescent shows.

manages the Kingsbridge Theatre, a Lee Ochs house up in the Bronx, New York City, and we're also listing him as one of the Club's recently elected members. His name was proposed by no less a personage than Mrs. Failes, who, under the name of Miss Olga Swetlow, manages the Tuxedo Theatre, another Ochs house in the same section of the city. This is the way we like to get 'em, Ronald, husband-wife at the same time. We hope both of you will become active members of this organization.

A. M. DUNLOP

is located 'way out in Astoria, Oregon, where he manages the Liberty Theatre for Fox-West Coast. We are also in receipt of his application for Club membership and this is the time to introduce him to the many other showmen in this big army of managers. He's been a reader of the HERALD for a number of years, so we feel sure that this department has claimed his attention in the past. Now that he's one of the gang, we'll count upon him to do his share of the work toward keeping these pages alive with interesting slants on showbusiness.

manages the Tivoli Theatre, Downers Grove, Chicago, a house operated by Floyd M. Brockwell and styled "The Wonder Theatre of Suburban Chicago." Bradshaw has been connected with theatres for the past fifteen years as pianist, organist and manager of both picture and vaudeville houses. In answer to his inquiry as to whether it's too late to become a member of the Round Table Club, we're tellin' him it's not—not while the Round Table is still 'round. Murray likes the Club section of the HERALD, crediting it with giving him ideas for about 60 per cent of his publicity stunts. His fellow Club members thank him for those kind words and, now that he's one of the gang, will be on the lookout for his share of show-selling information.

asks us if his seventeen years' existence in this world is too short a one for eligibility as a member of this Club. Nay, Roland, not with the send-off your boss, C. G. Larson tacked onto your application! It's a surprise to us that you don't wear the title of manager instead of assistant manager, with all the nice things he has to say regarding your ability. At any rate, the speed you are going—taking care of booking, advertising, house supervision, etc., it probably won't be long before we'll be mailing you one of the "Framed Certificates." By all means we're glad to have you with us, so let us know from time to time what you are doing to fill seats at the Mazon Theatre, Mazon, Ill.

joins the Round Table Club through the good offices of Murray Bradshaw, manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Chicago suburban house in Downers Grove. Elsewhere on this page we introduced Murray and now we'll have Keely step up and shake hands all around as the Tivoli's assistant manager. Conditions are not so hot in the spot where these two showmen are doing business, but they get out and hustle and manage to get along pretty well. We'll be interested to hear about their methods of boosting trade.

is the hustling assistant employed by H. W. Little to look after affairs at the Strand and Ritz Theatres, Uvalde, Texas, and it's also our pleasure to include his name among the many showmen enrolled in this Club. According to several snapshots of fronts, ballyhoos and displays we have at hand and an account of recent activities, we've every reason to believe that Ken is destined to become a very useful member of this organization. We'll tell you more about his work in a later issue. As in many other sections of this country, business conditions are far from perfection down in Uvalde and only the Strand is being operated at present, which, nevertheless, keeps Taylor on his toes. We'll be on watch for future communications from this new Round Tabler.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

James Kirkwood
New Orleans State

After George Raft's personal appearance, James Kirkwood is a pleasant relief. He realizes that he has to offer something more than a name and he does it. Opening with pretty Suzanne Jane, he leaves the stage to her and she does a song and dance to a nice hand. Kirkwood then comes on for his "Extra Man" bit. Though handicapped by a severe cold, Kirkwood forced his voice to carry emotion and made his face and body do the rest.

Duval
San Francisco Warfield

As the headliner in the "Mystery" Idea, Duval easily walks away with the honors. He is truly a master of the art of sleight of hand and has an act that pleases the eye as well as puzzles the mind. His most interesting performance is the production of silk fabrics, apparently out of nothing at all; hundreds of yards of silks of many colors pile up in billowy waves.

Masters and Gauthrie
Baltimore Hippodrome

While one man played a bashful dumb comic (Harry Langdon type), the other did the straight part, and some soft shoe dancing and singing that was good.

Hilton Sisters
New Orleans Orpheum

A Siamese twin act which imitates the Duncan sisters, plays saxophones, stages a silly newspaper interview, and dances with two male stooges, showing a versatility which helps put it across. The entire routine could be improved if the mistress of ceremonies were omitted.

Harry Kahne
San Francisco Golden Gate

Mental gymnastics is the forte of this entertainer and the manner in which he can get information about his audience and their possessions is interesting. He works incredibly fast and gets a fine reception.

Johnny Perkins (3)
New York State

A show-stopping turn if there ever was one. Perkins, Ruth Petty and the little colored lad, Richard Montgomery, do their own specialties and stop the show with them. Their turn is exactly the same as has been seen by this reviewer many times in many houses and we have yet to view them when they haven't overshadowed everything else on the bill. This week, as has been usual lately, Perkins and his two entertainers have the closing spot, following headliners, and doing better than they do.

Perkins, himself, is the last word in master of ceremonies, filling his duties of introducing each act in an intimate and pleasing style that gives him an added advantage when he comes on for his own specialty. These entertainers should never be out of work.—E. D.

Brooklyn Fox to Stage Own Shows

Mr. H. H. Wallenbrink who recently gained the directoral managership of the Brooklyn Fox, changes the policy on December 16.

The Fanchon and Marco units which have been featured here for the past year and a half will be replaced by stage-shows produced by the Fox capable staff, with Charles Niggemeyer at its head. The present house staff, Sam Jack Kaufman, director of music, and Bob West and Rosa Rio, organists, remain featured in their own spots. Big bill names and personal appearances, enhanced by a 12-line-girl troupe, will be the new order.

Irving Mills in Europe on Ellington Tour Plan

The interest in Duke Ellington and his orchestra evinced all over Europe made it imperative that Irving Mills, president of Mills-Rockwell and personal manager of Ellington, should arrange a trip to the other side.

Mr. Mills, accompanied by Mrs. Mills, sailed on the Rex last Saturday. Their itinerary will include Amsterdam, Vienna, Berlin, Paris and London. Mr. Mills intends to arrange an European tour for Ellington, with a possibility of including the Mills Brothers. He also intends to look at songs for Mills Music, special material for Lawrence Music and to sign up outstanding European acts.

Mr. Mills hoped to do all this in time to be back before the holidays.

DANCERS

Catherine Littlefield
New York Roxy

The premiere danseuse of the "Cathedral" is given two spots in which to show the audience her capabilities, and in both she lives up to everything said about her. She is beauteous and graceful in her work.

Tommy & Betty Wonder
Brooklyn Fox

Opening with a song, "Walking on Air," this pair of charming kids suddenly spurts into a hot specialty dance. After Tommy ties up the show with his "St. Louis Blues Strut," Betty's clowning rendition of "Minnie the Moocher" maintains the pace. Tommy then offers a smart novelty dance with a dummy which makes the audience clamor for more. He encores with a graceful waltz, again using the dummy. An entertaining turn.—H. P.

Cooper & Lathrop Bros. (4)
New York Capitol

This is one of the better dance acts, which includes acrobatic, tap and novelty routines. The Lathrops' shadow dance is well done but Miss Cooper's stair dance tops the program. Audience reaction, distinctly favorable.—H. P.

COMEDY

Cass, Mack and Owen
New York Capitol

This act is unusual in that a trio of rough and tumble dancers includes a girl who slapbangs her way to plenty of laughs. The trio offers some clever comedy acrobatics and tap dancing including a slow-motion bit, which is a sure-fire laugh. This act should please anywhere.—H. P.

Bob Hope (4)
New York Capitol

Acting as master of ceremonies for the stage show, Bob Hope and his stooges keep things moving. Hope possesses a pleasing personality, and has a way of getting his gags over nicely. A bit in which Bob drives his "mother" from the stage as he sings "My Mom," is a howl. This audience was well satisfied.—H. P.

SINGERS

Bing Crosby (2)
New York Capitol

Bing gets a nice hand and sings "Love Me Tonight," after which he introduces Eddie Lang, well known steel guitarist, who accompanies Crosby for the remainder of the act, the songs being "Dinah" and "How Deep Is the Ocean." In an encore Crosby offers "Please," which he introduced in "The Big Broadcast."—H. P.

Radio Rubes (4)
New York Capitol

This is a hill-billy quartet using two guitars, a violin and a harmonica to good advantage. The act is a musical novelty that is entertaining. —H. P.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

DICK LIEBERT (Brooklyn Paramount) presented one of the most outstanding organ novelties since his inaugural program. The first part of it consisted of three songs, straight community numbers: "Say It Isn't So," "Put Out the Lights," and "Couldn't Say Good by." These the audience sang loudly. Then in the spirit of "Thanksgiving," Liebert presented a production number that was the finest and most entertaining he has done. Opening with a beautiful rendition of "Pilgrim's Chorus," as Larry Riley impressively reads a resume of the Pilgrim's trip, a storm scene on film is cleverly worked in, and a peaceful scene of the pilgrim ship ends the number. For a grand finale, the "Doxology" is played by Liebert as a scrim curtain discloses Lester Cole and his chorus of twelve, as pilgrims, who beautifully sing this sacred composition.

BETTY LEE TAYLOR (Niagara Falls Strand) is doing things in the way of novelty solos that are giving the patrons from both sides of the border something to talk about. Recently she put over an extremely interesting solo which she built around the popular song, "Shantytown." Miss Taylor introduced the novelty by singing the first five slides and the audience joined in the next ten.

This week being "Thanksgiving" week for the Canadians, Miss Taylor composed a special number for their benefit, and not only they but the entire audience joined in singing it. She followed this with "Mighty Lak a Rose," and then offered "Eli Eli," played as a straight solo number, which was enhanced by a purple spot on the organ. Miss Taylor acknowledged the tremendous hand and went into a chorus of "Shantytown," to which a young lady on the stage sang. A final chorus of this number was sung by the audience, after a cleverly worded talk by the popular and attractive Miss Betty Lee.

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Triboro) offered a "Miniature Review" for his closing organ solo at this house, where for the past two years he has been its most popular feature attraction.

The solo was composed of bits from novelties which Dougherty had presented in the past six months, namely: "Road to Mandalay," a "grammar lesson" with words starting in the letter "S"; a clever parody to "Shanty-town," and a closing chorus of "Chloe." Each number was sung with enthusiasm and the popular organist drew heavy applause.

ROSA RIO (Brooklyn Fox) capably entertained the audience with a specially prepared solo which she called "Talking Turkey." Special lyrics to "Constantinople" introduced the novelty and as she played "Shanty-town," "Say It Isn't So," "Love Me Tonight," and "Lullaby of Leaves," ushers passed up and down the aisles giving out candy turkeys to the ones singing loudest.

Either all wanted turkeys or they enjoyed the songs; in any case they shouted out the numbers, and obviously enjoyed the solo, though their applause at finish was weak.

Denver Organist Dead

Mrs. Ermina De La Vergne, 38 years old, organist at the Ogden theatre, Denver, for the past five years and a featured organist over NBC, died last week after two emergency operations. She is survived by her husband and a daughter.

Say . . . have you heard or played that new Feist "Hey Nonnie, Nonnie and a Hot Cha Cha" song, called "Fit as a Fiddle"? . . . It's a sweetheart and all orchestras and organists who have used it say the audience loves it. . . . Bob West, the "cheerleading" organist, is back at the Fox, Brooklyn . . . and is he making them sing . . . boy, oh boy. . . . When I caught him last Saturday, they liked to tore the roof off the house. . . . Arlo Hults, formerly with the RKO circuit, is now at the Paramount, Glen Falls, N. There is a young fellow by the name of Hy Derison, over at Irving Berlin's who is taking care of organists in these parts in a big way. . . . I have received many letters from fellows outside of New York, asking for more attention to them on slides . . . but all the pedal-pushers around here rave about the good service given them by Hy. . .

OVERTURES

DAVID ROSS (New York Roxy), as usual, capably directs this huge orchestra in Rossini's "William Tell Overture." The overture opens with the cello introduction, and with the approach of the storm, the shepherd's flute is heard over the thundering notes. As the storm subsides, they go into the "Shepherd's Song." The silvery notes of a trumpet herald the stirring finale. The entire overture was beautifully done and earned the tremendous applause as the members took their bows.

CHARLIE DAVIS (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and his Wisconsin Gloom-Chasers, augmented by the three Lovely Co-eds, offer some flashy entertainment for their overture. "How Deep is the Ocean" is played by the orchestra with a cornet solo by Davis, followed by the three young women singing "Nobody's Sweetheart Now," accompanied by the orchestra. Jimmy, violinist for the orchestra, played "Say It Isn't So." A peppy piece with the girls singing one chorus and the orchestra another was followed by "Shine on Harvest Moon," with Davis at the piano.

SAM JACK KAUFMAN (Brooklyn Fox) and his Joy Band entertained with an overture built up of oriental numbers. Comedy was injected by Sam and the boys in their use of what was supposed to be the oriental tongue. This drew good laughs. Kaufman in his own pleasing style introduced and led his orchestra in a special arrangement of "Chinatown," with a comedy vocal chorus sung by all. A beautifully rendered trumpet solo, with a softly played organ accompaniment, won good applause. A vocal rendition of "Poor Butterfly," by Charles Bennett, a new member of the band, who has a soft quality in his voice that is extremely appealing, earned a good reception. The Overture closed with a snappy offering of "China Boy," to one of the best receptions this reviewer has heard this organization get.

FABIEN SEVITZKY (Boston Metropolitan), some weeks ago hit upon the plan of serving classical music in classy style, thereby beating the socalled maestros of jazz at their own game. The result has been increasing interest in his programs, climaxed this week when he scores premiere honors with the presentation of his own version of "Aida," in which he is aided and abetted by a hundred maidens in classical—or shall we say classy—costumes amid settings done to order by Manager Harry Taylor.

JACK SPRIGG (Cincinnati Albee) selected a medley of oldtime "drinking" songs for his overture. "How Dry I Am" was played with hammers on a scale of bottles. During a blackout, the brass section gave a perfect imitation of a German band. As a finale, the entire orchestra rose, each raising a glass in accompaniment. Billie Leonard sang "Please" from the stage as her contribution to the overture, finally breaking out in well-directed dance steps.

JAY BROWER (San Francisco Warfield) and the Warfield Pep Band present a musical offering which includes both classical and popular selections. Thorstein Jensen, first violinist, offers the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and there is a splendid rendition of the Miserere from "Il Trovatore," with a trombone and trumpet duet, one of the artists being stationed in the boxes. The popular offering takes the form of a musical melange, with the musicians declaring a strike, but in the end they get back to serious work.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

In the face of slipping grosses at Loop houses generally, the little Castle on State street is exuding prosperity to the edge of the sidewalk. With "Goona Goona" as the attraction, combined with the showmanship that Dick Beck can produce when the occasion warrants, the Castle has just about broken all its attendance records. "Goona Goona" has been playing to S. R. O. inside and outside at the Castle for four (4) weeks. And that tells a story these days.

Johnny Mednikow took third prize in the Walthall-McPherson sales drive staged by National Screen Service. The winner was Charles Gregory of St. Louis, who was in town Sunday to attend a dinner given by Mr. McPherson. Those attending included Mednikow, Beverly Miller, Herbert Washburn and Henry Kohn.

RCA Building Transferred To General Electric in Deal

The fifty-story RCA Building, at 570 Lexington avenue, New York, has been transferred by the Bartholomew Building Corporation to the General Electric Realty Corporation, and the name is to be changed to General Electric Building. The seventy-story central building in Rockefeller Center will be called the RCA Building.

The transfer is part of an agreement whereby $17,938,733 of RCA's indebtedness to General Electric is to be satisfied in full with the present book value of the building, $4,745,000, and by the issuance of $4,255,000 in 10-year debentures of Radio Corporation to the two electric companies.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 146

Question No. 146 was: "(A) Is direct current really that in every sense of the term? (B) How many alternations occur per second in 60*-cycle current? In* 120*-cycle current? (C) Just what trouble would you expect to encounter if obliged to use* 25*-cycle current at the arc? (D) Why is low-cycle* (25*-cycle) current used? Is it served to theatres anywhere in this country or Canada?*

It would be impossilble to print the names of all those answering this question correctly. There are more than 800 of them. I will therefore confine myself to saying all those whose names were printed last week answered correctly. It seems a shame, but really there is not space to print 832 names; also, it would be a bit unfair to fail to note that those many who have made good from week to week for months (and in some cases for so long I've forgotten when they started) made good. Such men as Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, Van Vaulkenburg, G. E. Doe, J. Wentworth and many others, would not like to have even a one-week break in their splendid record.

I have selected the answer of G. E. Doe as covering Section A briefly and well. He says:

"That would depend upon just what is meant by direct current. What we term direct current is direct, so far as concerns its direction of movement. It is direct in every sense of the term if the current be taken from a battery. If from a dynamo, it is not for the reason that there are slight pulsations caused by voltage variations incident to commutation, and those variations, of course, cause a slight differential in current flow. However, if we view the term 'direct' as having to do only with direction of movement, then either battery or generator (dynamo) direct current is indeed direct."

(B) Lester Borst says:

"Sixty-cycle current has 120 alternations per second, during each one of which the voltage rises from zero to maximum, or sinks from maximum to zero. Current of 120 cycles will have 240 alternations per second, during each of which the same process takes place as with 60-cycle current, except that they occur in one-half the time. Alternation equals the cycle of the current multiplied by two."

(C) We will listen to Dale Danielson on this one. He says:

"The cycle changes would be so slow that there would be a visible flicker in the light. The time from zero to zero voltage would be one twenty-fifth of a second. Moreover, using a two-blade rotating shutter, the light beam is cut 48 times per second when projection speed is 90 feet of film per minute, and this is fairly close to the rapidity of alternations. A small variation in projection speed would effect synchronization, with periodic fading of the light. Will some one explain just why flicker is visible with 50 alternations per second, and practically invisible when the light beam is cut 48 times per second?"

I will, Brother Danielson. You have overlooked the fact that a low period comes only at each end of a cycle. The interruptions by blades of a two-wing shutter are therefore almost twice as rapid as the low points. With 25-cycle current there are 1,500 low points per minute, while there are 2,880 shutter blade interruptions at 90 feet per minute projection speed.

(D) G. E. Doe says:

"Low frequency current is, for various electrical engineering reasons, superior for power purposes, particularly when large motors are used. I am not myself sufficiently familiar with the subject to set forth all the various reasons, but I know it is so. I believe 25-cycle current is served in and around Buffalo, N. Y., and Hamilton, Ontario, but theatres transform it to d-c. by means of motor-generator sets."

Film Waxing The Aperture

John C. Rundell, manager of the Kaufman theatre in Montpelier, Ohio, writes: "Dear Mr. Richardson: Can you tell me how to keep a print from waxing up the film trap? Our projectionist has trouble every time we get a new print. He is obliged to stop the show several times to scrape the wax off the film trap. I would greatly appreciate any remedy you may be able to advise me of which will stop this trouble."

Presumably Friend Rundell is using first-run films, in which event it may be impossible to stop the trouble entirely. However, inasmuch as the films have been waxed, perhaps it is. The indication is that your projectors have entirely too much tension at the motion picture aperture (film trap), which of course sets up increased tendency for the tension shoes to pick up the soft emulsion. It also is very possible that your projectionist has been scraping the deposit off with something which has roughened the polished surfaces of the shoes, thus setting up added tendency to accumulate deposit.

If you have a Bluebook of Projection, or if your projectionist has one (and if he has none you are justly entitled to inquire why he has not), turn to General Instruction No. 9, Page 636, Volume 2, and there learn just how to test and set the tension to correct value. Also very carefully examine the face of the tension shoes to ascertain whether they have been roughened, remembering that by "roughening" I do not mean that there will be deep marks on them. They should present a perfectly smooth, polished surface. General Instruction No. 10 will advise concerning the removal of deposit, which should be done with a wet cloth—never by scraping with a steel or other hard instrument.

The instruction for tension setting is, briefly, as follows: Thread into the projector a film, the sprocket holes of which are in good condition. Run the projector at a speed about 10 revolutions in advance of the highest projection speed you use (now 90 feet per minute), and adjust the tension so that the film will just begin to overshoot (picture move up on the screen) at that speed. The tension is then as low as is safe. Just how you may adjust the tension depends upon the kind of projectors you have, but you must get the tension as nearly the same on both sides as possible.

New "Cold Light" Seen As Widely Valuable Source

A new radio tube, claimed to be an unlimited source of "cold light" with which television screens can be flooded, was demonstrated recently in New York by the Myers Electrical Research Laboratory. Elman B. Myers is the inventor. Engineers estimate the efficiency of the new lamp as 20 times that of the best incandescent lamp and from six to seven times as brilliant as the carbon arc lamp. The lamp is known as "cold light" because most of electrical energy goes to produce light and not heat, as is the case particularly with the incandescent lamp.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

MERGER OF PHYSICAL DISTRIBUTION CONSIDERED BY LARGE COMPANIES

Des Moines, Portland (Ore.) and New Haven Understood to Be Tentatively Discussed as Centers for Experiment

Large distributors are understood to be seriously considering the feasibility of a plan to merge physical distribution under a system of centralization in the key cities. Individualized sales effort would in no way be involved.

The plan in its present uncompleted form is intended basically as an experiment to be conducted in about three exchange centers to determine to what extent savings in overhead might be effected without impairing individual sales practices and film rentals.

Representatives of the large companies are understood to have met secretly in New York on Monday to discuss possibilities of reaching an accord on such an experiment, according to MOTION PICTURE DAILY, which in a copyrighted article said on Thursday that preliminary discussions veered toward an extension of the idea to most of the exchange centers in the nation, if the proposed test proves satisfactory.

Three Centers Considered

Des Moines in the Midwest, Portland, Ore., on the West Coast, and New Haven in the East are being tentatively considered as locations for the experiment. Distributors have frequently held that there was no need to maintain individual and complete forces in those limited territories for the physical handling of prints and that central shipping depots would serve the purpose. Numerous other exchange centers are rated on distribution charts in about the same category. These include Albany, Charlotte, Denver, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Salt Lake City, Seattle and Canadian points.

In practically all of these cities most of the distributors have individual setups for physical distribution and handling of prints. Indicating how substantial operating reduction might be effected is the fact that Columbia, Educational, Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO and Warners each operate individually in Des Moines. These companies and, in addition, United Artists and Universal have exchanges at New Haven. Virtually the same situation is to be found in Portland, Ore., and elsewhere. However, it is not considered likely that the plan would be practicable in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and a few other of the larger territories.

The distributors have not discussed machinery for working the proposed plan. At the moment they are solely concerned with its feasibility.

A merger of localized physical distribution into central units has been the subject of considerable discussion in the industry at various times over a long period. The economic situation has now focused distributor attention on the advisability of practical application of some such plan for reduction of overhead. A plan similar in some respects was broached about ten years ago when the national express agency of that time, now the Railway Express, authorized R. E. Cowie, its president, to contact leaders of the motion picture industry with a program for erecting exchange buildings as central headquarters for all companies in each key city. The Railway Express, however, does not figure in the present plan.

No New Admission Tax, Report Shows

No further admission tax legislation is contemplated by the administration, it is indicated by a study of the report submitted to Congress by Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills.

The only tax recommendation in the report are for the substitution of a general manufacturers' excise tax as a substitute for the special taxes carried in the revenue law of 1932, and retention for another year of the tax on gasoline, which would otherwise expire next June. Adoption of a general manufacturers' sales tax would have no effect upon the status of the admission tax that is in effect at the present time.

Distributors To Accept Appeals Board for Year

The proposals of Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, for correcting certain conditions in distribution are expected to become a factor of motion picture trade practice before the week-end. M. A. Lightman, of MPTOA, concluded negotiations with the distributors in New York last Friday and then returned to his headquarters at Memphis. The final draft of the agreement was left with sales executives for their signatures. These will be forthcoming, it is understood, on Thursday or Friday. The plan is supposed to become operative after January 1.

An optional form of uniform contract and local voluntary arbitration of disputes had previously been agreed to by Fox, Universal, Paramount, MGM, Educational-World Wide, RKO, for a period of three years. It is now up to distributors to accept a national appeals board.

Film Measures Unlikely in Congress

The appeals board will be accepted for one year for purposes of experimentation. Structural changes and revisions of its method of operation will then be made. The board will seek to adjust only important disagreements which cannot be settled by local arbitration.

Regardless of Allied's activities in connection with its program for introducing federal legislation, there is little likelihood of any film measures being introduced during the present short-term session of Congress.

Senator Reynolds (N. C.) blocked efforts last Friday to bring up the Brookhart bill.

Meanwhile, Allied and MPTOA are currently engaged in a verbal tilt. Each claims credit for bringing about adoption of the Kent proposals. Leaders of both associations blame the executives of the other for walking out on the so-called "mental merger." Long printed statements have been sent forth from headquarters of the two units to state affiliates extolling their respective activities on behalf of the plan.

Up to the time of his departure last Friday, Mr. Lightman had not altered his plans for resigning the MPTOA presidency shortly after January 1. If and when he does resign he will be succeeded by M. E. Comerford, first vice-president of the organization and a circuit operator for many years. Mr. Comerford would take over the MPTOA reins at least until the next annual convention.

Allied Theatres of New Jersey met in special session Tuesday to further legislative plans and to discuss activities of the Department of Justice which is investigating protection of circuits over buying position in the New Jersey territory.

REBUILDING FOREIGN FILM MARKET IN U. S.; 60 RELEASED IN 10 MONTHS

Product from Overseas Returning to Activity Halted by Sound; 20 Subjects British, 19 German and 8 French

New feature pictures of foreign origin are being exhibited in the United States at the rate of six monthly, principally British, German and French, with a scattering of Italian, Russian, Spanish and Yiddish. The market this year will reach its widest expansion point since pre-sound days.

In "boom" years before sound, the number of foreign features exhibited in the United States reached 130 annually, but with the coming of talking pictures the number dropped to a few dozens. Now, following the necessary period of adjustment, during which progress was made in settling sound patent difficulties abroad, and a definite standard for foreign language talkers was established here, foreign pictures again are being exhibited in this country. While this development is largely in the cities with their larger foreign audience, there is also a new interest on the part of foreign language students.

Principal audience sources for foreign language films, with very few exceptions, have not been developed beyond the "art" or "little" theatre movement and occasional showings in neighborhoods beyond the "art" or "little" theatre movement and occasional showings in neighborhood houses located in foreign districts of large municipalities, principally New York, Chicago and San Francisco. Repeatedly attempts have been made within the past two years to break open the market, but few have succeeded to any appreciable extent.

Of 60 foreign features released in the United States between January and October, 20 were British, and are not generally considered as foreign talkers; 19 were German; 8 were French; 6 Italian; 4 Russian; 2 Spanish and 1 Yiddish. In a few instances, English sub-captions are dubbed in. The group noted was selected by the review committee of the National Board of Review.

The symbols preceding the titles of the 60 current foreign releases in the compilation which follows indicate: f—suitable for family audience, 12 years up; m—suitable for mature audience, 18 years up; j—suitable for children under 12; (*) especially interesting, or well done. The order of arrangement is: title, stars, company, length; recommendations by the National Board.

JUNIOR REVIEWING GROUP FORMED TO PASS ON NEW PICTURE VALUES

Two Hundred Boys and Girls in Age Range from 12 to 20 Are Organized in Unit of National Board of Review

A junior review group, composed at present of 200 boys and girls whose ages range from 12 to 20, has been organized by the National Board of Review to obtain from this cross-section of youthful opinion a graded selection of current pictures based on their entertainment value. In this respect the junior organization will function in the same manner as the adult group.

The junior group was organized at a recent meeting held in the projection room of Fox Film Corporation and attended by sixty school children. Walter C. Kaiser, who presided over the meeting as temporary president of the group, has now been named president. Hilda Rosenblum is secretary.

In explaining the background of the present movement, Wilton C. Barrett, executive secretary of the National Board of Review, said that the idea of obtaining a youthful point of view in estimating the entertainment values of films originated with the Board's membership committee some two years ago. At that time a number of school children were invited to join the regular daily review groups of the National Board. The participation of these 60 junior members is still continuing in the adult organization, although there is now the additional junior review group whose membership is expected to exceed 500.

Schools Cooperate

Under the chairmanship of Dr. Frank Astor, who is field director of the National Child Welfare Association and one of the National Board's membership committee, the nucleus of the junior group was organized in a Saturday morning class which meets in the projection rooms of the producers and views whatever pictures are scheduled for projection. The schools in New York and New Jersey are cooperating, Mr. Barrett said, by sending in the names of students. In the junior group, 50 per cent come from high schools; 35 per cent from colleges and 15 per cent from elementary schools.

Membership probably will be further recruited from the metropolitan New York area. Mr. Barrett pointed out that a carefully selected list of junior members would have approximately the same viewpoint as any similarly organized group from another part of the country.

"We have already found that these boys and girls criticize the things they see in pictures from a fresh viewpoint and without any of the inhibitions so often present in older people," said Mr. Barrett. "And what is more, they are taking their work very seriously, giving intelligent answers to the question—basic to the work—namely, 'If you paid at the box office, would you have obtained your money's worth?' and they are contributing a surprisingly sound and accurate estimate of various picture classifications.

"In developing this work we plan to achieve as accurate a cross-section of intelligence and of types as possible. In that connection we will take care to select students ranging from honor roll to delinquents. We may even take some from institutions of correction."

Mr. Barrett said that while the junior group members were now filling out the questionnaire form used by the adults, it was probable that a separate set of questions would be worked out for their special use.

"As the work proceeds, we will select certain members of the main junior group to join the adult groups and take part in the regular review work along with the other young people who have been working with us for the past two years," he said.

The first survey of a general subject was made by the National Board of Review about a year ago. The subject was "gangster" pictures and the question of the supposed influence these films were having on children was a matter of public discussion at the time. It was decided to learn the answer to the question by having the children themselves pass on a series of four "racketeer" pictures. A questionnaire was prepared by a psychologist and after the 200 children had viewed the pictures it was learned that none of them considered that he or she had been harmed by them. Only a few of the reviewers said that they had acquired any new criminal knowledge. It was generally felt that "such conditions should be given full publicity as an evil to be eliminated."

About 80 per cent of the children answered negatively on the question, "Do you think there is any special significance in children liking to play games about gangsters and racketeers?" The remaining number qualified their opinion, for the most part, with the observation that the gangster had merely replaced the Indian as the "bad man" imitated by children at play.

Estimate Entertainment Value

Another experiment was conducted at the Heckscher Foundation in which a number of East Side children were shown a series of pictures of all types. The German picture, "Siegfried," considered one of the most artistic ever made, was chosen by these children as the one they liked the best.

As in the case of the adult groups of the National Board of Review, the entire function of the juniors is to estimate the entertainment value of the pictures seen. Censorship is opposed and there is no attempt to make any suggestions looking toward changes in the films.

Byram, "Times" Critic, Joins Paramount's New York Staff

John Byram, dramatic editor of the New York Times, has resigned to become associated with Paramount Productions, Inc. Effective December 26, Mr. Byram will work under Russell Holman, assistant to Emanuel Cohen, vice president in charge of production. He will locate at the home office, handling Paramount contact with the stage, including plays, writers and players.

10,000 Pupils Use Films as Texts in Teachers' Tests

Ten thousand high school pupils are using the motion picture as a textbook in an extensive nationwide experiment, designed to measure their progress in critical appreciation, under the direction of the National Council of Teachers of English. Supervising the program is William Lewin, of the Central High School, Newark, N. J., who is chairman of the steering committee of the Committee on Photoplay Appreciation, one of several committees of the National Council, which previously had announced its intention of bringing motion pictures to the classroom for mutual benefit to films and instruction.

This experimental activity, which commenced October 15, now includes more than 100 high schools in 25 states as far west as Utah. Beginning in February, it is expected that the Pacific coast also will be included. The experiment is to end March 15.

Two groups of high school students—5,000 in each—are seeing pictures selected by the steering committee. One group, the "control group," views the pictures without any advance instruction. A second, the experimental group, is given training in critical appreciation and engages in discussion and analysis after viewing each photoplay.

Next year both groups will be asked to record their preferences of the pictures they have seen up to March 15. They will then be given the same test to determine if the methods used in the case of the experimental students are such that they are superior to those who were permitted to see the pictures without any preliminary study or follow-up discussion. If the experimental students are found to be superior, Mr. Lewin said, it is probable that some permanent arrangement will be made to incorporate the viewing of motion pictures as a regular part of high school work in the field of literature and allied subjects, also to establish high standards of taste as a phase of training in the right use of leisure and to develop desirable ideals and attitudes.

A subcommittee suggested ten pictures for use in the experiment, the four pictures marked with an asterisk as more appropriate for older students: "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Tom Brown of Culver," "Congorilla," "Once in a Lifetime," "You Said a Mouthful," "With Williamson Beneath the Sea," *"The Vanishing Frontier," *"A Successful Calamity," *"Smilin' Through" and *"Six Hours to Live." However, if none of these is currently available in the neighborhood theatres it is permissible for teachers to select others that seem worthwhile.

Mr. Lewin reported that exhibitors were cooperating splendidly, with free admission to the students and their teachers.

DISTRIBUTORS RELEASE SPECIAL HOLIDAY FILMS

Two Dozen Pictures, Chiefly Short Features, Produced with Yuletide and New Year Observances in Mind, Available

Two dozen motion pictures, principally short features, produced especially for showing during the forthcoming Christmas-New Year holidays, have been made available by distributors. Nearly all are in festive moods with Yuletide atmosphere and appropriate Christmas or New Year music. Some are travelogues showing scenes of the Holy Land. The newsreels, too, will incorporate a sequence or two depicting the Christmas spirit and all of the principal trailer firms are releasing special holiday subjects with music.

While these subjects for the most part are suitable for mixed audiences, exhibitors are being advised by the sales departments to use them extensively during children's shows which are staged almost everywhere during the Christmas school vacation. In this connection exhibitors can work out with exchangemen a complete program especially adaptable to juvenile audiences. Release schedules of the larger and nearly all independent distributors indicate that a wealth of material will be available for the youngsters. This includes westerns, long and short comedies, song subjects, serials and outdoor themes. Many of the companies have arranged their releases during that time with children's shows in mind. World Wide is concentrating on "Drum Traps," a KBS feature which highlights the boy scout troop of Hollywood.

Subjects produced especially for Christmas-New Year's release include the following, and were suggested by distributors, all of which were requested to report:

Elliott Explains Kaplan Removal

"The kind of rule that has been exercised over Local 306 is gone forever," William C. Elliott, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and M. P. Operators, declared in a statement this week, in which he gave his reasons for the removal of Sam Kaplan as president of the New York projectionist group.

After citing the support accorded the IATSE by the American Federation of Labor and the New York State Federation of Labor, Mr. Elliott said, "it has been found necessary to take drastic steps to clean up conditions in Local 306 in our union. Complaints from members, the public press and a number of other criticisms brought about the long and painstaking investigation which ended with the executive council's removal of Mr. Kaplan and other officers. The litigation was costly. Even before this step was taken the local was involved in one controversy after another, with the result that huge sums of money that should have gone into the homes of the members to make them and their families happy were expended.

"This local has been torn and disrupted by quarrels and bickerings and stress of all kinds. It is time that this should come to an end. In this movement to rehabilitate Local 306 I am animated by no personal motive. My only purpose is to advance the welfare of our members," Mr. Elliott said.

In the meantime the trial of Mr. Kaplan and other former officers on indictments charging conspiracy and coercion has been adjourned to January 3, when it will be resumed in general sessions court, New York.

Paramount Cuts Payrolls $120,000

The following discussion of the current situation in Paramount Publix Corporation has been issued by Glenn Griswold, who has taken up public relations activities of the corporation:

"The extent to which one motion picture company has achieved economy of operation and adjusted itself to the necessities of the times is indicated by the fact that Paramount Publix Corporation has reduced its payrolls for departments other than the studios by approximately $120,000 a week in 16 months. This program has been undertaken and successfully carried out since John Hertz became chairman of the finance committee about a year ago.

"Giving effect to sound business concepts has been largely responsible for savings which will amount to a minimum of $6,000,000 a year on payrolls exclusive of the studios. Substantial savings have been effected also in the administrative payrolls of the studios, and in many instances the salaries of creative personnel have been reduced as contracts were renewed. It may well be that without any more drastic program than has been in effect heretofore, payroll reductions including those of the studio may bring the total of salary savings next year to $10,000,000 or more, as compared to the 1931 peak, final results depending not only on salary adjustments, but also on the number and average cost of pictures produced, and the number of theatres operated.

"Habits of extravagance have always characterized a new industry. It is within the recollection of most of us that this was true of the automobile industry and some can remember the fabulous history of railroading in its early days. It is little wonder then that an industry which grew so rapidly in the land of make-believe should be excessively extravagant. How deeply this habit had taken root in the motion picture industry is indicated in the fact that out of a payroll reduction of $186,857 a week effected by Paramount in 16 months, but $56,000 a week is accounted for by reductions in the pay of those who remained at their jobs. The balance, or $130,857 a week, was saved by the elimination of unproductive or unnecessary personnel, by a two weeks' vacation taken by employees without pay, by closing or disposing of unprofitable theatres, and by the resignation of highly paid executives.

"It has always been a cardinal policy with Paramount to keep within its organization an experienced and competent corps of junior executives. When well known executives resigned from the company during the last year, their places were taken in almost every instance by one of these younger executives who have been with the company for many years. The improvement of the product of the company and its accomplishments in overcoming the handicaps and penalties of deflationary times, indicates the competence of these men and justifies personnel policies of the past."

Iowa City Theatre Bombed; Screen, Equipment Damaged

The New Varsity theatre, Iowa City, Iowa, was bombed Monday just prior to the evening performance. The police are investigating, but so far have made no arrests, though five men have been held for questioning. The improvised bomb, inserted into a drain pipe at the rear of the house, demolished the screen and damaged part of the sound equipment. No one was injured.

The theatre was opened two months ago on the site of the former Garden theatre, destroyed in a $200,000 fire last spring.

Management Wins In Proxy Fight at Warner Meeting

The management of Warner Bros. Pictures was this week victorious in a proxy fight with a minority group at the annual stockholders' meeting at Wilmington, Del. Balloting for five new directors began late Wednesday afternoon and up to press time results had not been announced.

The counting of proxies Monday and Tuesday was interrupted continuously as the minority group, headed by Max Goldberg, of Salem, Mass., protested against admission of certain proxies. A quorum finally was established at 1 A. M. Wednesday and Charles Suter, a Philadelphia attorney, nominated the following Warner candidates for the directorate:

Samuel Morris, a Warner vice-president; Stanleigh Friedman, a New York attorney, and Morris Wolff, an official of the Stanley circuit, all present members of the board; also the following new nominees: John Laffey of Wilmington, former general attorney for Du Pont; William Coyne, Wilmington, a Du Pont vice-president, and Charles Guggenheim, of the New York law firm of Untermyer, Guggenheim and Marshall.

Hugh M. Morris, former United States district judge, and attorney for Warner Bros., as chairman of the meeting, overruled the minority objections of Mr. Goldberg, who then announced that his group would not offer an opposition slate. Five hundred stockholders were present when the meeting began Monday, headed by Harry M. Warner, Jack L. and Albert Warner.

Results were also to be announced on a vote on a resolution that Warner Bros. return the money allegedly derived from transactions between the corporation and Renraw Corporation. Mr. Goldberg introduced the resolution and immediately many stockholders objected to it being entered into the minutes. They called it libelous, but Judge Morris ruled it be recorded. Another resolution voted upon would place the Warner common stock on a $5 par basis.

Bailey and Pine Succeed Reeve at Paramount Plant

Tom Bailey and William Pine have been named to handle studio publicity and advertising-exploitation respectively for Paramount by Arthur Mayer, director of advertising and publicity, following the resignation recently of Arch Reeve, publicity director at the plant and with the company since 1918. It is understood Mr. Reeve will join Fox.

Chuck West, copy editor under Mr. Reeve, resigned to become assistant to George Arthur, head of Paramount's cutting department. Teet Carle was named to succeed Mr. West, and Belman Morin, Los Angeles columnist, joined the staff.

After being closed for the past year, the Photo-Color Studio at Irvington, N. Y., is due to reopen in another month. A laboratory staff of 16 has been assembled and the studio will operate on a capacity of 500,000 feet of color film a week, it is reported.

Open Quittner Suit Trial With Documentary Evidence

Trial of the suit instituted by Edward Quittner, exhibitor, of Middletown, N. Y., against Paramount Publix and others, began last week before Federal Judge Francis G. Caffey in New York. Taking of testimony began Monday and was confined to documentary evidence throughout the early part of the week. It was expected that sales executives would be called later. Other defendants, with Paramount, are the MPPDA, Adolph Zukor, Netco Theatre Corporation, Sidney R. Kent and Samuel Katz.

The plaintiffs, Mr. Quittner and the Middletown Combined Buildings Company, charge that the defendants' unfair competition caused losses to their theatre which then passed into the hands of a receiver. The plaintiffs charged the defendants with opening the Paramount theatre, near the Quittner theatre at Middletown, and withholding its own pictures, as well as those of Fox, Metro, Universal and United Artists, from the plaintiff. Counsel for the defense denied that there had been any discrimination.

Burkey Loses in Distributor Suit

Out of the courtroom only one hour, a jury in federal court in Kansas City last Friday returned a verdict for the defendant in the anti-trust action brought by Walter O. Burkey, former Kansas City exhibitor, against numerous major distributors. The verdict was admitted to be a complete surprise to the plaintiff and his counsel, who said a motion would be filed for a new trial. The verdict was simple: "We find for the defendant and against the plaintiff."

According to attorneys and observers of the industry in Kansas City, an important and far-reaching precedent would have been established had Mr. Burkey won his suit. The outlawed standard exhibition contract and other former contracts incorporating the compulsory arbitration clause were involved in the action. Federal Judge Reeves had charged the jury to decide first the question of the existence of a conspiracy, and the speedy verdict gave rise to the belief that the jury found no evidence of illegality in the practices involved.

General Electric Holders To Get Shares of RCA Stock

Stock of the Radio Corporation of America will be apportioned on February 20 among holders of General Electric stock at the rate of one RCA share for each six shares of General Electric held. The decision resulted from the recent consent decree which terminated the Government's anti-trust action against RCA, General Electric and Westinghouse.

The distribution will leave approximately 381,000 shares of RCA stock in the possession of General Electric out of the 5,188,755 now held. Heavy selling of RCA followed the announcement of the decision last week.

Move United Artists Exchange

The United Artists exchange in Philadelphia has moved to 1304 Vine street. Harry G. Bodkin is manager of the branch.

Comerford May Take Over Circuit With Sam Katz

M. E. Comerford will probably soon resume operation of his former theatre holdings throughout the coal mining sector of Pennsylvania and in midwestern New York. Sam Katz, it is reported, will probably be associated with him.

Negotiations which have been progressing slowly over a period of weeks between Paramount and Mr. Comerford, whereby Publix would return the properties as a part of its decentralization program, are now nearing crystallization. Accordingly, Frank Walker, the Comerford general manager, is preparing to resume duties in theatre operation.

Mr. Katz would become associated with Mr. Comerford in the Paramount deal, in lieu of certain stipulations in the settlement of Mr. Katz's contract with Paramount.

Mr. Walker said on Wednesday that there had been no deal yet, although he admitted that it had been discussed. Publix is understood to have purchased the circuit for $18,000,000, about one-third of which is supposed to have been actually paid.

Chatfield Company Goes Into Action

The Chatfield Theatres Company, organized last week by Milton Feld and D. J. Chatkin, former Publix executives, is now considering a number of proposals before it with respect to theatre properties. Mr. Chatkin said Tuesday that no definite steps had yet been taken, but that the company would not undertake to manage more theatres than he and Mr. Feld personally could supervise.

Boris Morros, head of the Publix productions department, has been placed in charge of the New York and Brooklyn Paramount theatres, the Rialto and the Criterion, all formerly in the division managed by Mr. Feld, and has been made home office contact man on talent and production for Publix. The company does not regard this appointment as being a succession to Mr. Feld's work and has announced that because the duties of Messrs. Feld and Chatkin have been eliminated because of decentralization, no successor to either will be named.

RKO Board Discusses Operating Economies

The board of directors of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation met in quarterly session Wednesday in New York. Operating economies and policies are understood to have been discussed. Robert F. Sisk, in charge of press relations, said that "the meeting was routine" and that there would be no details issued.

Henry Randell, Paramount, continues as first vice president; Harry Hummell, Warner, is second vice president; Jack Bowen, MGM, treasurer; Harry Decker, Warner, secretary; Edward Schnitzer, Educational, sergeant-at-arms.

MUSIC AS A SPIRITUAL SYMBOL

Significant Epoch Is Marked in Progress of Music-Picture Art in De Mille's 'The Sign of the Cross'

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

With a musical score that is entirely original, accredited to Rudolph Kopp and woven into the dramatic texture of the production under the supervision of Nat Finston, director of Paramount's department of music, Cecil De Mille's "The Sign of the Cross" marks a significant epoch in the progress of music-picture art. This was to be expected when a distinguished protagonist of the spectacular drama marshaled his forces in an audible film transcription of Rome of the days of Nero.

Mr. De Mille has achieved a distinctive position as essentially the architect of massive histrionic structures of the inarticulate screen. In his first spectacle made for the audible screen, it is apparent that he posesses the faculty of evaluating the importance of sound and significance of silence. It is also manifest that he realized the importance of enlisting the cooperation of unusually competent musically creative and productive minds in the building of a dramatic structure that gains power through the cumulative processes of recurring motifs and amplification of theme. Mr. Kopp's music written for the production reveals a fine feeling and true concept of the pictorial-dramatic requirements in tonal reinforcement and interpretation. To Mr. Finston must be accorded only praise for a real achievement in photodrama-musical production and a scoring that is distinguished and musicianly.

A panorama of pagan pageantry, when Nero languished in his Golden House on the Esquiline, strummed his musical instruments and lilted as only a Roman roue-dilettante could lilt—while Rome burned—is a provocative subject for musical treatment. Intimate glimpses into the private life of Poppaea, revealing the most dissolute wanton of Ancient Rome laving her lovely body to sensuous music in a luxurious bath of 500 gallons of wild-asses' milk strewn with rose petals, is a privilege to the proletariat.

As a background for a drama of the spirit and of the flesh, of love and lust, of martyrs and of courtesans, it is reasonable to assume that nothing in the curriculum of "good theatre" would be omitted when "The Screen's First Showman" took a hand; and that term "good theatre" covers a lot of screen territory, including a real understanding of the music and sound possible to the audible screen. To accomplish this, more than a score of original compositions including pre-Gregorian chants, pagan themes, love songs, fanfares, bacchanalian music—even "Roman jazz"—are incorporated in the score.

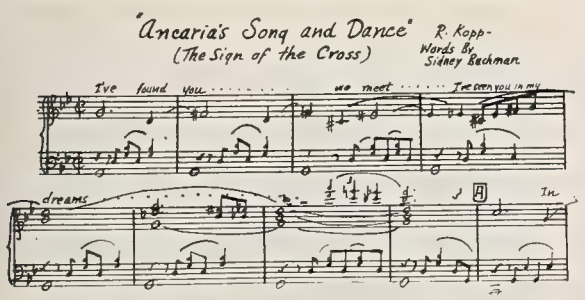
A review of the music and sound of "The Sign of the Cross" evinces that Mr. De Mille and his cohorts had a keen perception of these values, revealing an innate feeling for the apt musical context and its inherent power to enhance, to motivate and to sublimate the dramatic situation and action, and to add tonal color and reinforce visual spectacle.

From the introductory maestoso which segues into the dramatic fire music of the opening scenes of Rome burning, while the imperial voluptuary-poetaster twangs on his pedicula and lifts up his voice in sadistic cadance, to the very last scene—the apotheosis of Marcus and Mercia as they ascend the steps that lead to the arena and to martyrdom—the music plays its integral part.

Following the furious allegro con fuoco of the fire, the music is subordinated throughout the dialogue and action of the first part of the picture. Here the underscoring is subtle and subdued—haunting pagan harmonies in which a choir of woodwinds predominates, serving as a tonal background, as if old Pan himself were piping on the Palatine. The effect is rather to create a mood than point the action, although at times the use of the leit motif of the music-drama is in evidence. Such, for instance, is the theme which symbolizes the fateful sign of the cross in the sand. The underscoring throughout shows a fine restraint, never obtruding, never drowning out the import of the spoken word or dramatic situation, but at the same time giving point to it musically.

It is in the scene of the secret meeting of the Christians near the Cestian Bridge that the music emerges from the background and assumes its direct, positive function as a component of the drama.

The sound of many voices singing softly en masse in a chorus of naïve and archaic harmonies is heard as from a distance. The Christians have assembled to do homage to their God. Tigellinus, ambitious and ruthless rival of Marcus for Nero's favor, has learned of the meeting, assembles his guard and rides forth into the night to surprise and apprehend the Christian "dogs." Marcus, too, has been apprised of the meeting and of Tigellinus' expedition, and in his chariot at the head of his company races through the streets of Rome, determined to save Mercia. Cut-ins of this action with scenes of the Christians and strains of the chorale of the Hymn of Adoration arising as a benison from the old ruins near the Cestian Bridge, produce a sinister prelude to the tragedy that is to follow. In later sequences this hymn occurs in a powerfully dramatic contrast, in which the music is the dominant element.

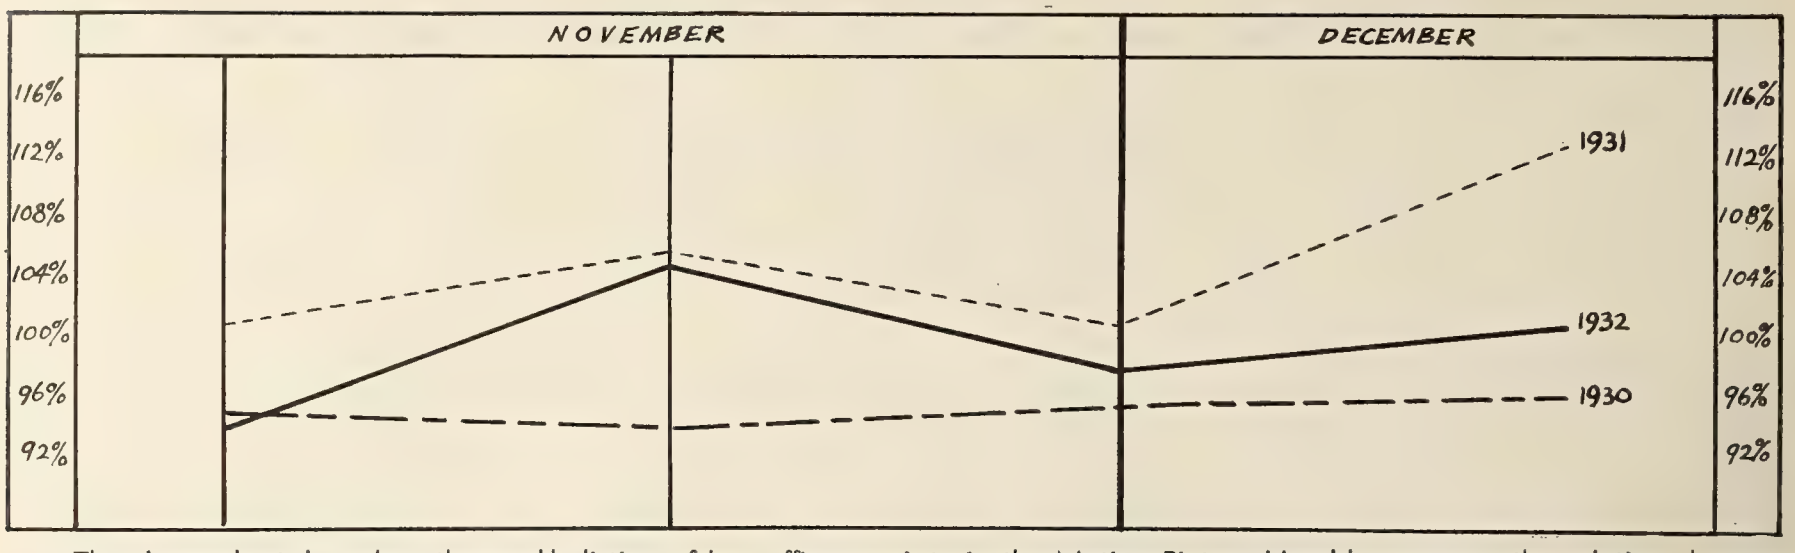


The scene is the house of Marcus Superbus. Mercia has been brought there after her rescue by Marcus from the secret meeting. It is a night of Bacchanalian revelry, made hideous with drunken ribaldry and song. Then, through the din of this Saturnalia there comes the sound of a hymn—the Christian prisoners in their dungeons, singing. Mercia hears it, and her soul is uplifted. Marcus hears it . . . and it brings remorse. The others hear it—and try to drown it out with their revelry. Ancaria, a notorious Roman wanton, discovers Mercia in an adjoining room. The courtesan taunts the Christian girl . . . then begins a sensual dance, with singing as she dances. The Christian hymn rises in full-throated cadence—simple, chaste, firm—a contrapuntal affirmation of a spiritual urge; a tonal antithesis to Pagan sensuality; a musical symbol of the triumph of their Faith.

Again, in the final scene, when the fanfare of trumpets in the arena announces the climax of the spectacle—the feeding of the Christians to the Nubian lions—this musical-spiritual contrast is in evidence.

The blood-lust cry of the mob is heard in the arena, mingled with the snarl and roar of the beasts. Comes a fateful knocking at the gate leading into the dungeon. The gates swing open, and slowly the band of Christians file up the steps to the arena—singing as they go—the Hymn of Adoration—musical symbol of a spiritual victory.

More spectacular, though not more important, is the tonal treatment of the mass scenes of the arena; the clash of combatants, the mob cry and the cry of beasts, with the ritual of music that accompanies each rout and each victory—or death—trumpeted above the cacophonous din.



Technically, the sound is very well done. Dramatically, there are some touches that register with gripping power. That fateful knocking at the gate summoning the Christians to their fate, is fraught with tragic meaning. A poignantly dramatic note is the innocent laughter of a little child in the dungeon scene just before the Christians enter the arena.

A sensuous song by Ancaria, the Roman wanton, at the bacchanalian revelry in the house of Marcus Superbus as she dances before Mercia. The music of the Christian hymn, heard in contrapuntal protest to this music of the pagan revelry, gives a powerful dramatic significance to the scene.

One of several hymns, composed in the Gregorian mode by Rudolph Kopp and symbolizing victory.

The above chart, based on the weekly listing of box office receipts in the Motion Picture Herald, compares the relative changes in weekly grosses over a four-week period during the past three years. The weeks shown are the last three weeks in November and the first week in December for each year. For the 100 per cent figure for each year is taken the gross for the first week in November of each year. PRESS, PUBLIC SUPPORT THEATRES IN TAX FIGHT

Proposed Tax in Philadelphia Arouses Theatres and Finds Papers Unanimous in Aiding Protest; Goldman Organizer

[Picture in Pictorial Section]

In a practically unprecedented drive characterized particularly by complete unanimity, the public and the press of Philadelphia have rallied to the support of the motion picture theatre owners of the city in their desperate fight to forestall a proposed tax of 5 per cent on all amusement admission tickets in the city, which the city council has under consideration.

Although the measure seemed early this week to be doomed to defeat, the fight was not dropped. Under the leadership of William Goldman, zone manager for the Stanley-Warner theatres in the Philadelphia district, a campaign aimed directly at the measure was planned weeks in advance. He enlisted the support of the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware.

The city council, faced with the need of somehow obtaining $5,000,000 in revenue, prepared the proposed ordinance. The theatres of the city, both circuit and independent, rallied to the protest. Estimates indicated that from 30 to 50 per cent of the smaller houses would be forced to close if the tax were placed upon the statute books, while the circuits were extremely hard pressed. Stanley-Warner, with the closing of the Mastbaum, and the necessity of absorbing its weekly overhead, also was facing a critical situation.

The initial and most significant effort in the campaign was launched by the theatres and aimed directly at their patrons, to whom appeals were directed. Trailers were used extensively on the screens, but still more effective was the use of the postcard protest. One hundred and twenty-five theatres joined this phase of the fight to arouse public sentiment.

Postcards were to be found in the lobbies of all these theatres, with equipment necessary for filling in the signature and address of the signer. The attention of all patrons was directed to the cards, which were forwarded to the councilman representing the appropriate district, in accordance with the address. Indicating the unusual effectiveness of the card campaign, up to a late day last week some 250,000 cards had poured in upon the city council, urging the measure be killed.

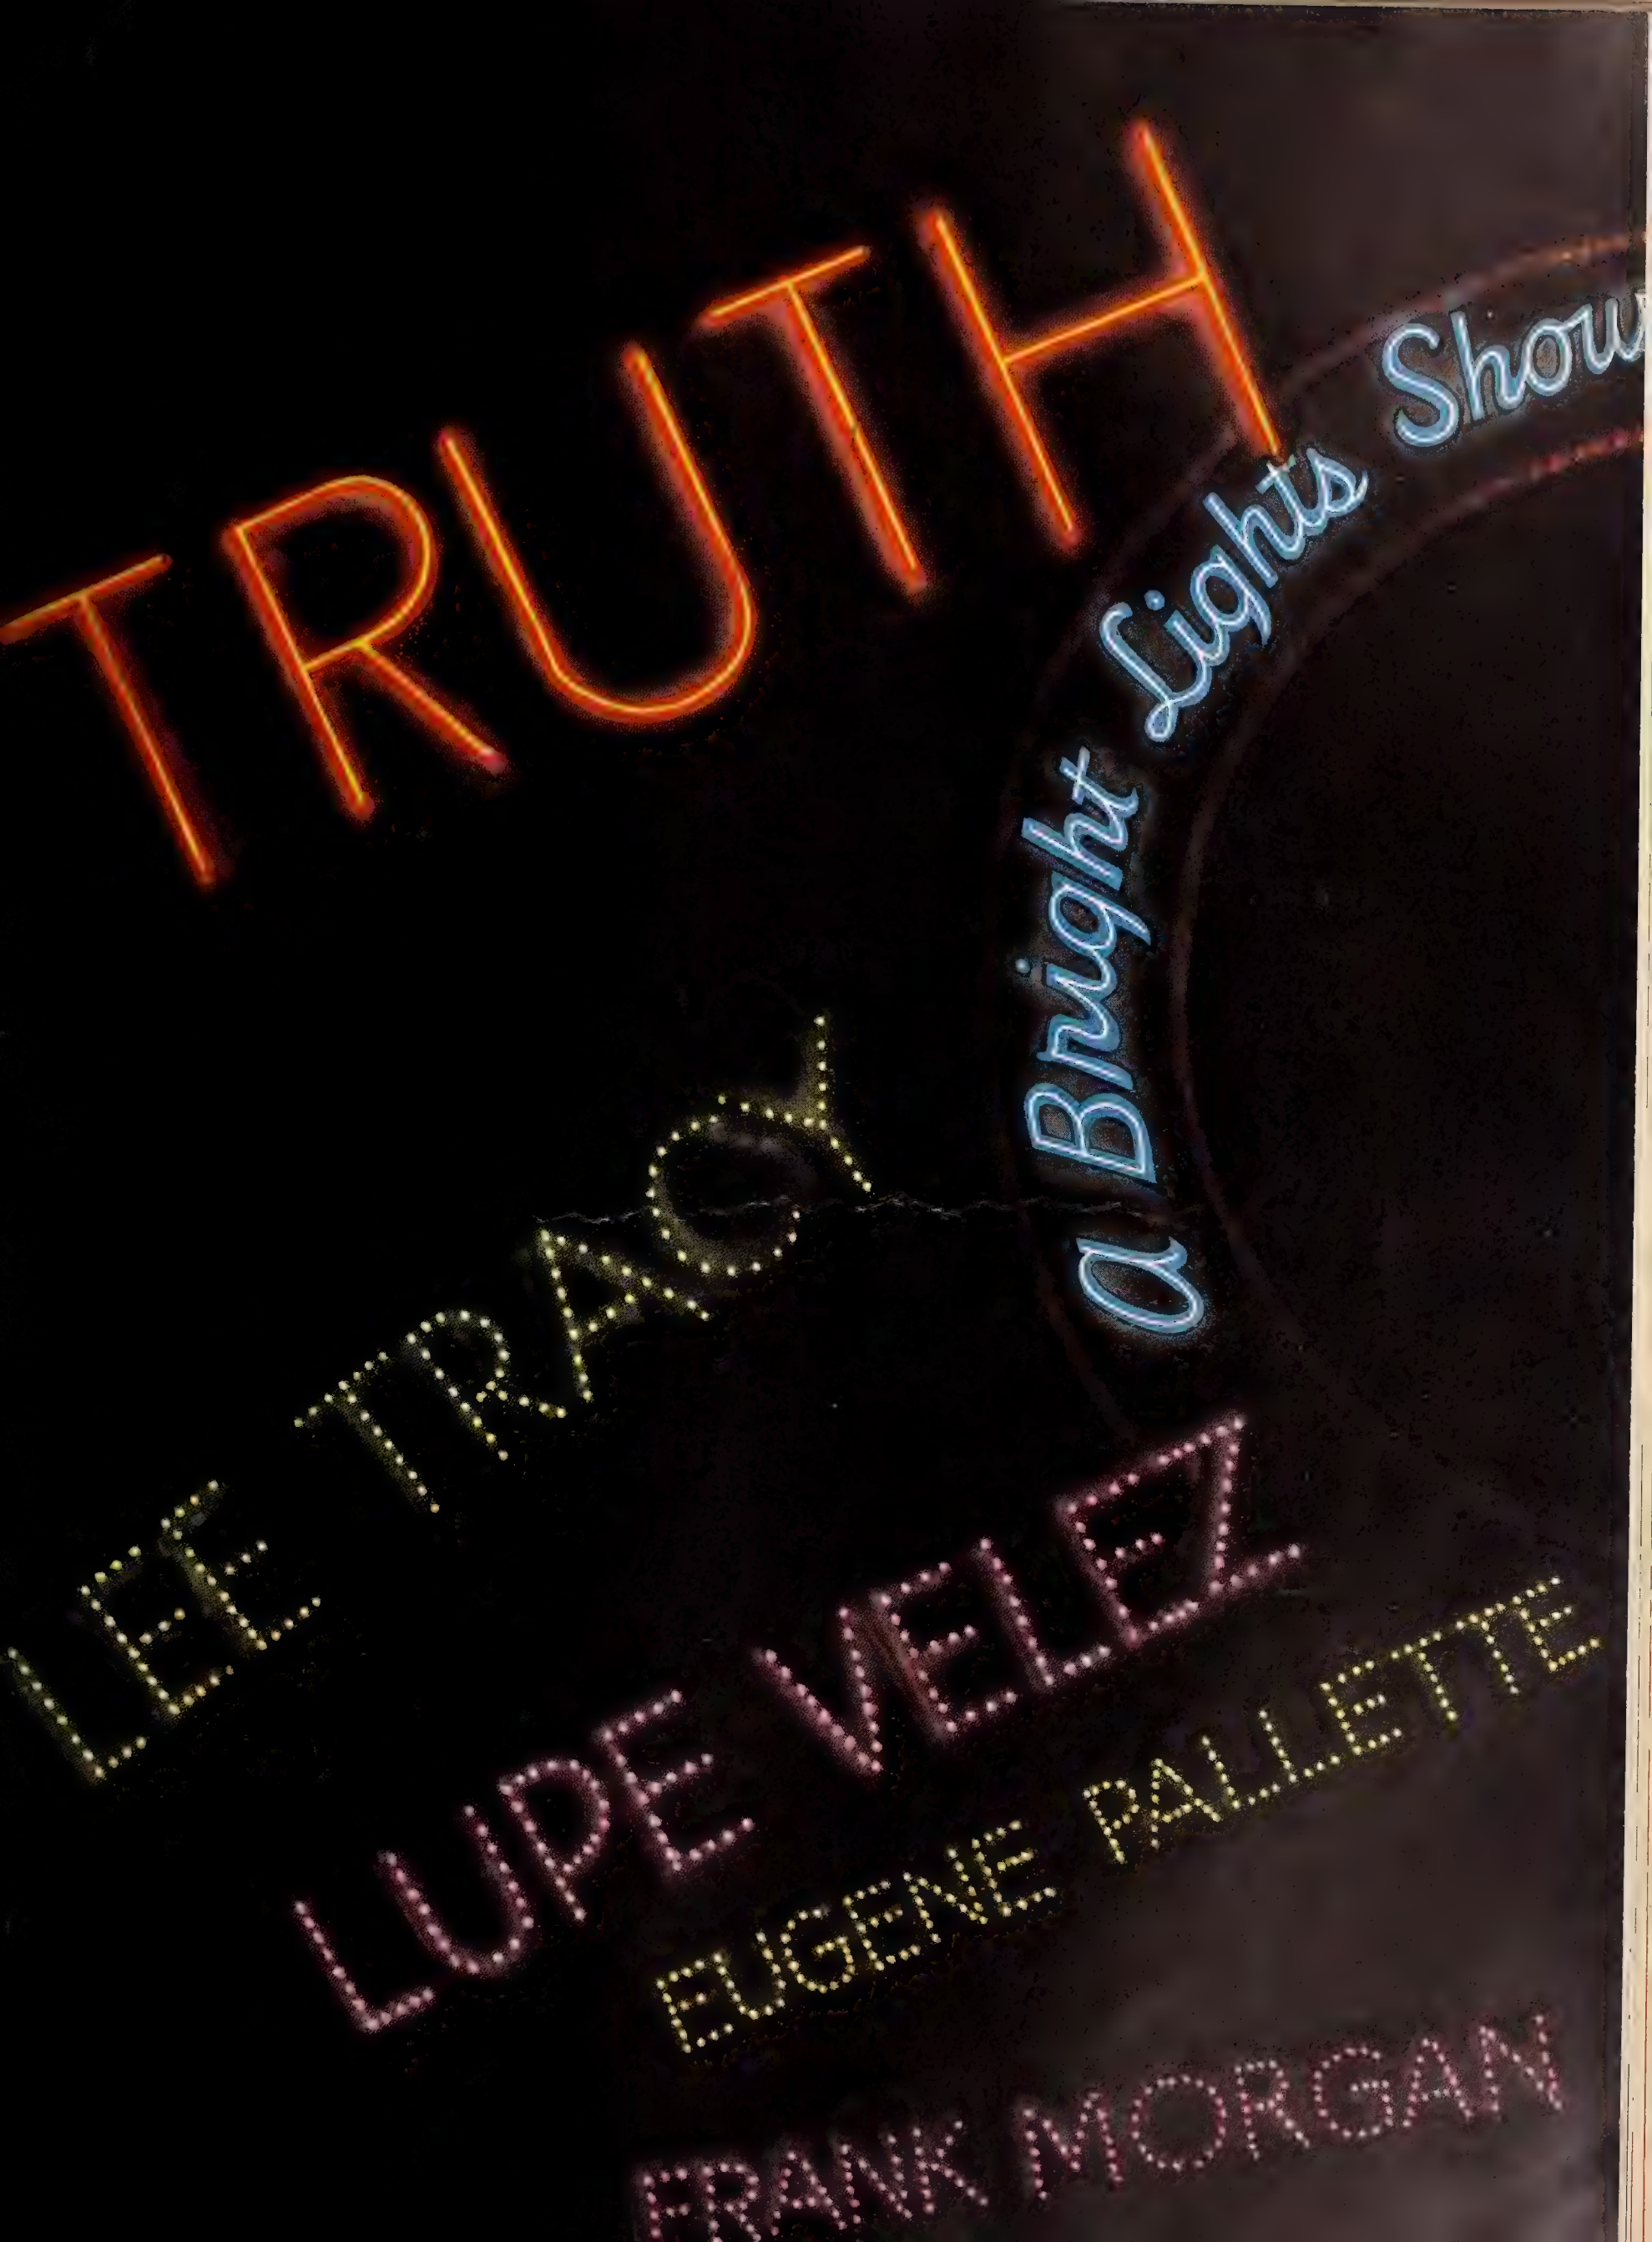
The cards read as follows. A banner line across the top said: "Entertainment should cost no more!" while beneath was printed: "The motion picture industry stands out as the most overburdened of all taxed businesses. The city council has before it a new bill adding five per cent to the cost of each theatre admission ticket. The bill imposes a new tax on ME, and one I do not feel I can afford. This bill is extremely discriminatory and unjust. I am a resident and voter in your district, and I urge you to aid in the defeat of this unpopular measure." Space is allowed for the name and address of the signer of the postcard.

WILLIAM GOLDMAN

The fact that the passage of such a measure in Philadelphia might be a strong impetus to other communities, many of which are financially hard pressed, to enact similar legislation, has given added significance to the Philadelphia situation.

The newspapers of the city unanimously swung behind and in support of the battle lines drawn up by the theatres, which had asked no assistance from the legitimate theatres or the sporting fraternity which would likewise be affected by the passage of the tax.

Daily stories of some length, quoting Mr. Goldman and citing the reasons for the industry's strenuous objection, appeared in the Philadelphia Record, Philadelphia Inquirer, Public Ledger and Philadelphia Daily News. Editorially the Evening Bulletin, the Ledger and the Inquirer came to the support of the theatres. Not one supported the measure; every one registered its vigorous protest against it.



Edouarde, Pioneer Sound Scorer, Dies

Carl Edouarde, who was among the first to compose a musical score for a motion picture, and a pioneer in the synchronization of music with the cartoon film, died at his home in Locust, N. J., last week, never having fully recovered from an operation performed several months ago. He was 57.

Mr. Edouarde went to the Regent theatre in New York in 1912 at the request of S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, then director of the house. It was partly as a result of the success there of the scoring of music to motion pictures that both were invited to join the staff of the Strand theatre, where Mr. Edouarde conducted a symphony orchestra of 13 pieces, largest of its time. In 1927 he left the Strand to engage in sound production, and in 1929 synchronized one of the "Aesop's Fables" cartoons. While at work on that series, he was injured in the Pathe Studio fire in New York, being permanently disabled and unable to continue stage appearances.

SALOON'S RETURN A MENACE: LAEMMLE

The return of the saloon to anything like the popularity it once enjoyed in this country would have a well-nigh disastrous effect upon the motion picture business, in the opinion of the veteran Carl Laemmle, Universal president, in a recent interview. "A large part of the money which will go to the saloons for beer, and beer taxation," said Mr. Laemmle, "will come out of the movie business."

As though he were addressing the industry at large, the producer continued vigorously, "You and I have got to fight the return of the saloon as we would a pestilence. The movie business never took such a spurt as it did when saloons were closed when prohibition was first enacted as a law and before it got to be an old story and became a joke. The saloon will not create one single new dollar of money. It will simply mean that the dollar which has been spent on the movies and on semi-luxuries and even on necessities will be, in part, spent somewhere else. That part of it will be lost to you and me."

Continuing with equal emphasis, Mr. Laemmle said, "Whatever good this does to the country at large, it will do us bitter harm if this beer is sold in saloons. The competition of the saloon would be a calamity." He advocates extensive use of the screen for propaganda to prevent the return of the saloon, and urges further that the case be placed as firmly as possible before Congressmen.

Cullman Succeeds Kosch As Roxy Theatre Receiver

Howard S. Cullman was named receiver of Roxy Theatres Corporation Monday by Federal Judge Caffey, following the joint request of a committee of stockholders and bondholders. The term of Harry C. Kosch, who has been receiver, expired December 15.

Mr. Cullman, who now becomes operator of the Seventh Avenue Roxy, is a commissioner of the Port of New York Authority, a director of the Bank of Manhattan Trust Company and of the County Trust Company, treasurer of the Democratic State Committee during the last campaign. He is a member of the tobacco firm of Cullman Brothers.

The decision with respect to the theatre's use of the name Roxy has not yet been made, but is expected daily from Judge Caffey. Spyros Skouras, who operates Fox theatres, will not supervise the Roxy.

Radio City Gets Last Parcel

William Fox has sold to Rockefeller Center, Inc., six lots adjacent to the RKO Roxy theatre in Radio City. The deal concludes the acquisition of necessary property to complete the midtown New York amusement project. It is understood an office building will eventually be constructed on the property.

BLOCK BOOKING CASE ENDS AFTER 11 YEARS

Overruling of Appeal in Paramount-Famous-Lasky Litigation Finally Halts Commission Attempts to Enforce Order

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

No further effort is to be made by the Federal Trade Commission to enforce its block booking order against Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation, it is announced in the commission's annual report, just made public.

Nearly 11 years after the filing of its first complaint against the block booking practice of the industry, it is revealed, the solicitor-general overruled the commission's decision to appeal to the United States supreme court for a review of the opinion of the second circuit court of appeals, dismissing the commission's suit for enforcement of its cease and desist order entered July 9, 1927.

The original complaint in this case was issued by the commission in August, 1921. Two years later an amended complaint was issued. These complaints covered many subjects besides block booking, but during the course of hearings during the ensuing several years, these charges fell by the wayside one by one. When the commission finally issued its order, block booking and the acquisition of theatres for the purpose of intimidating or coercing exhibitors were the only major charges left.

Probably in no litigation involving trade practices has there been as voluminous a record as was piled up in the block booking case. The commission's report says there were 17,000 pages of testimony and 15,000 pages of exhibits. Several thousand pages of testimony resulted from the arbitrary action of an examiner during hearings, when he refused to permit the defendants to discuss certain matters, only to bring upon the commission the rebuke of the courts when the case was first tried.

In dismissing the commission's petition for enforcement of its order, the court last April held that free competition in the marketing of pictures exists among producers and distributors and that the defendant had no monopoly and, in fact, lacked the ability to achieve a monopoly.

Following the court decision, the commission voted to appeal to the United States supreme court, but was overruled by the solicitor general.

With the Federal Trade Commission abandoning its attack, the last hope of those opposed to block booking lies with Congress, where there is pending a bill introduced by Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart of Iowa, whose term expires March 4.

That bill, according to its author, is designed "to prevent the obstruction of and burdens upon interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion picture films, and to prevent restraint upon free competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of copyrighted motion picture films" by prohibiting compulsory block booking, making unlawful unreasonable and discriminatory protection in favor of certain theatres over others, compelling the providing of accurate synopses of all pictures offered to theatre operators before they have been released and reviewed, and amending the Clayton act to make it apply to license agreements and leases as well as sales in interstate commerce.

This measure, on the calendar of the Senate, was reached in the regular order December 8, but consideration was blocked by Senator Reynolds of North Carolina, who desires to have it recommitted to the committee and asked that consideration be deferred until he had taken the matter up with Senator Brookhart.

If the bill is recommitted, no further action is likely this session. Even if not recommitted, it is doubtful whether the Senate could be prevailed upon to pass it, but should it do so, it would not be likely to come up for consideration in the House.

Plan 'Road' Units For Stage to Open 100 Film Theatres

A national theatrical "road" revival announced by Stage Shows, Inc., organized by Harry Arthur and backed by Fanchon & Marco and financial interests, is the subject of conferences now being held in New York. If carried out, the proposal will reopen 100 dark motion picture houses throughout the country for 52 weeks a year, playing traveling popular-priced legitimate stage shows.

Decision will be made, possibly the end of this week, following the conferences of M. H. Howe, general manager, and J. L. Partington, vice-president of Fanchon & Marco, and Frank Gillmore, president of Actors' Equity; William Elliott, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators, and Joseph Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

Estimate was made that the promised "road" revival would give employment to 2,000 idle musicians and stage mechanics and approximately 3,000 players. The plan is to offer the theatrical attractions on a selective basis to the various theatres on ths circuit. Each show will remain in a theatre for periods varying from one day to one week, depending on the size of the city played. A dollar "top" is contemplated for night performances. Most of the shows will be Broadway successes.

Annual Theatre Survey Is Nearing Completion

Secretaries of Film Boards of Trade in the field are completing compilation of the annual survey of motion picture theatres throughout the country. Data necessary to sales departments of distributors is included in the list, which will be issued by the Hays organization in January.

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR NOVEMBER

• With the exception of the top-ranking production, all pictures whose November grosses at the key theatres were high enough to list them as the "champions" of the month, share their positions. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Red Dust," a Clark Gable starring picture, is the exception. This production outranks the same company's "Prosperity," in which Marie Dressler and Polly Moran again are teamed. The second position goes to "Prosperity," along with Warner Brothers' "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang." The motion picture's own satire on itself, Universal's "Once in a Lifetime," is paired with RKO Radio's "The Conquerors," in third ranking, while the laurels of fourth place are divided between Columbia's "Washington Merry-Go-Round," Fox's "Too Busy to Work," and Paramount's "Trouble in Paradise."

Seek Funds from Equipment Men in Score Charge Fight

Solicitation of funds to help finance the program of the American Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre was undertaken last Saturday at a closed meeting of equipment manufacturers at the Hotel Astor, New York. Representatives of 25 manufacturers attended the session, which was called by Robert Robins, executive secretary and self-styled "dictator" of the association. Names of the manufacturers and their representatives were not divulged.

Mr. Robins, who refused to comment on the meeting and the matters discussed, is an officer of Duovac Radio Tube Company and was previously identified with the Radio Protective Association, organized several years ago by independent radio manufacturers. In 1930 that group sponsored the Davis bill attacking the so-called "radio trust." That bill did not pass the Senate.

At the meeting of equipment manufacturers Saturday, Mr. Robins said that a bill of complaint against the leading electrics had been drawn by attorneys for the Society and was ready for presentation to the federal court at Wilmington. He explained that the Society proposes to eliminate score charges, or at least greatly reduce them, and to remove restrictions which he said now prevent the exhibitor from buying sound equipment parts wherever he pleases.

Will Not Distribute Machines

Counsel for the organization said that it will not distribute equipment, but it was added that at a later date a central distributing agency for independent manufacturers might be established.

Mr. Robins said the Society had obtained promises of support from 15 manufacturers. In asking for contributions he had suggested the sum of $100 from each to cover activities for the next three months. It was not learned whether any cash was obtained at the meeting or whether the promises took the form of definite pledges. He said the money was to be used for necessary office expenses, none of it for salaries or "professional leaders." He called himself a manufacturer, as a stockholder of the Duovac company, and said he was donating his services. The terms under which counsel is operating were not disclosed.

Mr. Robins said the membership includes more than 100 owners who are supposed to represent between 500 and 600 theatres, scattered throughout the country, but chiefly in the New York zone. He declared previously that the society was organized with the approval of the New York State Board of Regents as a non profit-making group and named the founders, besides himself, as Agnes McNamara, John Taylor Breen, Leland P. Stillknecht, and William Yost, a New York exhibitor. Membership is limited to independents.

He declared the procedure of the society will be in the main to assist attorneys of member exhibitors by giving them data to fight "contract persecution," and added it is expected that 10 regional attorneys will be available to aid members. He said the society purposes to attempt to conciliate labor and that it advocates an open patent pool for manufacturers, producers and exhibitors.

The society has an organization fee of $5 a year per theatre. Al Harstn, a New York exhibitor, is chairman of the membership committee. Ralph Vatner and Murray Harstn, both New York attorneys, are general counsel and associate counsel, respectively. There are no officers other than the executive secretary.

A mass meeting of independent exhibitors, scheduled for December 16, at the Hotel Astor, has been postponed.

RCA Announces Outright Sales Of Photophones

Outright sale of Photophone sound reproducers and elimination of compulsory service, except on time-payment purchases, were announced on Monday by E. O. Heyl, general manager of the theatre sound division of RCA Victor.

The policy principally concerns the new "high fidelity" type of wide range reproducer, although old Photophones may be turned in and an allowance applied to a new equipment. Title passes to the exhibitor immediately in cash deals, or at the end of one, two or three years in cases where one of the three deferred payment plans is employed. Service is compulsory for half of the time-payment period.

Re-claimed equipments will be available on the same basis as "high fidelity." Trade-in values have not been determined.

Exhibitors who have not completed paying for present devices, which are not sold outright, may re-write their contract on the new basis if they purchase a reproducer of the new type. Prices of "high fidelity" equipments are $5,500; $4,100; $2,750 and $1,650. Service charges, providing for one or two calls monthly on the deferred purchases, are $65 per month for the two higher priced devices, and $32.50 and $25.00, respectively, for the two smaller sizes.

The new policy was explained by RCA Victor in the following announcement:

"Instead of licensing for a ten-year period—the practice heretofore maintained by the leading manufacturers of sound reproducing equipment—outright sale, elimination of contract" (compulsory) "service as soon as apparatus is fully paid for and further reduction of contract service in cases of deferred payments, has been decided upon by RCA Victor Company.

Service to Be Optional

"It is the company's conviction that this new policy will be highly acceptable to all exhibitors. Under its provisions, once the terms of the contract are met, whether they provide for cash or deferred payments, the equipment belongs to its purchaser. Service will be optional with him. Our experience leads us to believe, at our very reasonable rates, he will want regular service, but he does not have to take it. In this connection, to protect and supervise our property, we make one necessary reservation, namely, under the deferred payment plan. When deferred payments cover a one-year period, six months service is required. Under the two year plan, one year service, and under the three year plan, eighteen months service. We specify periodical scheduled calls, averaging from one to two calls per month, dependent upon the type of equipment. Of course, we always stand ready to render emergency service at rates currently maintained by our installation and service department which has stations in various parts of the country."

Denbow Named Head of Publix Theatre Circuit

The finance committee of Paramount-Publix, presided over by John Hertz, its chairman, at a meeting on Monday appointed Sam Dembow, Jr., head of the Publix theatre department. Tantamount to selection as successor to Sam Katz, recently resigned, Mr. Dembow, however, was not accorded the title of president of Publix, Mr. Katz's title. Mr. Dembow will have as his responsibility the operation of Publix theatres.

He has been acting head of the theatre department since the resignation of Mr. Katz, and has been a vice-president of Publix for several years. It was under his direction that the major portion of the current decentralization policy as applied to theatres, was placed in operation.

Mr. Dembow was at one time sales manager for Fox, and entered theatre operation as general manager of the Rothschild circuit in San Francisco. He joined Publix in 1925 as head of buying and booking.

In line with the decentralization policy, Publix this week turned back to Mike Shea and Vincent McFaul 14 houses in upper New York state which the company acquired several years ago. The theatres are located in Buffalo, North Tonawanda and Niagara Falls.

Another deal recently involved the exercising of an option by which Walter Reade will take over management of his former circuit of 35 theatres in Northern New Jersey on June 1, 1933.

The name of Paramount Distributing Corporation was changed this week to Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation.

Community Chooses Own Picture Fare, Declares Milliken

The selection by the community of its own motion picture fare is now a widely spread practice in the United States, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, told a joint meeting of the Federated Women's Clubs, the Parent-Teacher Association, the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Federated Churchwomen in Kansas City on Monday.

"As a natural result of increased patronage for the highest type pictures," said Mr. Milliken, "the industry has been enabled steadily to increase the percentage of films which have a definite social value." Preview committees operating in Hollywood have been a strong factor in this development, the executive indicated.

On the previous day, Mr. Milliken, in an address at the Community Church, Kansas City, at the invitation of the pastor, Dr. Burris Jenkins, who has used films in connection with his work, stressed the responsibility of the church in exercising guidance in the field of entertainment taste.

Points to Trend

JOHN E. OTTERSON

Otterson Cites Need for Plots

The need of the motion picture industry for new and better story material is described by John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, Inc., in his contribution to a symposium titled "Modern Communication," published currently by Houghton Mifflin.

"One of the problems now before the industry," says Mr. Otterson, "is to stimulate the creation of story material to satisfy the constantly increasing and more exacting public demand. Stories that could not be told silently can be told audibly, and when one knows that the motion picture industry makes use of 600 full-length stories a year, and to obtain this number it considers from 40,000 to 50,000 stories, one can appreciate how important it is to bring about a broadening of the field from which these stories may be selected."

Mr. Otterson also pointed out the recent and significent trend toward the use of the motion picture in the fields of education, religious teaching, politics, industrial training and advertising. "It is difficult to estimate the value to future generations of the records of progress in different fields thus made available," said Mr. Otterson.

Postpone Fox Circuit Shift

The reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, New York circuit, has been postponed until the middle of February. It was originally set for December 15. The postponement is understood to be due to the excellent results obtained by the Skouras Brothers in a 12-week business drive.

ORIENTAL IDEA IN FILMS

Brings Out Two Good Pictures in "Son Daughter" and "Madame Butterfly," Says Leo Meehan

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

We seem to be in the midst of an Oriental cycle. Already we have had pictures like "Shanghai Express," "The Bitter Tea of General Yen," "The Mask of Fu Manchu," "Roar of the Dragon." Now come two more, Metro's screen version of the David Belasco play, "Son Daughter," and B. P. Schulberg's first independent picture for Paramount, "Madame Butterfly," and there are others with South Sea locales, at least semi-Oriental in character, or featuring prominently Oriental characters.

Particular interest is attached to "Son Daughter," since it is among the first pictures to be made by Helen Hayes since she won the Academy award. Once more she displays her magnificent versatility. Oriental, Occidental, young or old, Miss Hayes does each part with increasing grace and beauty. As the daughter of a Chinese patriot, who gives up love and risks her life that her father may do his duty to her mother country, she creates another fine character. It is the highlight of a picture which otherwise is very low-keyed, with much dialogue and not so very much action. Miss Hayes is supported by an unusually big cast which includes Ramon Novarro, who co-stars with her, Lewis Stone, Ralph Morgan, H. B. Warner, Warner Oland. Settings are in San Francisco's famous Chinatown. The production is more of a photographed play than a motion picture, though it has the customary MGM polish and embellishment.

Uses Music of the Opera

Based upon the Gilbert and Sullivan opera "Madame Butterfly," and using its grand music throughout, Ben Schulberg has done a beautiful piece of work in his first personal production for Paramount. It proves two things significantly, that when a man of his production attainments is able to concentrate upon one production, a superior attraction may be expected. The other is that intelligent modernization of an old theme can result in a picture with all the qualities of the original retained, and yet brought up to date in such a manner as to make it eminently satisfactory and pleasing to present-day tastes.

Hollywood wondered why Mr. Schulberg selected such an "old-fashioned" number as the Gilbert and Sullivan opera for his bow as an independent. They will not have to be puzzled when they see it. The picture has charm, beauty and simple dramatic power. Any stiltedness which might have been expected is all eliminated; the whole piece is refreshingly natural in acting and production. Sylvia Sidney never has been better; she is ideally cast. The picture promises to give Mr. Schulberg's new venture an auspicious start.

Mack Sennett previewed his most pretentious offering of the season, "Hypnotized," which World Wide will distribute. It features the two blackface comedians, Moran and Mack, with Ernest Torrence, Charlie Murray, Marjorie Beebe, Herman Bing, Alexander Carr and two or three other comics thrown in to keep things complicated and laughable. The romance is neatly carried along by Wallace Ford and Maria Alba, Miss Alba looking the prettiest she ever has appeared on the screen. And while we are on the cast we want to make special note of a performance by a real, live lion who produces the biggest thrills and a number of the longest laughs in the picture. He seems as tame as a house cat, allows the actors to pull his tail, wrestle with him, as he runs around among the actors. He should be starred. It recalls some great lion stuff Mack once had in a Mabel Normand picture.

Broad Sennett Humor

"Hypnotized" is loaded with characteristic broad Sennett humor. No one hesitates to do a fall, throw a pail of water on some one else, fall in a pool, swat another with a broom. Most of the action takes place aboard a ship, with Ernest Torrence as a villainous hypnotist who gets the trans-Atlantic passengers into all sorts of funny situations. Mons. Sennett has provided plenty of lavish backgrounds and photography, girls, and all those little incidentals which, he has found, appeal to the well known masses. It is wholly designed for "the peepul" and not for the "ritzy."

Warners have contributed another picture to the long list of one-locale productions which were started, probably, by "Grand Hotel." This time it is the department store which is entertainingly used in a peppy and novel number called "Employees' Entrance." Warren William is the ruthlessly efficient manager, who knows nothing but business, thinks of nothing but profit and efficiency. Employees are no more than machines to him, to be scrapped if they do not work perfectly or suitably. Loretta Young gives one of her best performances, and the blue book cast includes Wallace Ford, Allen Jenkins, Alice White, Hale Hamilton, Albert Gran, Marjorie Gateson, Berton Churchill, Charles Sellon, Frank McGlynn and Hollywood's unofficial film chaplain, the Rev. Neal Dodd. Warners certainly believe in filling all spots with bang-up actors, or have I said that before? No matter, it's true, and makes for speed and sustained interest. Roy Del Ruth's direction is excellent.

Radio previewed a rather novel musical comedy picture, made in three reels. Run on the same program with a rather heavy feature, it should fit it snugly. It is set around a popular radio band leader, Phil Harris, and is called "So This Is Harris," an old habit of Producer Lou Brock (the title idea, I mean). The music is infectious, the story is clever and well developed by Director Mark Sandrich. Unlike most music-comedy films, this one was taken out on a golf course, instead of being staged in stuffy sets. It is sprightly and entertaining, out of the ordinary in every way.

"SIMPLY MUST BE DONE AS A PICTURE"

Says DeCasseres of "The Late Christopher Bean"; Three Other Stage Plays Under Verbal Xray

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

THE LATE CHRISTOPHER BEAN

This is a wow, a wallop and a whiz as a play.

It spins, it lives; it is uproarious; it has an ending that shoots the works for howls of laughter.

It simply must be done as a picture. Not to do it will be to leave the greatest clean comedy hit of the season off the screen. No, I'm not peddling "The Late Christopher Bean." I'm merely a critic who rose on his haunches with the proletariat, the bourgeoisie and the spats-and-monocle nine o'clock toe-treaders, and howled my delight at the show (by Sidney Howard, adapted for a New England setting from a French play by René Fauchois), at Gilbert Miller, at Walter Connolly and Pauline Lord.

We are in the house of Doctor Haggett (played so that you'll never forget it by Walter Connolly), in a small town near Boston. In this household there are, besides himself, his wife, two daughters and Abby, a maid (Pauline Lord), who is just quitting after being with this financially broken family for fifteen years. All these characters are done with master strokes.

Some years before this a sousing painter, Christopher Bean, a patient of Doctor Haggett, had died. Bean left a goodly number of daubs around the place, which the family used to plug up holes in the barn and elsewhere. Some of them are in the possession of Abby, who had a yen for this painter.

The art-sharps in New York suddenly discover that Bean was another Rembrandt. Sharps, picture-forgers and art critics trek toward the busted doctor's house offering fabulous prices for a Bean. Abby has seventeen of them, which the family tries to swipe.

Well, the Doc gets ready to sell out everything for about $200,000 and his family has grand visions of Palm Beach, when Abby suddenly announces to the household and the art sharps that she is Bean's widow. She walks out of the door with a fortune under her arm, leaving the family on its pancakes and the audience screaming with delight.

Here are sex-interest (there is a side love-affair also between one of the daughters and a rural house-painter), high comedy, romance and a crashing tail-spin. Again I ask, do you want a case of Scotch also?

Picture value, 100 per cent.

MUSIC IN THE AIR

"Music in the Air," with music by Jerome Kern, book and lyrics by Oscar Hammerstein, is still better than "The Cat and the Fiddle," and if I'm any kind of a prophet it will clean up in pictures and run neck-and-neck with "Humoresque."

Music of a very lovely kind, reminiscent of all the old German sentimental airs you've sung over the steins and seidels, engulfs every one of the eleven scenes. You are rocked, lulled, charmed by songs that burst out of every mouth for no good reason at all and by the hymn-like chorals of peasants.

It is a sticky, sentimental, melt-in-your-mouth story, and it is all as clean as a Park avenue house-kitten.

It's a tale of a music trek of a singing class from Edendorf, a village of Bavaria to Munich, where the beer and the wine mingle their gurgle with the arias.

Karl Reder, a bashful young fellow (Walter Slezak), goes on the song pilgrimage with his sweetheart. In Munich he gets mixed up with a celebrated song-bird (Dorothy Hall).

There are here romance, singing, scenery, adventures in the Munich Zoo, operatic stage stuff and everything for the picture trade except—thank le bon Dieu!—the American gangster.

Reinald Werrenrath plays the part of a traveling bird-catcher. Al Shean (of Gallagher and Shean) is superb as the old music-master.

It is a grand, old-fashioned show that scored a knockout with a bare-back and gold cane first-night crowd. And not a wisecrack in this carload of melodies.

It will cost money to film this, but it will rake in the dough, for its appeal is to that fundamental old music-loving, beer-guzzling heinie that is in all of us—even the Kansan.

Picture value, 100 per cent.

INCUBATOR

They are crowding one another's corns for the stage rights of "Maedchen in Uniform," one of the finest pictures ever made. And the German film started something.

So along comes "Incubator," by John Lyman and Roman Bohnen. The boys in this American training school, or reformatory, are trying to get out of uniform, and some of them are pretty bad babies.

Leaving out the homosexual implications in this play as too Romanesque, as yet, for Hollywood production, there is considerable matter in "Incubator" for a picture. It has the stuff for a juvenile and semi-juvenile "The Last Mile."

Fred Martin goes there a nice sort of fellow, but he leaves ready for gangsterdom and the hot-seat. There are plots, counter-plots, escapes and dirty work on the part of the guards and a matron. It is, in a way, also a good psychological study of the effects of a "reformatory" on a kid who isn't half bad.

Take the propaganda and the nutty sex stuff out of the play and there remain a comic melodrama with plenty of action and pathos.

Picture value, 40 per cent.

THE SURGEON

Anybody want a picture about face-lifting and its social advantages? Anthony Young wrote "The Surgeon," and a new group, the Mirror Players, sound asleep, produced it.

There is a face-lifting stunt right on the stage by a surgeon. The doc that lifted the woman's face finds her so beautiful after he had gerrymandered her that he falls in love with her. She has a crooked husband.

Well, the surgeon has an adopted daughter who threatens to toss him over if he marries the new face. So the new Lily Langtry throws acid on her face and returns to what Kelcey Allen calls the status quo. And the anti-plastic, do-not-touch-God's-work character in this prolonged debate wins. The audience loses $3.30 and the price of a hat check.

Picture value, .004.

CARRIE NATION

Carrie A. Nation (what a prophetic name for the champion bar-buster of all time!) is shown from before her birth until she coughed out in 1910 in a mighty interesting, and often hilarious, play in fifteen scenes.

It is by Frank McGrath and was effectively staged in a motion picture framework by Blanche Yurka.

There is plenty of picture stuff in this all-action career of one of the craziest fanatics that God's Own Country ever littered.

The play owes its vitality and interest mainly to the astonishingly fine work of Esther Dale as Carrie and in an almost equal degree to the portrayal of the stately, big-worded, rather pathetic old windbag, Mr. Nation of Leslie Adams.

If this play goes to the films, these two should be taken over with it. The Dale portrait of Carrie is one of the greatest pieces of character acting seen on Broadway in years.

GIRL OUTSIDE

Who wants a pretty little picture about a little girl who had pneumonia or something, gets on a man's doorstep—down in the Village, I think—is taken in, marries him and composes some music for him? For the fellow is a musical genius.

There's a money mix-up also in this masterpiece of hooey. The fellow has got to redeem his father's losses in Wall street, or something like that. And so on.

It must be read in a ten-thousand word treatment to thoroughly disbelieve it. The play is by John Hodges and Samuel Merwin. And it seems to me I've seen it many times in the grand old Kalem-Biograph days.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

LAST week was a tough one for the human form on the screen. Morris L. Ernst writes about it in The Nation:

In a little suburban home a movie was taken of the children. The new camera was used for the delight of the parents and later the negatives were sent to Eastman Kodak in Rochester for development. The celluloid snake flowed in the bath, passing from sheer black into gray backgrounds with figures of shining nude bodies of boys and girls. At one unknown stage of the process the austere developers rushed into the sanctum of the president to protest. A letter was subsequently mailed to the little suburban home declaring that the great company of Eastman did not dare develop such obscene films. The anxious parents were advised that the Post Office Department of the United States of America had ruled that the mailing of such films was a crime! Nudes and the law.

Another case involved an independent producer who presented to the censor of New York a seven-reel film entitled "This Naked Age," which shows the activities of nudist camps in the Catskills, France and Germany. The film was said to have been taken with delicacy. Many of the snaps are claimed to be things of beauty. There is a considerable display of buttock. To that the censor could not demur. But the women are shown with breasts. Down swung the heavy arm of the State of New York. "That picture may not be displayed." Thereupon, the National Board of Review, in its campaign against censorship, invited a hundred doctors, educators, ministers and just plain citizens, all respectable, to a private showing. A vote was taken. It was said to be 100 per cent in favor of the picture. The censor is now in a tough spot. He has, in effect, called these hundred persons indecent, lewd and lascivious. Moreover, if the case is pressed, he will have to allege that those in "Tabu" and "Moana" are not so corrupt and degrading as those of the Americans, French and Germans in "This Naked Age."

The brewery of the future, according to the secretary of the Brewery Engineering and Financial Corp., will be somewhat different from the oldtime plant. It will have "beautiful lawns and terraces" and will be a thing of beauty and impressiveness in other respects. But that will not be enough. For complete esthetic satisfaction there will have to be ushers and doormen dressed in bright regalia like the generals of motion picture theatres. There will have to be an occasional beauty parade of the brewer's big hosses, with tinted ribbons in their manes and rosettes on their headstalls. A French maid might accompany each as they prance down a runway while the newsreel cameras grind out a pictorial record of "Miss Malt," "Miss Hops," etc. Producers should be on hand with film contracts. Also, press agents, like ours, are essential. Otherwise, who would know of the new-found beauty and "superlative" taste of that dark brown fluid?

Howard Brubaker, editorialist, comments as follows anent the Roxy Theatre name tilt: "Samuel Lionel Rothafel won the right to take the name 'Roxy' along with him to Radio City. There it will shine beside that of the other great amuser, Rockefeller. On the other hand, the Seventh Avenue theatre is allowed to keep its ebbing and flowing orchestra, its ushers and its swell big deficit."

United Artists asked theatre owners showing its product for a title for Al Jolson's new picture. The exhibitors replied: "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum."

"TO THINK"

In connection with a real estate deal involving the old Regent theatre in uptown New York it becomes known that one of the subsidiaries of RKO is the Pansy Amusement Company. The president of the Pansy Amusement Company is Harold B. Franklin. The vice-president of the Pansy Amusement Company is Phil Reisman. Pansy is the name of a flower, everywhere except on Manhattan Island. The name derives from the French verb penser, meaning "to think." Pansies should be well watered and cut back frequently. They do best when well potted.

F. K. Haskell, our correspondent in Portland, Oregon, is a philosophical gent. "Why worry?" he asks. "There are only two reasons for worry: Either you are successful or you are not successful. If you are successful there is nothing to worry about; if you are not there are only two things to worry about: Your health is either good or you're sick. If your health is good there is nothing to worry about; if you are sick there are only two things to worry about: You are going to get well or you're going to die. If you are going to get well there is nothing to worry about; if you are going to die there are only two things to worry about: You are either going to heaven or you're not going there. If you are going to heaven there is nothing to worry about; and if you are going to the other place you'll be so damned busy you won't have time to worry . . . so why worry?"

A square block of limestone, decked with two American flags, was fitted into place on the parapet of the 70th story of the RCA Building in Rockefeller Center, one day last week. There was no ceremony for this momentous occasion, nor were there any speeches. Officials explained the absence of formalities by saying that the elevators ran only to the 55th floor, and that it was unlikely any spokesman could be found who would have any breath left for oratory after climbing 15 flights of stairs.

Because California sunshine means nothing in the production of a Mickey Mouse cartoon, Walt Disney is being continually importuned by civic organizations from other cities to re-enact the Pied Piper of old and play a Silly Symphony as he leads his little rodents out of Hollywood forever. One community offered to elect him mayor if he would bring his studio there! Others offered to build brand new plants at no expense to him. Such is the fame of a mouse.

Television broadcasters prefer brunettes, blondes causing no end of trouble for the television studio makeup man. No beauty dares use lipstick when she appears before the broadcast cameras. The color of bright red turns to ashen gray through the televisor. Black lipstick is used exclusively.

The very first shot in Connie Bennett's new film, "Rockabye," shows a newsstand on which is prominently displayed a copy of the illustrious publication, MOTION PICTURE HERALD. It's big things like that that make paragraphs like these.

MR. ALFRED HITCHCOCK, the British director, received a letter the other day from the managing director of one of the oldest established industrial concerns in the North of England. The letter reads:

Dear Mr. Hitchcock:
I am producing a film at our golf club. I have been trying to get some glycerine tears for a close-up, but am unable to do so. I wonder if you would oblige me by sending me four. I think they are fastened to the face with powder, but am not quite sure. If you would do this for me, I should be very grateful.

Mr. Hitchcock was flabbergasted. He replied respectfully as follows:

Dear Sirs:
We have your inquiry for glycerine tears. The charge is five pounds per ton, f. o. b.
If the directors of your firm will line up on the station platform in their underwear and top hats the price for same can be reduced to four pounds, 18 shillings a ton.
In regard to the application of the tears, the best method is to nail them to the face with six-inch nails. Should the artists incur a little suffering while the process of application is being conducted a slight tap on the head with a hammer will render them sufficiently unconscious for a short time.

Longshore is a little community at Westport, Conn., where Mr. Powers is erecting small houses "of beauty and refinement," to which ownership opportunity is being extended to "about 50 socially acceptable applicants," thanks to the graciousness of Mr. Powers. The newspaper advertisements say the place is "Tremendously popular among the writers, artists and professional people of Westport," where many motion picture people reside, also. Write or phone Mr. Powers for literature and an appointment.

Writing in Hollywood Herald, the very observing editorialist who pens his page "Observer," observes that it was only a few years ago when New York acclaimed a young actor from the Yiddish Repertory Theatre named Muni Weisenfreund. Next thing he knew he was in Hollywood with a picture contract. He played in "The Valiant" and in "Seven Faces" and then was dropped. Forgotten for a time by fickle Hollywood, he came back with a bang in "Scarface" and was later signed by Warners. Today, with theatre business as it is, "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang" is one of the reigning box-office successes. With all due credit to the production, it is the splendid performance of Paul Muni (nee Weisenfreund) that is largely responsible. So what? Hollywood lost three years of the valuable artistry of Mr. Muni by its habit of becoming too easily discouraged—with some things.

Rowan Miller, manager of Publix's Grenada at Norfolk, Neb., landed in the jailhouse due to an over-ingenious publicity stunt. Mr. Miller was playing "If I Had a Million," a Paramount picture in which a multi-millionaire gives away ten million-dollar checks to ten strangers whose names are selected at random from the city directory. Rowan obtained a pad of checks of the defunct Norfolk National Bank. He made out several for $1,000,000 each, signed and sent them to local prominent citizens. At this point John Law stepped in. Charges probably will be dismissed.

We read the other day with no little concern a story from RKO which told about 150 actors to be auctioned off by the company at prevailing market prices because "they're all quacks." A rather frank admission, we thought, until we read further on that the company referred to a bunch of geese.

Investor Joins Bondholder Action Against Paramount

Mrs. Adele F. Goodman, wealthy New York investor, has joined bondholders in an action against Paramount-Publix seeking to remove Adolph Zukor and other officers for alleged malfeasance. The complaint, filed in New York supreme court by Saul Rogers, counsel for Sumal Operating Corporation, investment group, charges Paramount-Publix with defrauding purchasers of its 6 per cent bond issue.

The complaint charges the company formed a subsidiary, Film Production Corporation, which was assigned negatives of certain pictures. The Bankers Trust Company and 12 other banks are named in the action as co-defendants.

To Appeal Paramount Ruling

The Relmar Golding Corporation, which instituted a bondholders' action in New York to obtain restitution to Paramount-Publix of assets recently transferred to a subsidiary in connection with a $3,000,000 loan made to Paramount by banks, plans an appeal. A court ruling had declared the plaintiff had no right to bring the suit.

BILLBOARDS THAT TALK PREDICTED

The day is not far distant when the outdoor advertising display, or billboard, will shout its message to passing pedestrians and motorists, rather than a reliance upon only the occasional optical attention of "prospectives." Such was the forecast of Captain H. Ledyard Towle, poster art director of the Campbell-Ewald Company, speaking before the Adcraft Club of Detroit. Not only sound will be used to attract traffic attention, in the belief of Captain Towle, but devices such as beams of light will be reflected upon the passing motorist or pedestrian from the billboard, which will immediately commence its "sales talk." Counts at spots where such innovations have been used, according to the Captain, have indicated the effectiveness of the new method.

League of Nations Union Recommends "The Man I Killed"

Paramount's recent film, "The Man I Killed," which was released in the United States as "Broken Lullaby," has received a notable tribute from the League of Nations Union, with headquarters in London.

In the November issue of Headway, described as "A Monthly Review of the League of Nations," and the monthly journal of the Union, published at London, the picture is recommended under the head: "Films to See." A brief description of the narrative, as well as praise for Ernst Lubitsch, the director, and the picture as a whole, are included in the comment.

Further than the Headway approbation, the Union has also communicated a circular letter to all of its branches, signed by a deputy secretary of the organization, in which is indicated the time and place at which the picture is to be shown in the respective areas of the Union branches. The picture is noted in the circular as "very good peace propaganda," and the branch secretary is requested to approach the theatre manager, enlisting his support in gaining members for the Union in connection with the showing, in return for which the branch secretary would cooperate in every way toward the end of greater attendance at the theatre.

Enclosed with the circular letter are texts of three special trailers prepared for the picture, which reproduce messages with reference to peace and the Union from Field Marshall Sir William Robertson, King George of England and the Prince of Wales. In a third enclosure, mention is made of the fact that the recent League of Nations Assembly and the Disarmament Conference requested attention be given to modern inventions as means of peace propaganda, mentioning both the motion picture and radio. "The Man I Killed" is noted as a conspicuous example.

New Dog Star Rates High

Caesar, of Wolf Breed, Comes Into His Own in "Trailing the Killer."

Be you dog-lover or just plain movie-goer, the Gaiety is the place for you one of these days, so that you too may be thrilled by Caesar, the police dog hero of "Trailing the Killer."

Caesar has quite a bag of tricks. Among them may be found the exact technique for slaying a rattlesnake, and the proper mode of approaching a death-defying wildcat. In addition to these, Caesar is adept at ingratiating himself with an audience

WORLD-TELEGRAM,

At the Gaiety.

THE latest of the animal stars of the screen, a thoroughly ingratiating wolf dog called Caesar, is to be seen at the Gaiety in an out-of-doors melodrama called "Trailing the Killer."

There are plenty of thrills in "Trailing the Killer," not the least of which is a sequence showing Lobo killing a rattlesnake, which is on full par for excitement with that famous Ufa short, "Killing the Killer."

Here is a picture that affords both novel and exciting entertainment.

HARRISON'S REPORTS

"Trailing the Killer"

(World Wide, Nov. 27; running time, 64 min.)

With a simple story, a minimum amount of dialogue, and the leading character Caesar, the wolf dog, this turns out an excellent entertainment for both adults and children. The acting on the part of the hero dog is so intelligent that it is almost unbelievable. In addition, the story has much human interest.

Suitable for children. Excellent for Sundays.

No exhibitor can afford to overlook this one, or to exploit it half-heartedly.

VARIETY

TRAILING THE KILLER

This shouldn't be confused with the average jungle picture. It's far too good for that. 'Trailing the Killer' as a whole is in a class by itself. It is a great picture and will entertain all classes of fans.

Making 'Killer' must have been a difficult job. It required patience and more patience to get the dogs to register in such a way that audiences subconsciously would liken them to human beings doing human things.

There is a real continuity. The action never becomes sidetracked, as frequently happens in average pictures dealing wth animals. Even the mountain lion seems to have been imbued with the fact that he had the villain's role.

There are some real human interest touches in this. Caesar, the wolf dog, with his 'wife and kiddies' provides a real family scene. The puppies are just lke youngsters that stray away and are bitten by crawfish, stung by bees and frightened by bullfrogs.

But for every sequence expressing tranquility there are several dealing with fights of the real thrill type. Caesar's battle with a rattler is almost in a class with the famous mongoose and the cobra short.

The feature bout is in the finale, when Caesar, suspected of being the killer, grips with the mountain lion and saves the life of a shepherd.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Flesh

(MGM)

Melodrama

Here is a show which, viewed from any showmanship standpoint, should provide real entertainment. Being Beery's first picture in many months and recalling the successes of his last features, it is only logical to assume that, given the right kind of advance campaign, audience reactions to "Flesh" should boost box offices.

Primarily it's a melodrama, in which the entertainment elements from comedy to pathos and deep human interest are presented, all made doubly effective by expert direction and splendid acting by the entire cast. Beery scores another personal triumph and Karen Morley and Ricardo Cortez supply a background that throws the star into vivid contrast.

Polakai is a waiter who aspires to become a great wrestler. Dumb, ox-like, lovable, he befriends Laura when she is in a jam. The qualities that should hold audiences make Laura love this big brute, but with Nicky, with whom she has left a trail of double crossing all over Europe, she carries on her clandestine romance. In fact, though she wants to give him up and go straight, Nicky is just the kind of villain to inspire all kinds of resentment.

Polakai becomes the champion of Europe. At the same time a baby is born to his wife. Although she knows different, she permits Polaki to adore him as his own.

The scene switches to America and all the heat of a great wrestling tournament is turned on. About it all revolves the sinister figure of Nicky, with Laura torn between her fascination for him and her love for her husband. Eventually Polakai finds it all out and in scenes that are the apex of drama applies the finishing touches to Nicky, after which he goes on to a world's championship and real happiness with his family.

There is much about "Flesh" that is reminiscent of Beery in "The Champ." His pathetic affection is transferred from his little son to his wife. The hectic glamor of the wrestling mat replaces the thrill of the prize ring. And there is plenty of fast and furious grappling in "Flesh."

With Beery's name to head all advertising and publicity, creating an audience building campaign that stresses the punch and drama of "Flesh" should not prove a difficult job. It boasts plenty of the necessary entertainment fundamentals and ignores almost completely most of the inconsequential folderols.

It may be necessary to play down the wrestling motif in some spots in order to capture feminine business. Where that is done there is ample opportunity to dwell on romance, drama and human interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Frisco Jenny

(First National)

Drama

This colorful story, based on the much-used but usually interesting hidden identity-sacrificing mother plot, should prove satisfactory adult entertainment. Centered entirely in San Francisco, with the time covering a period of 25 years from the earthquake and fire down to the present, the yarn presents Ruth Chatterton in the most effective and pleasing role. Comment from the preview audience, upon leaving the theatre, indicated that it liked her handling of the role of Jenny.

As a dancehall girl, Jenny falls in love with a musician, only to have her romance shattered when her lover is lost in the earthquake. Drifting around, she lands in Chinatown, where a baby is born. Years pass. Jenny pursues a hectic and glamorous career in San Francisco's famous night life. The child is adopted by a strange family, and with the years Jenny becomes a big bootlegger, politically powerful and all that, while the son goes to college, becomes a great football player and eventually a clean-up prosecuting attorney.

Jenny watches his career with pride. Only a few share her secret. A dramatic twist of the picture hinges upon the prosecution of one of her aids by the boy. When all chances for beating the rap go glimmering, he tells Jenny that unless she establishes her identity with her son to "fix" the case, he will. Jenny refuses and kills the man just as he is about to reveal the secret.

It is in the climax that the picture differs radically from others of similar vein. The son prosecutes the murderess and Jenny goes to her execution without the boy ever knowing that his mother was a victim of his moralistic frenzy.

Although "Frisco Jenny" is full of drama, suspense and that quality of maternal pride and sacrifice that adults should appreciate, there are some sequences that are a trifle strong. But in a picture of this type, such treatment is necessary to bring out the full meaning of the story and sequences are so expertly handled both in direction and acting that it does not seem possible they will create any undue unfavorable criticism.

Points to emphasize in advance campaigns should start with a build-up that will convince your patrons that in "Frisco Jenny," they are going to see a much more interesting Ruth Chatterton. The lengthy list of supporting players also provides some good personalities.

The title carries the tang of the San Francisco of the "Barbary Coast" days, widely publicized by scores of noted writers from Jack London down. Its intriguing sound, backed up by a sensation-creating campaign, should stimulate popular interest.

The story will permit much and varied showmanship, the dialogue offering an abundance of punchy lines that can be used. Dance-hall-saloons are in line for lobby decoration, but avoid too much emphasis on the bootlegging theme, even though it is important, lest the idea of gangsterism and racketeering becomes too strongly established.

Build up the human interest, motherly devotion and sacrifice angles.

There is plenty of interest for both men and women and for the more mature juveniles, but the picture is too strong for children's entertainment.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Me and My Gal

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

There is a delightfully engaging homeliness in this picture which serves to make it excellent entertainment without too much weight, and is of the type which should appeal readily to the regular run of film patrons no matter where they may be located.

It is a perfectly simple story of a young New York "cop" and his girl, talking in their typical and authentic "New Yorkese" with a naturalness that is often amusing, always engaging and refreshing. Thrown in for the purpose of providing action and a portion of drama is the entanglement of the girl's sister with a notorious criminal who is at the same time an escaped convict.

Contributing immeasurably to the ultimate result in the film are the performances of Spencer Tracy and Joan Bennett as the cop and his girl. As a matter of fact, the two "make" the picture. Tracy with his slangy, "wisecracking" vocabulary and his easy, happy-go-lucky role does a splendid job; which is matched, letter for letter, by that of Miss Bennett, who is a sheer delight. Extremely attractive, she becomes the perfect match for Tracy, with her equally free language, her sharp vivacity. She seems to revel in a role which is exactly suited to her, and she unquestionably makes the most of it.

In the waterfront setting in which almost the entire film has its locale, no opportunity has been lost to afford bits of amusement, with an inebriated fisherman as the center of the comedy. It may not be very subtle comedy but it is considerably amusing. The waterfront atmosphere is very well simulated, with Tracy the detective on the post and Miss Bennett the cashier in a lunchroom. Their amusing, fast-moving romance is complicated by the gangster implication of the escaped convict, who, hiding in the apartment of the sister, is finally caught by Tracy, who saves the sister from disgrace.

In addition to the Tracy and Bennett names, the exhibitor has excellent performances throughout, especially those of J. Farrell MacDonald, Henry B. Walthall, George Walsh, as the girls' father, the sister's paralyzed father-in-law and the convict, respectively.

Offer this as delightful entertainment of a homely sort, feeling assured that the patrons will thoroughly enjoy themselves. There is something of a selling problem here, because of the fact that there is lacking a definite feature or features upon which to pin the selling. There is no particular value in concentrating on the police-gangster theme, since that is at best incidental. Try to indicate that the film is something light, active and completely entertaining, with much by-play and horse-play and a pair of delightful leading performances. There should be reasonable juvenile enjoyment, and the youngsters will "fall" hard for Tracy.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Raoul Walsh. From a story by Barry Conners and Philip Klein. Screen play by Arthur Kober. Photography by Arthur Miller. Sound recorder, George Leverett. Art Director, Gordon Wiles. Release date, December 11, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

Secrets of the French Police

(RKO Radio)

Mystery

With the combination of mystery and the complicated scientific methods of the famed French Surete, or police, the exhibitor has an attraction here which should fundamentally appeal to the popular taste for fictionalized mystery, dramatically presented. A further great boom in this particular instance, which amounts to a fair portion of pre-selling for the exhibitor, lies in the fact that the film is based to a considerable extent on the series "The Secrets of the Surete." The group, authored by H. Ashton-Wolfe, has appeared for a long period in the "American Weekly" supplement of the Hearst newspapers over the country, which, with their aggregate large circulation, may be understood to present to the exhibitor a large body of interested readers who will look for the motion picture adaptation. A new series of 12 stories will begin on December 12, so that the exhibitor is assured of a continuance of interest.

The film is based also partially on the novel, "The Lost Empress," by Samuel Ornitz, who aided in the preparation of the screen play. The title, then, has plentiful possibilities for show-selling. There is no particularly outstanding cast name but there are numerous dependable players, all of whom do their work well. The story concerns the method of the French police of Paris in uncovering the machinations of a Russian noble in his scheme for the introduction of a kidnapped young girl as a lost member of the Russian royal family. Several murders are incidentally unearthed in the course of the search for the kidnapped flower girl, and their perpetrator brought to book. The weirdness of a chateau wherein the Russian performs his nefarious work, adds a certain mysterious effectiveness to the picture.

The best cast names are Gwili Andre as the flower girl; Gregory Ratoff, who has become increasingly important, in a fine performance as the Russian; Frank Morgan as the chief operative of the Surete. John Warburton is good as the young thief, in love with Miss Andre, who is pressed into service by the police to find the kidnapped girl.

This film is good entertainment of its kind, and should readily be counted upon for a reasonably good result at the box office. The principal selling angle becomes the origin of the film and its considerable popularity. Indicate the film as an insight into the scientific workings of the French police, an interesting expose of the laboratory methods so effectively employed.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Edward Sutherland. Based on "The Secrets of the Surete" by H. Ashton-Wolfe, and partly on the novel "The Lost Empress" by Samuel Ornitz. Screen play by Samuel Ornitz and Robert Tasker. Photography by Al Gilks. Release date, November 11, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

Virgins of Bali

(Principal)

Travelogue

Once more the motion picture cameras are carried to the Island of Bali, in the South Seas and the Dutch East Indies, and once more the result is a travelogue, notwithstanding how much of a "glorified" travelogue it may be. In this instance, William M. Pizor is named as producer, and Dean H. Dickson the writer and speaker of the accompanying explanatory dialogue.

The running time is only 46 minutes, decidedly short, consequently calling for additional material in the concoction of a program. In the building of that program, the field of travel and similar subjects is lost to the exhibitor, otherwise his program immediately becomes topheavy.

Extremely well does the picture indicate the mode of life of the Balinese, as well as the beauty, quiet and tranquillity of the island. In order to impart semblance of continuous narrative to the film, the producers have dogged the footsteps, so to speak, of two Balinese sisters and their family, picturing thereby the routine of living, the manner in which a swain pays court to the girl of his choice, the marriage ceremony and the parental maneuvering. Incidentally, with the opportunity thus presented, the producers have introduced sequences portraying the various unusual and strange customs and the ceremonial procedure of the people. Hinduism predominates as a religious belief on the island, and music and the dance are held almost in veneration by the populace. Interesting are the pictures of the native girl and boy dancers, and the famed temple dancers, young girls who, having realized the ambition of every Balinese girl, perform the traditional posture movements of the ceremonial.

The picture contrasts the modes of dress—or undress—of the native women according to occasion. For the ceremonials they are fully clothed; in the ordinary, simple life of the villagers they wear nothing above the waist, and most of the footage is of the non-ceremonial activities of the Balinese. The exploitation paper and lobby display at the Cameo in New York was concentrated upon the undress feature.

The production is a travelogue and should be played as such. Natives play all roles.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by William M. Pizor. Distributed by Principal Distributing Corporation. Dialogue by Dean H. Dickson. Release date, December 8, 1932. Running time, 46 minutes.

Leap Year

(British & Dominions)

Romantic Comedy

The factors that will sell this picture are two in number—Tom Walls and Anne Grey—unless Edmond Breon's name is still remembered by America's legion of film fans. The story is slight and takes far too long in the telling. This is it:

Sir Peter Trallion falls for a voice on the telephone, dates it, falls for its owner, and loses her. Four years later, going East to mend his broken heart, he finds consolation in another, but when they are all set to middle aisle it together the first one turns up again. Complications, unravelings, finis. Time, 89 minutes.

Where the humor of Walls gets laughs, there should be business, and he succeeds in introducing a good sprinkling of comedy situations of his own brand.

Your second bet, Anne Grey, should sell on her picture alone. She has that regal style of beauty whose nearest native counterpart is Mary Astor, and the comparison stands for her acting powers as well. Your patrons will find her a joy to watch all the time she is on the screen. Beg, buy, borrow or steal as many stills of Anne as there are in all America, and be sure your patrons see them.

For your press ads, throwaways and other literature you can spin a piece about the professional lovemaker, vamping women for diplomatic reasons, who finds himself trapped. There are shots of a romantic bedroom episode, tete-a-tetes, a wall climbing act and a range of others that emphasize the comedy nature of the play.

Technical qualities of the picture are excellent—photography, lighting, sets are beyond reproach. The supporting players, notably Edmond Breon, Lawrence Hanray and Ellis Jeffreys (as the maiden aunt), give piquancy to many of the comedy situations.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by British & Dominions at Elstree, London. Directed by Tom Walls. Story by A. R. Rawlinson. Photography by F. A. Young. Art direction by L. P. Williams. Recording by L. E. Overton. Editing by A. W. Roome. Running time, 89 minutes.

The Match King

(First National)

Drama

There is a certain very definite dramatic timeliness behind this picture which measurably simplifies and assists the exhibitor's selling efforts. The sudden and terrific collapse of the vast Kreuger match interests throughout the world, immediately following the unexpected death of Ivar Kreuger, forms the nucleus about which this narrative has been constructed. Specifically, the film is an adaptation of the novel by Einar Thorvaldson.

This becomes the most vital, smashing angle in the exhibitor's campaign, that and the fact that the title role is presented by Warren William, the actively dynamic and recently risen Warner star, who makes a great deal of his part in what, on the whole, becomes very nearly a one-man picture. William, as the match king, whose dreams were boundless, whose mind was keen, who recognized no such thing as retribution or an accounting, is obviously a strong selling factor, and one which, if it is properly exploited, should show readily at the box office.

William has excellent support, with several names of real selling value: Lili Damita, as the foreign actress who completely captivates William; Glenda Farrell, the girl he deserted to get a start; Hardie Albright and numerous dependable players in minor roles.

With reasonably dramatic effectiveness, the narrative carries William, as Paul Kroll, from a job as porter at an American ball park, back to Sweden to aid with his fictitious American business success in the restoration of the family match factory, in a bad financial way. Only Hardie Albright knows the truth of Kroll's position. Glenda Farrell is the jilted victim of Kroll's desire to get to Europe with his already growing ideas.

From then on is a long and mounting trail of borrowing, pyramiding loan on loan without regard to the outcome, robbing Peter to pay Paul, with the unceasing goading of a dream of world dominance, using women in all the capitals of Europe to exact agreements of Kroll monopoly in return for huge sums to aid governments in financial distress. He meets Miss Damita and proceeds to pursue her expensively, assiduously, until she goes to the United States and Hollywood. Finally, himself in financial straits, he takes forged Italian government bonds to Wall Street, there borrows millions, and also learns that Miss Damita loves someone else. Returning to Paris, he discovers that he is about to be revealed as a fraud through the uncovering of the forgery, and commits suicide.

That indication of the story's highlights will indicate to the exhibitor the angles from which he may attack his selling problems in this instance. They should all be based on the title and its significance, coincident with the appearance of William in the title role. Obviously, this is an adult attraction.—AARONSON, New York.

Mensch Ohne Namen

The Man Without a Name

(Protex)

Drama

Werner Krauss, memorable to American audiences for his work in "Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," herein offers a performance which is considerable substantiation of his recognition as one of the foremost character performers in Europe. Ably supported, Mr. Krauss makes intensely dramatic his role of the shell-shocked war veteran, who returns to Berlin to find himself unable to prove his identity or recover name, fortune and wife, and who finally, with the aid of newly found friends, makes a new start.

The entirely German dialogue offers no obstacle to appreciation by the patron without a knowledge of the language. The use of English subtitle translations of important passages in the dialogue is of further assistance. Mr. Krauss' expressive manner of portrayal for the most part makes dialogue unnecessary.

The exhibitor who has not specifically a German-speaking patronage from which to draw, may well play this as something in the nature of a special performance, terming it an example of some of the finer work of the European screen. For the exhibitor who can readily count upon understanding patronage, or who regularly plays foreign product, there is much here with which to work in selling the picture. Werner Krauss is a selling name. Hertha Thiele will be remembered as the young girl who contributed so feeling a portrayal in "Maedchen in Uniform," which established something in the nature of a record as a two-a-day attraction at an important Broadway house. Maria Bard, as the girl who in her faith gives Krauss a new outlook on life, is pretty, vivacious, capable.

For story value there is the dramatic situation of a man who, gassed in the war, loses his memory, recovers it suddenly and returns to Berlin to regain his name, since he has been reported dead. Once the owner of an automobile factory, he seeks to regain his place, but is spurned as an imposter. Even his wife refuses to recognize him, while his former partner, now married to his wife, threatens him with arrest. Only the faith of his few friends and the spirited cheerfulness of Miss Bard enable him to retain his self-respect. Finally the court grants him a new name and he looks forward to new designs in automobile manufacture and the culmination of a romance which has developed between himself and Miss Bard.

This is able screen work, in story, performance and development. It is worthwhile drama and a strong motion picture.—AARONSON, New York.

SHORTS

Swing High

(MGM)

Thrills

There are thrills and stunts in this subject of the Sport Champion series, with the famed Flying Codomas, trapeze artists, seen in their daringly hazardous aerial feats of skill, strength and nerve. Two brothers and a sister form the troupe, and the camera has caught them from various unusual angles, making for effective photography. It is sport of a different kind, and a few of the tricks will make the spine tingle. An active, well executed subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Toyland

Christmasy

The Paul Terry-Toons here offer a timely Christmas subject, with plenty of action and lots of fun for everyone. The antics of the pup reflect a keen knowledge of dogs on the part of the animators, and so many animals appear that there's something happening every moment.—Running time, 6 minutes.

By-ways of France

(Fox)

Excellent

One of that excellent series, Fox Magic Carpet of Movietone, this subject moves about the peasant country of France. The South, where the grape harvest is the great annual event, Normandy in the North, where the hardy fishermen of Celtic ancestry ply their chilly trade, come before the camera eye. Highly interesting, the subject has a wide appeal and the photography is excellent.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Easy Street

(RKO Pathe)

Chaplin Again

One of the early Chaplin comedies, this has been released as one of a series with sound and musical accompaniment added, and rather effectively. Charlie becomes a cop and proceeds to clean up the rowdies on Easy Street and thereby win the girl at the mission house. The inimitable Charlie, with his superb pantomime, is almost as comically effective today as he was when this and other films were first released as silents. A New York theatre audience enjoyed his antics without reservation.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Cornell

Fair

If the audience is college-spirited, it may derive some enjoyment from the rendition by a glee club led by Reinald Werrenrath, singing the songs of Cornell. While the group sings the camera roves about the Cornell campus, spotting various buildings, watching the football team and crew in action. The singing is reasonably good though unstirring. Running time, 9 minutes.

The Toy Parade

Unusual and Excellent

One of the "Oddities," this novel and splendidly executed subject concerns the mechanical toys of toyland. A tiny demon tries to impress the nutcracker man with his skill at transformations without success until the little dancer attracts the nutcracker, who is repelled by the squad of toy soldiers. This is a natural for children and the Christmas season, and should prove entertaining in its cleverness for the adults as well.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Courting Trouble

(Paramount)

Fair

Charlie Murray, heavy set and stupid looking comedian, is the husband, henpicked not by his wife but by his mother-in-law. A ruse gets him out for a lodge meeting, a slip brings him to court. Sentenced to 30 days at home in his wife's clothing, he watches his step until the last day, then gets into more hot water. Nothing unusual, contrives to be a fair comedy.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Seeing Stars

(Columbia)

Clever

One of the Krazy Kat cartoons, this subject, with Krazy Kat entertaining in a night club crowded with animated animals, is most unusual, extremely clever, in its use of enormously smartly caricatured film stars of today. Appearing in characteristic pose and action are Joe E. Brown, Laurel and Hardy, Marie Dressler, the Four Marx Brothers, Jimmie Durante, Harold Lloyd and several others, all easily distinguishable. Decidedly an unusually amusing, clever animated cartoon.—Running time, 8 minutes.

You're Too Careless with Your Kisses

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

Amusing and suitable for a light spot on any supporting program is this number of the Merrie Melodies animated cartoon series. The small feminine fly leaves home and is caught in a shower and the house of the ugly spider. Hubby calls out the fly-army, which rallies to the attack with a variety of weapons, conceived cleverly by the artist. The spider is vanquished in amusing animated fashion.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Tent Shows Fail in Florida

Tent shows are finding Florida considerably uninviting this year, according to Guy A. Kenimer, of the Florida theatre at Jacksonville. Only two shows are understood to be in operation currently. High license taxes are a major obstacle with which such entertainment is confronted, reports Mr. Kenimer.

COMMANDING SUPPORT of a GREAT NEW PUBLIC

Operalogues are the finest artistic achievement of the Short Feature in recent years. They bring to your theatre the world's most famous grand operas in popular tabloid form for everybody to enjoy. And they bring to your box-office the benefit of the organized backing of schools, better films groups and music clubs. Here's something new, different, better . . . and a great new fan following is acclaiming it.

"WALPURGIS NIGHT" suggested by Goethe's "FAUST"

An Operalogue is the ideal short subject for a Holiday show. Gorgeous staging. Elaborate display. The world's greatest operatic music. Their beauty and novelty fit perfectly the spirit of the season.

Kepdall-de Vally Operalogues

"The IDOL OF SEVILLE" suggested by Bizet's opera "CARMEN"

"A magnificent series of two-reel operas . . . really superior entertainment . . . excellent taste and judgment . . . as appealing to the eye as to the ear. There should be a lively interest in such pictures as these. Here are novelty, quality and real class all wrapped up in small but entertaining packages."

JENKINS' COLYUM

Corpus Christie, Texas

DEAR HERALD:

We are down here right close to Aransas Pass where they catch those tarpon out in the gulf, so now look out for a good fish story that you can depend on.

Just west of this town about nine miles is a gas well that has been burning for three or four weeks and they are unable to put it out.

This well has formed a crater about fifty feet across at the top and seems to be getting larger all the while. We hope to get out of this country before the whole thing blows up. At night you can see the flames from this well for thirty miles.

The past week we met some mighty swell fellows, just as about all of these Texas managers are: H. E. Werner, Queene theatre, Trinity: Sam Parish, Dorothy theatre, Huntsville; W. C. Atkinson, Idle Hour theatre, Hemstead; Brenham Amusement Company, Brenham; R. C. Garbade, Grand theatre, Yoakum.

At Beeville we met Mr. Hall, who has a string of seven theatres in southeast Texas. Mr. Hall is such a strong believer in the HERALD that he gave us a subscription for each of his seven theatres located at Beeville, Kennedy, Cuero, Stinton, Aransas Pass, Kingsville and Alice.

Mr. Hall is a delightful fellow to meet and our regret is that we didn't have time to visit him as long as we should have liked. He is the type of man who doesn't hesitate to spend money for anything to improve his business, and the managers he has and the manner in which they handle the business is proof of this. Mr. Hall is to be congratulated for the excellent organization he has built up.

At Hallettsville we met Mrs. Lillian McElroy, who operates the Coles theatre. When we introduced ourself to her she laughed and said, "Why you old reprobate, what in the world are you doing down here?" And we replied, "Well, madam, we are down here in the interest of the new administration and the welfare of the citizens of this commonwealth. Our chief desire is to bring to this great state of longhorns, cactus, tarantulas, centipedes, cotton, pecans, oil fields, turkeys and a citizenry of famous and glorious people (of which there are none better on earth) a little hope that they may survive and carry on through the coming administration." And just here she yelled "Hold on, you old mossback Republican, you've gone far enough," and we replied, "Lady look us over again."

Anyhow, Mrs. McElroy is just the kind of a lady we delight in meeting. She has a beautiful theatre, well equipped, and we judge she is doing a nice business considering the present state of things and the low price of cotton, and down here when you talk about the low price of cotton it gives everybody a chill, so we are trying to keep quiet about it.

We can't tell whether it is pity or sex appeal, but everytime we meet a lady manager she seems delighted that we called. One lady up in North Dakota wanted to get a tent and take us out on exhibition. That might indicate curiosity. She offered to split the receipts with us provided we'd act natural and agree not to bite anybody. Mrs. McElroy didn't offer to do that but she did try to keep us over to see the evening show at her theatre.

McAllen, Texas

At Talfurrias we met Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jungman, who operate the New theatre. Mrs. Jungman said she never expected to see us, and Frank indicated by his looks that he'd have been just as well satisfied if she never had. Both of these people are mighty swell folks and they have a very nice theatre in a snappy town. Mrs. Jungman said she hadn't cared for the HERALD since they cut out the department "What The Picture Did for Me," but when we told her that they were going to reinstate that department she jumped up and grabbed her check book and said, "Well, how much is it?" Mr. Jungman is quite a mechanic. He has a shop over his theatre where he repairs everything for everybody. He even makes projection machines, and Mrs. Jungman says she is glad he takes to those things because it keeps him from fooling around in the house and getting in her way.

Yesterday we drove through the famous King ranch. It's the largest ranch in the United States. It has one million seven hundred thousand acres. You could lay Rhode Island down on top of it and it wouldn't cover it. The King home, which is located three miles west of Kingsville, is said to have cost one million dollars and is the show place of Southeast Texas. You enter this ranch on the north and you leave it one hundred and twenty miles on the south.

We supposed that our home state of Nebraska had the largest ranch in the U. S. One man out there has 105 sections but that wouldn't make a calf pasture for the King ranch.

This town of McAllen is located in the heart of the citrus belt. Here they grow everything you can think of and some things we never heard of before. They have green vegetables and fruit the year 'round and some of their grape fruit is as big as pumpkins and their cabbage as big as a washtub. This would be a great country for sauerkraut.

This town is located in the lower Rio Grande valley about fifty miles up the Rio Grande from the gulf of Mexico. The weather is so warm here that many people go around bareheaded and in their shirt sleeves. We saw some kids going barefooted, and one kid just had on a breechclout and a Texas tan. We wonder how this will listen to our old friend Crocket-Brown and his bullfoundland pup up on the Mesabi range in northern Minnesota.

A grapefruit right off the tree down here is very much different from the grapefruit out of cold storage up north. Down here they are sweet and juicy. Up there they are spongy and bitter. They pick them before they are matured to ship them north but here they let them hang on the tree until they are perfect, and boy, they are not hard to take.

Tomorrow we are going down to Brownville and on down to the Gulf to visit the red snappers and porpoise. It is as likely as not that we will declare a moratorium for a week or so and fool around down here, for the thought of heading north into the snow and blizzards doesn't make a very strong impression on us, we've tangled with those blizzards before.

We'd like to stay down here four weeks
With nothing much to do.
And play around down on the beach,
And we're free to say to you,
That to go back north where blizzards blow,
And drive around in wind and snow,
When it's ten degrees or more below,
Would be a damphool thing to do.

We have heard a lot of favorable comment on the HERALD's declaration to reinstate "What the Picture Did for Me," and, as we said before, its continuance will be dependent upon the interest you exhibitors take in the department. A report from an exhibitor in a cross roads town or a de luxe house in the city will be read with equal interest by thousands of other exhibitors. If you haven't received blanks and franked envelopes write the HERALD at 1790 Broadway, New York, and they will be glad to send them to you. Don't leave it to George, that guy is too lazy.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Houston—Excellent picture of its type. Average attendance. Played Oct. 11-12.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

BLONDE CAPTIVE, THE: Very few patrons pleased with this picture. Title very misleading. Played Nov. 23-24.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

GUILTY GENERATION: Boris Karloff, Leo Carrillo—If you patrons like gangster pictures book this one. It's a new kind of gang film. Leo Carrillo will keep them laughing. Sure to please. Played Nov. 18-19.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou and Mayo Methot—Just fair, not much to it. An unknown star in the lead and was not liked by the audience from the remarks that I heard. Too much dialogue and not enough action. A very thin story and Columbia has not much of a picture in this one. Just a program picture that will not get any money in the small towns, is my guess.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—Almost as good as "Blessed Event." Played Nov. 26. Running time, 78 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Nebr. General patronage.

SOUTH OF THE RIO GRANDE: Buck Jones—A very good western drama. Better than average. Played Nov. 18-19-20. Running time, 62 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

SOUTH OF THE RIO GRANDE: Buck Jones—A very good western with keen photography and exceptionally good recording. Pleased and drew above the average. Six reels. Played Nov. 5.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Jordan, Mae Marsh—It was a story that any high school student could write; however, it pleased our audience much better than many of the highly advertised and loudly proclaimed pictures with popular stars. There was action, suspense, and love theme, and wholesome comedy. It pleased everyone and we have had more compliments from this one than on any picture played for a long while. Played October 25. Running time, 71 minutes.—N. Ray Carmichael, Coliseum Theatre, Lamoni, Iowa. Small town and college patronage.

THIS SPORTING AGE: Jack Holt—Not so good. Wrong casting for Jack Holt. Many more like this and Holt won't draw a dime. Running time, 66 minutes.—N. S. Tronslin, New Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. Adult patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—This picture draws a good class of people and pleases everybody who sees it. And some of them rave over it. I would say one of the real good pictures that pleases. Played Nov. 22. Running time, 80 minutes.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings, Alan Dinehart—Far the best of pictures that depict the affairs of Washington. It has a tense story all the way through. It holds the audience every minute. Skilfully directed and Tracy and Constance Cummings do a swell job with their roles. Constance Cummings is one of the younger stars that gives a finished performance in all the pictures we have shown of her. She is great in this picture as the all-wise secretary who knows the ropes of Washington. You can lay to this picture; it is a natural for a small town audience. They will like it and they will give you the benefit of the word-of-mouth advertising that is so valuable in a small town.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—The best production to date of western star series of any and all. Should please any type of patronage.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Exceptionally good, well liked and business above average. Played Nov. 16.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—This picture drew a nice business and pleased all who saw it. We recommend this one. Played Nov. 20.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

THE DARK HORSE: Warren William and Bette Davis—A very timely picture dealing with politics but for some unknown reason it failed to click at the box office. But it is good and those that did see it spoke well of it and it is one picture that did more the last night than the first. If you can get them in the first showing you will have a lot of boosters for the following runs. Played Oct. 18-19-20. Running time 75 minutes.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young, Eric Linden—A mighty fine picture. Will satisfy any intelligent audience. Played Nov. 29-30.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

MISS PINKERTON: Joan Blondell—If you like mystery of the light sort, this one will please and you can step on it as it will please the masses. Good for any day of the week, mostly Saturday. Played Oct. 28-29. Running time, 68 minutes.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: Chic Sale, David Manners and Ann Dvorak—Exceptionally good picture. Suitable for Saturday. Well liked. Business fair. Played Nov. 9.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—Pleased 100 per cent. Don't fail to play this one. Played Nov. 6-7-8.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

THE TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—Not up to his usual standard but still pleased. Good sound.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young—Here is the biggest surprise I have ever had on a picture. It grossed more on Sunday night than "Grand Hotel." Get this and run it on Sunday and you will more than please your crowd. Played Nov. 13.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Warren William, Joan Blondell—Go after this one, boys. It's good. Everybody will like it. The kind that brings them back. Played Nov. 29.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

Fox

CARELESS LADY: Joan Bennett and John Boles—Some difference of opinion on this but management considered it above program average. Leads were in good hands. Played Nov. 16-17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Irene Ware—This picture is good, but it did not draw like I thought it would. Somehow we just couldn't get them in, and those who came were divided, some said OK, others no. Don't look for "Frankenstein" business, or thrills like "Dracula." Played October 28.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—If they like the old time magic tricks such as trap doors, swinging walls, etc., this picture will take the cake. It's good and the acting is fine. For the class that like this type of picture it will more than please and should do the business. It is gotten up nicely and you can step on it and not be sorry you did. Played Nov. 12-13. Running time, 74 minutes—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Irene Ware—Spooky film enjoyed more by men than women. Must have cost quite a bit to produce. Not the best for Sunday. Played December 3-4.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—They asked me what it was all about the next day and it didn't draw the film rental. Eight reels. Played Nov. 14-15.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: Excellent entertainment. Best midweek drawing card of the year. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson. Played Sept. 22-23.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

CONGORILLA: Another wild animal picture. The public is about fed up on this type of picture and it took the well known nose dive. But nevertheless it is very good. One of the of-this-kind that we have run and we have run them all so far. Hope we never have to take no more. Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson. Played Oct. 16-17. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: Boys, it's a real picture. We struck a bad break but nevertheless here is a picture that deserves extra heavy advertising. Play it big and you will not disappoint your patrons. I'll say it's the best animal picture to date, bar none.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

CONGORILLA: No stars—Bought at a big price, exploited big in this territory, and it drew exceptionally good business. This town claims the birthplace of Martin Johnson and they all knew him when——. The picture is a big improvement over most of the "wild animal" pictures. Variety and short sequences help a lot. Eight reels. Played Oct. 31, Nov. 1-2.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Drew well and satisfied both days. What a relief to show a clean, money-making picture like this one. Played Nov. 23-24. Running time, 80 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Not the best Rogers by a long ways but it will get by where Rogers is liked. It is timely and should go over but for some reason it flopped for us. Played Oct. 11-12-13. Running time, 73 minutes.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Excellent. Here is a great picture and one that will draw and please. Good story and good cast, good sound and good photography. My first Will Rogers picture. I hope the rest are as good at the box office.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—Pleased the Rogers fans and gave Will a chance to get over a lot of his inimitable humor. Didn't draw enough business to pay rental and house expenses. They want too much for this, so be careful what you pay for him. Eight reels. Played Nov. 7-8.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—Very good picture to very good business. Played Oct. 23-24. Running time, 80 minutes.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—This pair always give us clean and exceptionally good entertainment. Pleasure to meet the customers when they leave the theatre. Played Nov. 23-24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Just a pleasing picture that did only average business for me. Played Sept. 25-26.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Adult and children patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell—Didn't do much with this one and had to pay for too many before they would date it, so lost money on the run. This team might knock them dead for some but not for us. Eight reels. Played Oct. 24-25-26.—Mayme P. Mussellman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Great. Swell picture that pleased everyone. Beautiful sets, good story and a great cast. Step on it boy, as is sure to please and will build up the second or third day. Played October 26.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers and Ben Lyon—A picture that is a little spicy, but it will get by and the acting by all the cast is good. It should please the majority and that's what we are trying to do. Played Oct. 25-26-27. Running time, 64 minutes.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

MAN ABOUT TOWN: Warner Baxter—Very good and pleased generally good patronage. Played Nov. 9-10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

MYSTERY RANCH: George O'Brien—A real western. Fact is, it is one of the best made last year. Book it and step on it because it will please the action fans. Six reels. Played Nov. 12.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—A sweet picture that will please anyone and did above average business. Played Oct. 9-10.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. All kinds patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter and Miriam Jordan—Wonderful cast and ably directed, but the theme did not hit our patrons as very pleasant. Left a bad taste in their mouths because of the possibility of the story. One of those kind which send you home to dream about and wish you hadn't seen. Played Nov. 20-21.— Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter and John Boles—Another good one Fox has on their new group. Good acting and an interesting story and plot that will please the majority. You can play it up and you won't have to hide as the people pass out. Played Oct. 23-24.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Fairly good production, but another re-make and few re-makes click at the old b.o. Some nice direction, especially the sequence on the opening with the monk almost stealing the picture. Gaynor appears to be showing age. Some close-ups not so ho.t Not near as good at box office as formerly.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett and Charles Farrell—A picture that will please the entire audience. The finest picture in every way that we have put on the screen in some time. Don't go by the title, it is misleading. The acting and photography and get-up of the entire picture is great. Step on it. If Fox delivers this kind of picture the rest of the season they will lead the pack. Played Oct. 9-10. Running time, 74 minutes.—G. W. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

WILD GIRL: Charles Farrell and Joan Bennett—Here is a picture that is as delightful as the proverbial ocean breeze. The entire cast is fine, the story great and the scenery excellent. Don't forget to say this is Bret Harte's famous story, "Salomy Jane's Kiss." We used this in connection with a pie contest and turkey giveaway that filled our little old 600 seats. Excellent comments from the patrons.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell, Ralph Bellamy—It's been a long time since I played a picture with Charles Farrell. The picture is only fair and nothing to get excited about. Some beautiful shots around the big redwoods of California.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett and Charles Farrell—Pleased the western fans, but those who came to see Farrell growled. They expected him to sing. Good for Friday or Saturday. Farrell's talk not clear enough. Freedom from sex brought favorable comment from the ladies. Played Dec. 2-3. Running time, 77 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery, Jimmy Durante—I played this on Friday-Saturday and my patrons liked it. I know a lot of exhibitors would say I was foolish to play Marion Davies on Saturday, but this was my best Saturday in months. Played Sept. 9-10.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Adults and children.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Irene Rich and Lewis Stone—This one will please big, little, old and young. It's just one of those that happen along occasionally that everyone enjoys. Our second night gross practically same as the first night. One would imagine it was a divorce picture, but all the action takes place a year or so after the divorce. You can get behind this one and hang around the lobby when the show is over, or in other words you do not have to hide out when your patrons are leaving the theatre. Played Oct. 4-5—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—Juvenile star featured in adult title. A combination tending to lessen both juvenile and adult attendance. Good picture well produced.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—Enjoyed by about 50 per cent. Good sound and photography.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—Not much drawing power and no box office, but the picture got all the business that it deserved. Seven reels. Played Nov. 3-4.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—No good reason for making, releasing or showing this one. Just so much wasted film and time. Poor entertainment. Poor at box office. Played Nov. 27-28. Running time, 72 minutes.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE FIRST

Entertainment value is the real criterion, says Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Arizona, and this is the why of it, he says:

"'What the Picture Did for Me' is but a part of the story. A good picture with poor title and unknown or little known cast will usually do less than a catchy title with prominent stars in a poor picture. Entertainment values should count most."

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery, Tallulah Bankhead—Said to be Robert Montgomery's best picture, but far from it. Story and plot unwholesome. Why not give these folks some open air and healthy breathing? Played November 22. Running time, 74 minutes. —N. Ray Carmichael, Coliseum Theatre, Lamoni, Iowa. Small town and college patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, Joan Crawford and Lionel and John Barrymore—This picture did a little more than a program picture, but is not liked by the movie-going small town.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: John and Lionel Barrymore and Greta Garbo—Elaborately produced and well acted. Drawing power almost exclusively from high-brow patrons who appreciated the offering. A good drawing card. Running time, 112 minutes.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—Wonderful picture and I can't understand why it fails at box office. Played Nov. 27. Running time, 120 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Nebr. Very high class patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford, Lionel Barrymore, Wallace Beery—The biggest disappointment I have ever played. My people didn't like it and I had several walkouts. Metro made me play it 3 days and it was the smallest Tuesday I have ever had. Personally I enjoyed the picture, but at the box office I call it a big flop. Played Nov. 13-14-15.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Small town patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston and Lupe Velez—The old Lon Chaney "West of Zanzibar" done over with an excellent cast and good acting, but it does not please the patrons. You know a picture has to be terrible these days to cause walk-outs. Don't worry, you will have them on this one. Played Nov. 17-18.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff, Myrna Loy, Karen Morley—An attempt at a new style of mystery thriller. Not as good as some that were released a few months ago. In these days of worry, people want light entertainment, comedy drama; everyone has enough trouble, why sit through a depressing picture. Let's have something that finishes up with adventure and optimism. The possibility of attaining success. People will leave our theatres then with their heads up, smiling and we may expect them to return.—N. Ray Carmichael, Coliseum Theatre, Lamoni, Iowa. Small town and college patronage.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES: Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy—Laurel and Hardy's best feature comedy, certainly drew the kids in and pleased most of the adults. Played November 25-26. Running time, 64 minutes.—N. Ray Carmichael, Coliseum Theatre, Lamoni, Iowa. Small town and college patronage.

PAYMENT DEFERRED: Charles Laughton, Maureen O'Sullivan—Why Metro ever released this is beyond me. The most disgusting picture in ages. If I had it to do over again I would have paid and not played. However it only goes to show that no matter how good some of them can make 'em they can also make a juicy crow.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

RED DUST: Clark Gable and Jean Harlow—Great show. Gable back in parts that he can do and Harlow sells herself to the public as never before. Great Sunday show.—Walt Bradley, Noon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—One mighty fine picture. Pleased them all. Paul Bern's death might have hurt the draw of Harlow on this, but there should be no doubt about her future after they see her in this.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—A sweetheart at the box office, and my audience ate it up. A little hot, but my people liked it, and are still talking about it. And this team means money. Played Nov. 20-21.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Adult patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—Good adult picture. Drew fair at box office. Played Nov. 13-14. Running time, 75 minutes.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—No draw in this town. Very poor business. Played Dec. 1-2-3. Running time, 83 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—Drew average adult patronage. No kids picture. No more risque than many others. No smutty lines. The little comedy in it probably saved it here. But think there are too many of this kind. Played Dec. 5-6. Running time, 74 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Famliy patronage.

SKYSCRAPER SOULS: Warren William and Maureen O'Sullivan—Fair picture, but no drawing power in small towns. Business exceptionally poor on this one. Played Nov. 20-21. Running time, 80 minutes.—N. . Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

SKYSCRAPER SOULS: Warren William—Good program picture to fair business. Played Nov. 11-12-13. Running time, 68 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

SKYSCRAPER SOULS: Warren William—Just another picture. Ran this on Sunday and business dropped off 50 per cent. One of MGM's designated specials which proved to be a poor program.—J. B. Widdle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer and Fredric March—We have received more favorable comments on this one than any we have had for months. Pleased practically 100 per cent and the women rave about it. This one will make the old box office smile. Played Nov. 13-14.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre. Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—One of the best. Miss Shearer could not have been greater. Played Nov. 27. Running time, 87 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Nebr. General patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—The cleanest picture I have ever played and it certainly did please. All three stars are perfect and it's the kind of a show you are proud to run. Get behind this picture with a big campaign and just run a slide on "Grand Hotel." Played Nov. 27-28.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Adult patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton and Jimmy Durante—First rate entertainment. Better drawing card than most of the specials here.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—A scream. I got behind this one in a big way and broke my Saturday record. These 2 boys make a real team. Played Sept. 16-17.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. All kinds patronage.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: Lionel Barrymore—Good picture, but no business. Played Nov. 8-9-10. Running time, 91 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams, and Radio stars—One of the nicest and most satisfactory pictures of the year. One radio-advertised picture that brought the crowds. Paramount deserves great credit for this one.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich, Herbert Marshall, Cary Grant, Dickie Moore—Better than "Shanghai Express." Here is a picture that has everything to appeal to an average audience. The work of Marlene Dietrich is surely wonderful. Dickie Moore great. Good at the b.o. Photography and sound great.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE: Fredric March—Wonderful photography, perfect reproduction and a great box office attraction.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen—Highly entertaining murder mystery uniquely presented with plenty of comedy and suspense. Played Oct. 27.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Here is a sweet little picture that pleased everyone and did above average business. I think it is suitable for any night in the week. Has comedy and suspense and a different story style. Played Sept. 4-5.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Children and adults.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott, Susan Fleming—Nothing in our town will draw or please better than a Zane Grey picture. This is just a cracker-jack Western and will please everyone where Westerns are in vogue. This picture drew and pleased better than Lloyd and Chevalier combined. Sound and photography excellent.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Women panned this, for there were many smutty speeches really uncalled for, as this quartette can give corking entertainment and still keep the women satisfied, if they cut out the dirt. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Much advertised as a super-comedy. Your success on an extended run will appear on how your first night crowd takes the picture. Seems to get off to a slow start and unless you have someone that makes the humor contagious, it may not please. Played November 18-19. Running time, 72 minutes.—N. Ray Carmichael, Coliseum Theatre, Lamoni, Iowa. Small town and college patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Good show. Full of laughs. Right up to the Marx standard.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Very good and while there is a lot of dirty comedy it gets over and they like it enough to send the neighbors. Drew above the average and showed a profit. Boy, that's a miracle! Seven reels. Played Oct. 27-28-29.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—It holds my house records and put them in the aisles. Step on it. Played Sept. 2-3.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. All kinds patronage.

HUCKLEBERRY FINN: Jackie Cooper—Great for children, and thoroughly enjoyed by adults. Sound excellent.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

LADY AND GENT: Wynne Gibson and George Bancroft—First class picture. Perfect characterization and well produced. Poor drawing card on account of title and former Bancroft subjects. Played Nov. 1-2. —Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—A very good picture that drew extra business on Thanksgiving and they liked it. Sold worth the money and we had a few extra dimes when we checked up. Ten reels. Played Nov. 23-24.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette McDonald—Good picture, but not as good as the other Chevalier pictures. At least it did not do the business, but that may be on account of conditions. The picture is far above average and will please. Played October 23.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette McDonald—This may be Chevalier's best picture, but we failed to see it. It did not click here at all. "The Love Parade" was by far his best. In fact, we don't think he has made a real picture since.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette McDonald—Goodbye "Mawruss," you're washed up. Even the flaps don't fall for you any more. At least that's my experience. This was one huge success as a "flop." Goodbye and good luck.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marian Nixon—Boy what a picture. They ate this one up, and came back the second night in big bunches. It's something new, and will please far above average. Paramount are making some mighty fine pictures this year.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—On a par with former Lloyd pictures in everything but subject matter and title. Sounds like a two-reeler. Movie, stars, Hollywood, etc., below par as subject matter here. Played Oct. 30-31.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Just fair. Not as good as other Lloyd pictures. Some liked it, and some didn't. Of course Harold is always good, but this one was hardly up to standard, and did not draw only average business.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Picture itself okay, but Lloyd is dead as a doornail now. Which only goes to show that these birds can't lay off making pictures only once in a decade and then expect them to flock to the old b.o. to see them later. By actual experience I found that our oldest grade school pupils did not know who Harold Lloyd was and the box office showed the older ones had completely forgotten him, for he was our biggest flop of the year and there have been some big flops at that.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Lila Lee, Mary Boland, Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—Just a fine picture. Everyone liked it and told me so. Don't be afraid of this one. It's swell entertainment.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clie Brooks, Lila Lee, Charles Ruggles—Very slow starting in the story, but it gradually builds up into a fairly good picture. Nothing unusual about it and a little hard to get the facts to them. Genevieve Tobin, Pat O'Brien, Rita LaRoy not so good. The same old story of the little girl that wants to make good in Hollywood. The picture is trite and has no new ideas of three or four others of like type that have come out in the same old vicious cycle that goes with this business. One picture of a type clicks and five or six others come out along the same line. When will the producers learn not to copy too close?—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

SPIRIT MOVES JOSEPH GRAY

The spirit moves, and having moved, busts out! Regards on re-establishing "What the Picture Did for Me." You said you had a substitute for it, but you didn't. No one can better the best that humans can do. I wonder if you ever realized its tremendous value and possibilities for keeping trash off the screen. In the long view, no one —not even the distributor who peddles it—is really benefited by a poor picture. Nevertheless, I think you are making a mistake by barring individual opinions in the reports to be made. Did I read this announcement correctly? [The idea is that the exhibitor will be best served by comment on the picture's performance and statements of fact helpful to fellow theatremen.—Ed.]

Secondly, thirdly and finally: When Mr. Quigley summed up the movie business in the sentence — "The best bargain obtainable," he said all there was to say. By the practical application of that theory, I have been able to keep a small theatre (300 seats) in a small mining town open full time during these four years of horror. You might not suspect it, but it sounds like some achievement. "The Best Bargain" is the beginning, the middle and the end of all things "movie," or I'm an astrologer, which I ain't. Congratulations.—JOSEPH GRAY, Gray Theatre, Spangler, Pa.

ONE HOUR WITH YOU: Maurice Chevalier—Enjoyed by all. Good reproduction.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan and Jimmy Durante—A very good picture that will satisfy and it don't have to be played during a campaign, but would be fine for the city elections in the spring. Pleased a fair crowd. Eight reels. Played Nov. 9-10. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: Jimmy Durante and George M. Cohan—Good entertainment. Drawing power better than average.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan, Jimmy Durante, Claudette Colbert—We ran this on election night and pleased everyone. The subject is appropriate and story and cast good. Run it as soon as possible while the political pot is still boiling. It's a good show.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan and John Mack Brown—A great picture because it has a swell story, giving the patron some football and then changing off into a dandy mystery murder story. Well played, holding suspense till the very end. Played Nov. 18-19. Running time, 72 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Nebr. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Johnny Mack Brown, Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan—I played this during the football season and stocked them in, and pleased 100 per cent. A pip of a picture that will keep you on the edge of the chair every minute. Play it as soon as possible.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes—Very good and above the ordinary in drawing power. Charles Ruggles is a scream and carries the comedy along at a fast clip. Seven reels. Played Nov. 28-29.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Charles Ruggles—Don't overlook this picture, get behind it. I did and was rewarded with business way above average. Charlie Ruggles steals the picture, but everyone in it is good. Paramount have delivered right down the line this year and I take my hat off to them. Played Oct. 30-Nov. 1.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Mixed patronage.

VANISHING FRONTIER: John Mack Brown—Very good action picture. Lots of the good old "West" in this. Brown not a western type. Running time, 62 minutes.——Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Nebr. General patronage.

STRANGE CASE OF CLARA DEANE: Wynne Gibson and Pat O'Brien—Very good, but no business. Played Nov. 22-23. Running time, 78 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Well made and excellently acted. Subject matter of minor appeal. Below average. Sunday and Monday drawing card. Played Nov. 6-7.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio and Joel McCrea—Drew above average on account of intensive advertising first day. Tragic ending and scene when Del Rio sucks the juice of an orange and spits in McCrea's mouth to quench his thirst, killed our second day. Director should have known better. Played Nov. 28-29. Running time, 80 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—Very good business. Many good comments. Played Nov. 24-25. Running time, 67 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—A box office natural. Everyone has heard of it and those who have not will be at your place of business the next night, so why worry. Played Oct. 30-31.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—Good enough picture of its kind, in fact one of the best, but failed to draw here. Played Nov. 27-28-29.—Robert Wygant, Height Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—A different kind of jungle subject. Well liked and well attended. Played Nov. 3-4.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: Animals and snakes—A great picture, but it did not draw here. Played Nov. 27-28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. Town and country patronage.

GIRL CRAZY: Wheeler and Woolsey—Splendid comedy. Two very popular comedians. Good sound and phonography.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—Very funny which drew good attendance. Played Nov. 18-19-20. Running time, 66 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

IS MY FACE RED: Ricardo Cortez—Fair picture that was liked. Played Nov. 24-25. Running time, 65 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Nice little picture and this kid Mitzi deserves a world of credit. Hard, however, to put a picture of this type over with the grown-ups as they think they won't like it. But they will. Nothing big, but mighty good family entertainment.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea, Paul Lukas—Not so hot. Women, however, liked it. But not men. Fell down at box office. Think much of the fan mag and press publicity (much of which is adverse) is hurting the draw on many of these stars. —Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne and Ricardo Cortez—Just another good argument for censorship. Played Nov. 1-2.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

Raspin

EXPLORERS OF THE WORLD: One of the best travel pictures in some time. Well liked. Has novelty owing to different locales. Played Nov. 24. Running time, 81 minutes.—N. S. Tronslin, New Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. Family patronage.

Syndicate

NIGHT RIDER: Harry Carey—The best western that Carey has made in a long time. Was enjoyed by our patrons. Played Nov. 19.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

Tiffany-World Wide

THE CROOKED CIRCLE: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Good program picture with plenty of laughs. No one took it seriously, but it clicked to much better than average business. Running time, 70 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre Lincoln Nebr.

Educational

HELL FIRE AUSTIN: Ken Maynard—Pleased the

Maynard fans and was up to average. Played Nov. 5.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

FALSE FACES: Lowell Sherman—Fair program picture. No appeal to story or cast apparently as it did a complete flop here. Running time 75 minutes. —Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

HELL FIRE AUSTIN: Ken Maynard—One swell western for Saturday in small town. Nothing better. Business 20 per cent less than Tom Mix. Played Nov. 12.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE LAST MILE: Preston Foster—Excellent picture, but needs strong publicity. No appeal for women. Played to much better than average business. Running time, 75 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

THE LAST MILE: Preston Foster—Very good, but not so much drawing power. Made a mistake by running it just one day because it would have done better on a two-day run. Nine reels. Played Nov. 17.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry, Beryl Mercer—Don't fail to play this picture. It brought them in and how. Pleased nearly everyone who saw it. Played Oct. 23-24-25.—Robert Wygant, Height Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry—Pretty good picture for a week-end. While some had read the book, others didn't know the cast, consequently there wasn't much cash to count. Played Oct. 20-21. Seven reels. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RIDERS OF THE DESERT: Bob Steele—Just another western with plenty of blank ammunition shot away at the mountains. Six reels. Played Nov. 19.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

STRANGERS OF THE EVENING: Zasu Pitts, Lucien Littlefield—This is a dandy picture of the mystery type that will please your patrons, plenty of comedy and excitement. Played Nov. 2.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

SUNSET TRAIL: Ken Maynard—Best western that Ken has made in a long time. Drew average business on Saturday. Played Oct. 22. Seven reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TEXAS GUN FIGHTER: Ken Maynard—A good western that drew average Saturday night crowd. Seven reels. Played Dec. 3.—Mayme W. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TEXAS GUN FIGHTER: Ken Maynard—Very poor western picture. The director must have been asleep when this was made. One of the poorest Maynard westerns we ever played. Played Oct. 28-29.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

THOSE WE LOVE: Kenneth MacKenna—Fair program picture. The trick is to get any of the customers in so that it can get a break. No star appeal and little else to recommend it to the customers. Poor business. Played Oct. 17-22. Running time, 73 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

United Artists

AROUND THE WORLD IN 80 MINUTES: Douglas Fairbanks—Not one person liked it. The second night only employees of theatre in the house. Photography, sound and story worst ever.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

CONGRESS DANCES: Lillian Harvey—Appeal to this one very limited. The critic in "Liberty" that gave it four stars must have been hit on the head about that time as he certainly saw three stars too many. No business at all. Steer clear of this one. Played Oct. 10-15.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

CONGRESS DANCES: Lillian Harvey—Not suitable for small town, poor box office attraction. Sound and photography good.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

SCARFACE: Paul Muni—One of the year's best pictures. Gangster story that appeals even to the women. More than double the average gross. Running time, 90 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

THE STRUGGLE: Hal Skelly—If there has ever been a poorer picture made please name it. I ran it on 10 cent nite, and advertised for my people not to come and see it. Those that came left before it was over, so did I. Pay for it, but don't play it. Played Sept. 27.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo.

THE UNHOLY GARDEN: Ronald Colman, Fay Wray—Another bad one from U. A. This company may make good pictures for Broadway, but nine out of every ten are just right down rotten for the small towns.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—Good picture, but doesn't mean much at box office. No draw for the women. Poor business. Running time, 75 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy, Pat O'Brien—Very excellent picture. Should please average audience. Did slightly better than average business, but cost special price. Played Nov. 21-26. Running time, 80 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr. College studes. Middle class.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy, Gloria Stuart—This picture is a thriller. Draws all classes and pleases them. This picture is O.K. anywhere. We want more of this kind. Played Dec. 4-5. Running time, 83 minutes. W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen, Gloria Stuart—One of the best football pictures yet. With strong advertising campaign failed to do much better than average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen and Gloria Stuart—Is this a picture? We believe it the greatest football picture ever made. It has everything! Football, parts of four games, a swell story with a great moral, heart interest. Football critics around here said the only thing wrong was the fact that that great array of real football stars lined up against each other were not allowed to really play the football they were capable of. Played Nov. 11-12. Running time, 78 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen and Gloria Stuart—Exceptionally good football picture. Interesting story and football game. Will please the majority of your patrons. Played Nov. 3-4.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—Best Universal on 1931-32 contract. Acting and production value first rate. Title meant nothing to majority. Drawing power fair.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—What a show! I'll nominate this one for a place among the ten best of 1932. No exhibitor living can afford to miss this one. Buy it, and run it as soon as possible. It's another "Seed," only better.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—The cast in this means nothing. Advertise Fanny Hurst's "Back Street." Most people have read the book or heard about the picture, so all you have to do is let them know the date you have it. Picture will give fine satisfaction. Played Nov. 20-21.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—A good picture that didn't break any house records, but it satisfied at a slight raise in admission prices. That's something. Nine reels. Played Nov. 21-22.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—Ran two weeks in this six day town which is the first time this has happened in history of town. Probably the most perfect picture of the year. Appeal unlimited. Tear-jerker, but they like it. Business perfect. Held them out for two weeks. Played Sept. 19-24, Sept. 26-Oct. 1.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

DESTRY RIDES AGAIN: Tom Mix—Did not draw the usual western business, but feature was ok'd by the patrons. Most of them would like a little more comedy mixed in. Played Nov. 26.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

THE DOOMED BATTALION: Luis Trenker, Tala Birell—War angle makes appeal limited. Scenes in Swiss Alps are magnificent, but don't darw the cash customers. Tala Birell shows signs of talent. To give the picture its just dues, it certainly is different. Poor business. Played Sept. 9-14. Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

FAST COMPANIONS: Tom Brown—A good picture with plenty comedy and thrill, extra good for Saturday night, well liked, business a little off. Played Nov. 15.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

FAST COMPANIONS: Tom Brown—Very good horserace picture with action, comedy, and pathos. I did fair with it, but am bringing it back for a Friday and Saturday because it is a good picture for the farmers to see. Eight reels. Played Nov. 16.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

1790 Broadway New York City

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Mix is my best bet on Saturday. Always do good business with this star. Business 20 per cent above other westerns. This picture has some of the finest scenery ever shown and a world of action. Business as usual, good. Played Nov. 18-19.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—A fine western picture. Played Dec. 3.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Unusually good Mix western with good story and enough thrills to please the kids. Westerns do not draw now like they usually do on account of the fact that farmers, who are the best patrons of western pictures, do not have any money. Business very poor. Played Nov. 25-26. Running time, 57 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Tom Mix draws about 25 per cent of what he used to. Possibly conditions are to blame, but you don't see the kids flock in any more to see Tom and Tony. The picture is good. So are the other Tom Mix pictures.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—A very good western and it drew average business, but it satisfied them; that's hard to do in these times. Hardly worth the money that they charge for them. Six reels. Played Nov. 25-26.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY PAL THE KING: Tom Mix—A very good western and set in a different mounting. It didn't draw so well, but guess it was the title. A great little Wild West show and rodeo mixed in with a mythical kingdom. Plenty of fast action. Six reels. Played Oct. 7-8.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY PAL THE KING: Tom Mix—Not a western. Excellent family picture. Played Nov. 22-23. Running time, 66 minutes.—N. S. Tronslin, New Menlo Theatre, Menlo Park, Cal. Family patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—This is a peach and one you can boost to the skies. I only played it one day and have been sorry ever since for not playing it two. You can play it any day in the week and step on it. Played Nov. 18.—Tom Edwards, Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo. Children and adults.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres, Maureen O'Sullivan —Just a Joe Dandy picture. It drew well and pleased above average. I would say it's a great picture and will please 90 per cent. Sound and photogrphy excellent.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres and Maureen O'Sullivan—The best newspaper columnist and radio announcer story that has come to the screen. Some gangland mixed with it to round out the story. Do not be afraid of it as we had nothing but complimentary remarks concerning it. Played Nov. 15-16.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—Very good picture of its type. Poor drawing card. No star value.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—Another good picture from this company which stepped business up 30 per cent above average. Well liked by all.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff, Gloria Stuart—Good thriller with Boris Karloff excellent. Plenty of publicity angles. Did better than average business. Running time, 75 minutes.—Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff, Gloria Stuart, Melvyn Douglas, Lillian Bond—Another one of those spooky pictures enjoyed by some and despised by others. Played November 19-20.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Joan Bennett, Donald Cook and Skeets Gallagher—Audiences have become immune to the "Frankenstein" type of picture even though the producers tell us the public is clamoring for them. This one is mildly amusing and seemed to be "just another picture." Played Nov. 10-11.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—Just fair for people who like this kind. Patrons report not as good as "Frankenstein," but it will get by. Played Dec. 2. Running time, 74 minutes.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie, Sidney Fox—We ran this picture on Thanksgiving day, and were sorry as it did not please the masses. One good patron pronounced it the poorest fiction he ever saw in any theatre, however, a few of the 400 said it was fair. Although it is supposed to be a comedy. I did not hear anybody laugh.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie and Sidney Fox—Somewhat disappointed in this. Expected a full evening of laughs on account of the city critics' reports. Guess small town patronage does not get this so-called high-class comedy because the picture did not get many laughs. Believe it satisfied generally, however. Played Nov. 23-24. Running time, 75 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie, Sidney Fox —Very clever picture with Jack Oakie at his best. Does not please everyone, but has an especial appeal to those people who understand the trade or who read fan magazines. Good business. Played Oct. 3-8. —Don Monroe, State Theatre, Lincoln, Nebr.

RADIO PATROL: Robert Armstrong and Lila Lee —Rather unusual. Gave excellent idea of police activities of the present radio age. Satisfactory. Played Nov. 12.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixe patronage.

RADIO PATROL: Robert Armstrong and June Clyde—Don't let them set this one for your best days. It's a very bad picture. It seems they started out to make a picture of the police, then lost the script and just went on without it. There are so many weak spots in it that even the action fans do not like it. We ran it on our cheap admission prices and got by with it okay but it's a bad one. Running time, 68 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

RIDER OF DEATH VALLEY: Tom Mix—Best Tom Mix to date. Patrons well pleased. For some reason Tom has not the drawing power here he used to have in the silent days. Business off. Played Nov. 20-21-22.—Robert Wygant, Heights Theatre, Houston, Texas. Neighborhood patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—This is nice entertainment and the whole family can go see it. It gave good satisfaction to all and deserves an extra boost any place. Will appeal to family trade and may bore some of the younger set who are first year in college, but those who like it a lot will more than make up for them. Running time, 70 minutes.—Steve M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—Certainly is a very wonderful picture. Knowing that there were no women in it at all, we were inclined to feel that it would lack heart interest. But from the first foot, it had heart interest and no foolin'. It will fill the bill any place. Played Nov. 16-17. Running time, 77 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—One swell picture that should be run in all houses. Well liked by everyone and business extra good.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patroange.

UNEXPECTED FATHER: Slim Summerville—Pleased a large audience. Summerville toned down a little and made good from start to finish. Played Nov. 19.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

Warner

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell—Good picture which did about average business. Well liked. Played Nov. 8.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—By far the best thing Tracy has ever been in and is one swell show. Sunday night business 20 per cent above average. Personally think the best picture run in my house in a year and am pretty sure my patrons thought so too. Played No.v 20.——J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Excellent. Will help any sick box office. Played Nov. 27. Running time, 83 minutes.—N. S. Tronslin, New Menlo Theatre, Meinlo Park, Cal. Family patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy, Mary Brian—One of the most entertaining pictures ever played. Gave satisfaction to all we got to see it. Business very bad, but no fault of the picture. Played Dec. 4-5.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE CROONER: David Manners and Ann Dvorak —A good picture which did about average business. Well liked—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE EXPERT: Chic Sale—Just ordinary picture to fair business. Played Oct. 28-29-30.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

LOVE IS A RACKET: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Interest holding and entertaining. This is one of the best of this type story made. Attendance below average. Played 6-7.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

THE MAN WHO PLAYED GOD: George Arliss—Excellent production and sound, but drawing power fair in small town.—W. H. Cuzner, Strand Theatre, Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia. Small town patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—This picture seemed to draw the classes or the 400, but did not draw the masses. It seemed to please the 400, but did not draw our usual Sunday night crowd.—Played Nov. 27. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: Kay Francis, William Powell—Folks will want more pictures from this team. Good Sunday show.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Nebr. General patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell and Kay Francis—Business good on this one. Frank McHugh almost steals the show. Well received by audience. —J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. and Nancy Carroll—Just another picture. Can't be any reason for these kind. Good cast but wasted. Another story of Russia. Running time, 60 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Noon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Nancy Carroll—One of the poorest we have used this year. We tried to hide, but the patrons looked us up to tell us how rotten it was. Double feature this one, or pay for it and don't run it at all, as they will all go out mad. Played Dec. 11. Running time, 57 minutes.—W. H. Robson, Rialto Theatre, Albion, New York. Mixed patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—A dandy picture, but my patrons do not appreciate Arliss. Can not do average business with his pictures.—J. B. Weddle, Walnut Theatre, Lawrenceburg, Ind. Small town patronage.

WINNER TAKE ALL: James Cagney—Very good picture. Double featured with "Tenderfoot" to very good business. Played Nov. 4-5-6. Running time, 67 minutes.—U. F. Loibl, Chimes Theatre, Cedarburg, Wis. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BIRTHDAY BLUES: Our Gang—A very funny kid comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE CHIMP: Laurel and Hardy—Funny, you bet. This pair get plenty laughs most of the time, but they cost too much. They don't draw in any extras. Hal Roach. Two reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHOO CHOO: Our Gang—On a par with other Our Gang comedies.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

REFLECTIONS OF A WINTER MORNING

SOME OF THE INDUSTRY'S non-essentials:

Exchange managers who try high-pressure tactics while all the time "Ye Dumb Exhib" is laughing up his sleeve.

Accessory plugger who tries to sell a five-'n-ten shootin' gallery enough stuff to plaster the town; then finally ends up by settling for a set of 11 by 14's.

Theatre executives who write too many "pep" letters that have a most depressing effect on the receivers.

And—theatre executives who like to write columns. Some of them, by the way (so I'm told), would make far better columnists than execs. But, maybe I'm wrong.

Bookers who can only find that extra print when a box of candy or cigars are forthcoming. Otherwise—not a ghost of a chance.

Managers who still make callers wait fifteen minutes to a half hour because they think it makes 'em (the managers) important.

Assistants who know how to do everything but assist, and at the psychological moment are never to be found where they should be.

Bookers who refuse to recognize and value the local manager's point of view regarding bookings. Booking, like house management, is best handled by the man in each town and not by an overlord hundreds of miles away.

The manager who strolls into his theatre ten minutes before show time and leaves ten minutes before the last break. He's the bird who is always telling others how to manage a theatre.

The showman who never has a moment to spare but can generally be found gossiping over the 'phone and telling confidential things to the opposition manager. (This one ought to be shot at sunrise.)

THINGS I'D LIKE to be doing right now:

Getting the car ready for that Florida trip where I'm sure to meet all those northern theatre execs who always find important work to be done down south after the first of the year.

Playing a round of golluf with Al Cuici on the Florida-Biltmore course where I once had hopes and ambitions of trouncing Sonny Shepherd, but settled for a dime-a-hole round on the Municipal course out at Miami Beach.

Playing the doggies and horsies. Especially at the gorgeous Hialeah Park where the Royal Palms make you dream of fairyland and faraway places.

Playing Santa Claus to a flock of loyal guys who are helping to keep those shootin' galleries open. But it looks like that Santa costume will have to stay in mothballs for another year.

Strolling down Hollywood Boulevard after dark . . . Or taking a dip in the ocean of Southern California's marvelous beaches . . . Visiting Eddie Eckles at the RKO studios . . . Listening to Pete Smith out on the MGM lot talk about those MGM stars . . . Talking shop with Frank Whitbeck as of yore while hearing the choicest assortment of profanity ever uttered.

Or—perhaps—getting into Nashie and starting on a country-wide tour just to see whether those many Round Tablers look as good as I've often pictured them.

NO THEATRE LOCATED within a reasonable distance of children institutions should overlook those unfortunate kiddies who are inmates of such places. For the mighty small cost involved—generally just the electric juice—you can gather as many of them into your theatre as it will hold and give them one of those shows on Christmas morning that will remain stamped indelibly in their minds as one of the bright spots in their otherwise drab existence.

Local bus or traction companies and private individuals will gladly leave the family fireside to bring these youngsters to the theatre. Local merchants will, regardless of good or bad business conditions, support the idea with enough candy and other goodies to help the plan along.

The local newspaper will unquestionably get behind the idea and support it with front page publicity; and there are no limits to the good such a performance can do for your theatre, while at the same time you can feel that you have sponsored a worthwhile idea. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Here's hoping that several thousand managers have the opportunity of going "nerts" this Christmas for the same reason. We have a faint idea that they will all bear up well under the strain.

O'BRIEN USED TRADE REVIEW TO MAKE UP AN AD THAT CLICKED

As a pleasing, attractive variation of advertising style, George O'Brien, owner-manager of the Fargo Theatre, DeKalb, Ill., took a leaf from producers-distributors book by steaming up his newspaper ad on "Klondike" with a review written by a HERALD reporter in Hollywood.

He figured wisely that his public knew nothing about the picture and that a showman's review, written exclusively for the trade, would interest and impress the reader. We can't accurately state just what results were obtained through use of this gag because George mailed his information to the Club the day prior to playing the picture; however, we do know that the paper hadn't been off the press two hours before five people made mention of the novel ad, proving, beyond a doubt, that it attracted attention.

Printing excerpts of complimentary reviews of pictures by local reporters is common practice among the trade, but it's a little out of the ordinary for a theatre to feature a review from a trade paper, even though we recall an instance of several years ago when the Capitol Theatre in New York City blew up a flattering review written by a man on the old "News" to offset adverse criticism made by some budding motion picture critics on Metropolitan newspapers. We also recall that it well served to attract thousands of passers-by to the box office, with its attractive presentation in large blow-up type on an easel placed near the entrance.

But to get back to O'Brien's idea, which was entirely different in that he wished to impress his public with what a trade reporter thought of a picture that hadn't received any press ballyhoo to speak of. He boiled the Hollywood review down to a point where no damage was done and it made a good looking and impressive insert in his ad. He thinks some other Round Tabler might want to try the gag, when confronted with similar circumstances, so shot it in for us to broadcast.

HAPPY NEW YEAR?

Yes sir, that's just what L. J. Wegener, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Clinton, Iowa, wished his patrons via the above ad when ushering in the first day of "Greater Movie Season"—a Happy New Year of Hits. Premature or otherwise, the catchline caught the eye.

MACRIS FOUND THAT BEAUTY CONTEST IS STILL A GOOD STUNT

One of those good old fashioned Beauty Contests had Orestes Macris, manager of the Temple Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y., all excited a short time ago, and we don't think he can be blamed for letting off a little steam in connection with direct results at the box office. Everything went off smoothly, merchants, patrons and all other individuals concerned were well satisfied, and a good time was had by all. What more can anyone ask?

He followed out the plan of getting the ball a-rolling by going to the proprietor of the leading ladies' wear shop in town, who fell strongly for the scheme. This store furnished five models and Orestes, somewhat a judge of pulchritude on his own, selected five more from local ranks. So that no one would be offended he ran an entry blank in the paper to effect that any lady might enter the contest on the second night, which was a nice piece of diplomacy on the part of Macris.

Next he lined up twelve merchants for the promotion of a double truck co-op ad, a copy of which we have before us and would reproduce except for a bad rip. Of course the merchants all tied up with models to represent them at the theatre.

Thus far Macris had a healthy beauty contest well under way for the surprisingly small expenditure of $5. His next problem was music, which was eventually provided by the "Temple Serenaders," recruited by Orestes himself and especially named for the occasion. We now have the cost up to $15, which was the total amount of expense for the entertainment. The several models represented the several merchants and the prizes were awarded by a committee consisting of the Mayor, Town Clerk, a leading business man, two bankers and two doctors. The result was two packed houses the first night and two the second night, with about 50 disappointed patrons turned away.

Good work, Orestes, and we can see that there's plenty of life in Beauty Contests yet, provided, of course, that they've not been overworked. Glad to hear that you did so well with yours and here's credit for everything you accomplished, co-op ad, general success of show, etc.

R. HORNING TIED UP WITH FLORIST FOR A GIVE-AWAY OF ROSES

Distribution of 4,000 heralds calling attention to a give-away of flowers was one of the features in the campaign put over on "Smilin' Through" by R. Hornung, manager of Shea's Theatre, Jamestown, N. Y.

The flower tie-up was made with McCrory's, who not only donated 1,000 artificial flowers for patrons but arranged a special "Smilin' Through Flower Show" for the week. The herald mentioned that a beautiful rose would be presented to every lady patron of the theatre.

Horning also secured windows in a large department store to feature stills of Norma Shearer; two beauty shops for display of hair-style stills of Shearer, and effected a tie-up with a music store to plug the song "Smilin' Through."

VARIETY OF EFFORT FEATURED WORK IN CANGNEY CAMPAIGN

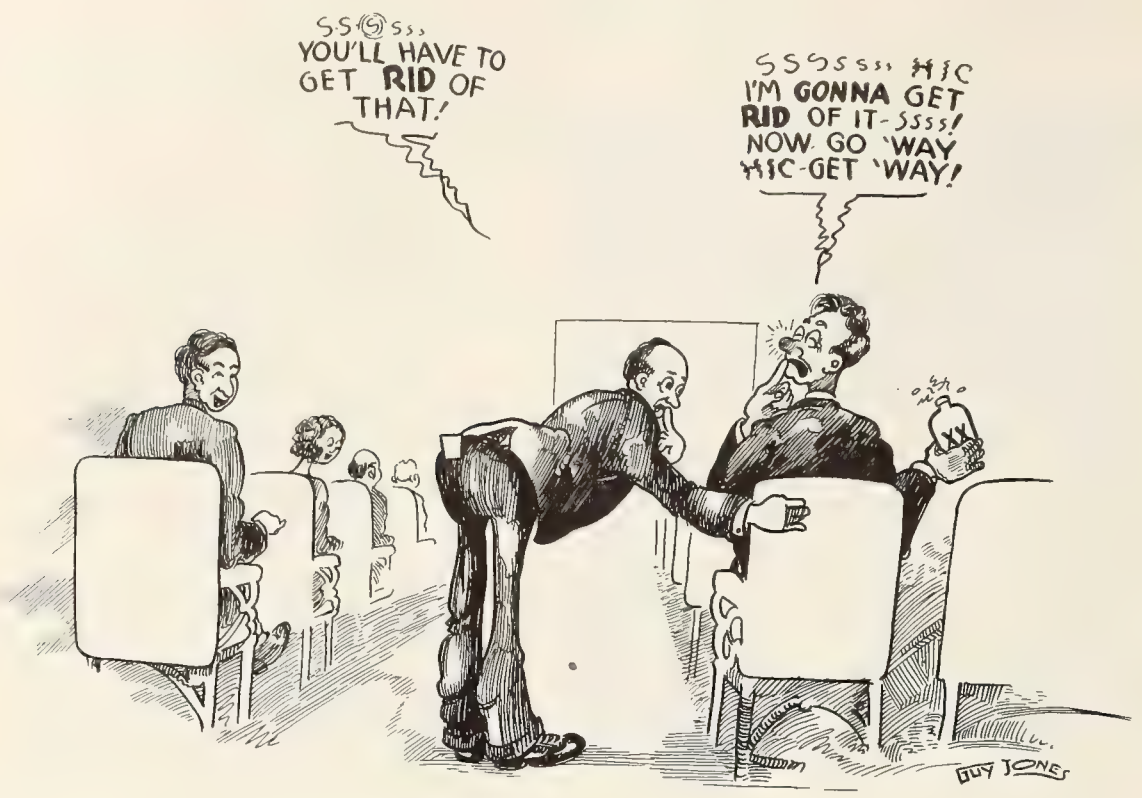
A variety of ballyhoo featured the campaign made on "Successful Calamity" by James Cangney, manager of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Texas.

One of his stunts, the placing of a man atop the marquee, is pictured in the accompanying photo. He sat in a chair and read newspapers, and a sign alongside read: "I am waiting for a 'Successful Calamity.'" This stunt attracted a lot of attention.

Another bally which caused a lot of word-of-mouth publicity was the sale of envelopes of "pictures" to passers-by. The purchasers were not told the nature of the contents and upon opening the envelope photos of the Empire and a small card were found. The card read: "This was a 'Successful Calamity'—You are hooked for a nickel—Get yours back the way I got mine and see—George Arliss in a 'Successful Calamity' at the Empire." The gag was taken good-naturedly and it is assumed by the writer that the nickel was refunded at the box office.

The title also inspired Cangney to revive the wrecked auto stunt by parading a badly dilapidated flivver through the streets. A wrecking car was supplied by a tie-up made with a local garage. The entire, long front of the theatre was attractively bannered: "George Arliss—Your Favorite Star Outdoing His Former Triumphs."

The above is just a sample of the excellent work Cangney has been doing down in San Antone and we're glad to be able to pass along word of his activities to other Round Tablers. We'll tell you more about his showmanship in future issues.



Sparks Names Booth C. M.

M. W. Booth has been appointed city manager of all E. J. Sparks theatres in St. Petersburg, Fla., following the continued illness of veteran theatre manager Harry Griffin. Other changes in effect are: Bob Allison, now manager of the Plaza; Walter Tremor, at the Alcazar, and "Red" Wiles appears slated for the Pheil when that house reopens.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Just another incident in the life of a manager!

WHETHER COTTON IS UP OR DOWN WATERS KEEPS ON PLUGGING

The cotton market may not be up out around Newport, Ark., where Lawrence Waters manages the Capitol Theatre, but that showman's spirits are a long way from being down. It's work, work, work, all the time, in order to produce results, but he's forever on the job.

Not long ago he held a "Harvest of Hits" and obtained excellent results from the move. As a climax to his "Climax Week," when three outstanding feature pictures were the attractions, he promoted a full page ad from his local newspaper, the latter offering "Congratulations to the Capitol Theatre" for presenting such fine shows. Fully half the page was devoted to theatre copy, a boxed portion below carrying newspaper house copy based on: "The Capitol Theatre feels that it is enabled to bring such big hits to Newport only because of consistent advertising in the "Newport Independent."

Tying in for a boost of the newspaper's pull as an advertising medium was a smart move on Waters' part, as the full page co-op bears out. It meant several hundred inches of valuable space at absolutely no cost to theatre, which is a mark being shot at by many a theatre manager these daye. He thinks some other Round Tabler might find the time ripe to put across the same idea, so here tiz!

AL HOSTLER MADE ATTRACTIVE FRONT ON CURRENT FILM

Colors used in the attractive front made for "Blessed Event" by Al (Hustling) Hostler, manager of Warner's Altoona Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., make it next to impossible to reproduce a photograph we happen to have at hand. However, we can tell you that a feature of the display was the huge central figure of a baby riding a stork. The picture's title, lettered in gray on white, stood out prominently, with names of Dick Powell, a former Pittsburgh M. C. who made good in the movies, Mary Brian and Lee Tracy, featured. Thirty stills from the picture and three lobby cards were framed in the layout. The marquee was brightly lit and heavily bannered, making it visible for many blocks distant.

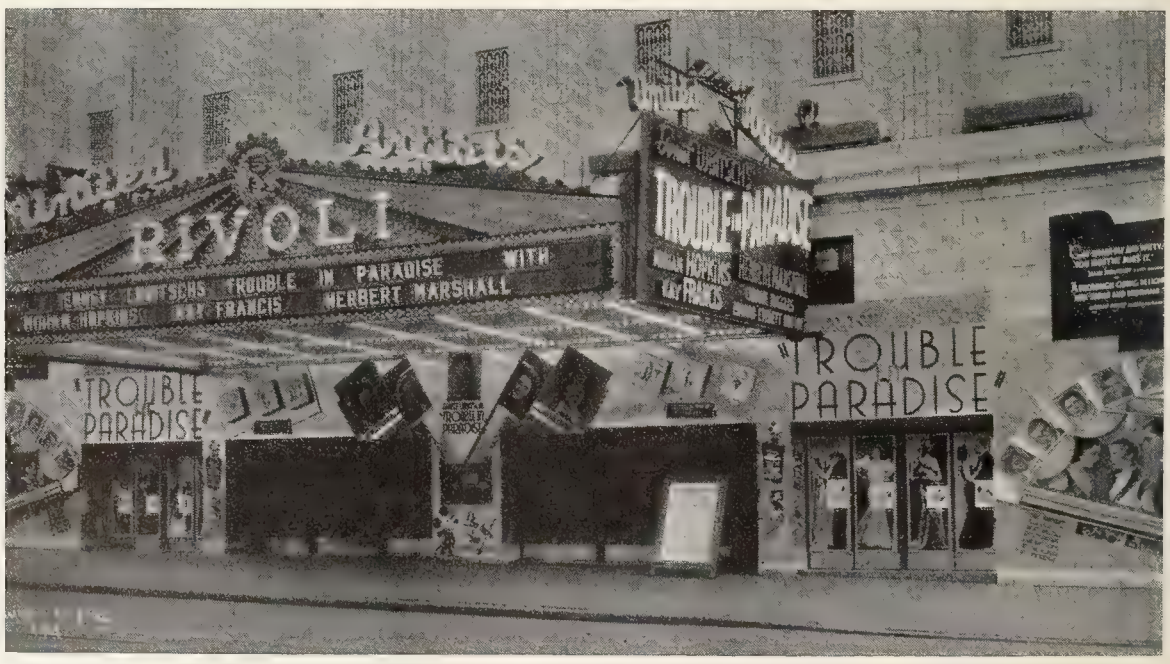
Hostler's front was a splendid example of effective use of white space and light colors. Next time we report on this Round Tabler's activities we'll hope to present more concrete evidence of what he's doing.

CRAITE GIVES FILM A BIG PUSH WHEN IT RATES SPECIAL PLUG

A number of tear-sheets from a Fort Atkinson, Wis., newspaper present evidence that when a good picture comes along I. J. Craite, in charge of the Fort Theatre there, puts his shoulder to the wheel and gives a mighty push.

We refer above to the engagement of "Grand Hotel," which Craite certainly plugged heavily with large display advertising, etc. Anyone in his locality with enough intelligence to read knew that the picture was on its way to town.

We note also that Craites gives his patrons a change of diet occasionally, such as a forty-five minute Hawaiian Revue, etc. This was billed for a Monday night at no advance in admission, which, from the ads, is a thirty-five cent top. On certain nights he advertises "10 Cent Night."



After a long absence from these pages we're glad to have Craite on the active list and hope he'll continue to keep the Club informed on what he's doing these days to boost box office trade. We'll await his next communication with interest.

FRANK SMITH AND STAFF CRASHED TAB FOR SPECIAL SPACE

A Chicago newspaper was recently crashed for a stunt on "Air Mail" by Frank Smith, manager of the RKO, Palace Theatre, and his cohorts, John Joseph, publicity man, and Andy Sharick, "U" exploiteer.

The trio got away with darned near three columns of space in several issues of a popular tabloid (and you know how the tabs hoard space) for a questionnaire dealing with 10 questions concerning air mail service suggested by the Chicago postmaster. Any boy or girl not more than 16 years of age was eligible to compete for the awards. Entries were received at the newspaper office.

ANOTHER ATTRACTIVE RIVOLI FRONT!

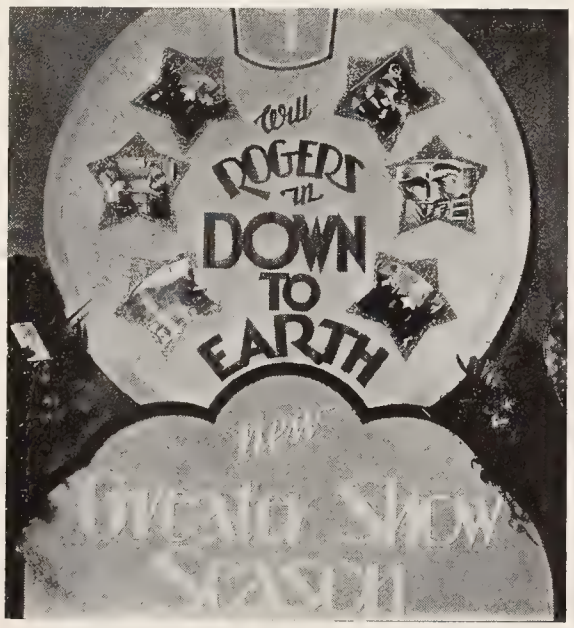
FRANK BOUCHER BUSY PUTTING OVER SHOWS DOWN IN WINCHESTER

Every time we look over data concerning the activities of Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., we wonder how he finds the time to enter into so many schemes for boosting theatre patronage in the conventional 18-hour day's routine. Looks as though he must take catnaps in his office instead of using the other six hours for sleep.

Opened With a Bang!

Among a lot of other things here's a big campaign on opening of Greater Show Season, which ran for four weeks and was one of the largest ever put over in his town. It included a four-page special section in a newspaper and distribution of same in all outlying sections; promotion of 100 inches of free space in section, with total cost of section, including front page, at $25; posting of 200 window cards and 200 one-sheets; endorsements in an editorial and from city officials; special art pieces in lobby; front attractively decorated; free flowers for lobby; banners on trucks through town one week in advance; special program by organist; phone calls to every home in town; careful distribution of week's program; special trailers, and lighting of 24 large railroad flares on opening night. The local newspapers generously supported the occasion with news stories, readers, etc.

When he glanced over the continuity sheet on the McNamee-Capitol newsreel No. 84 and noted that scenes from the famous Red Cross shoe factory were included, he immediately contacted the local dealer in the shoes and arranged for a tie-up which resulted in a cooperative ad in the newspaper. The dealer was also tied-in for a give-away of the shoes to theatre patrons.



When he found out that Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, so-featured in "Guilty As Hell," wore $17.50 suits of clothes while working in the production, he tied-up with a local dealer in reasonably priced clothing to prove to one and all that a good suit could be bought these days for a small outlay of cash. In addition, the clothier arranged for wide distribution of an attractive herald which carried photos of the two stars and gave generous mention to the theatre, attraction and playdates.

Giant Herald Good Gag!

We also have here before our eyes, gentlemen, a copy of the largest herald put out, perhaps, for the largest show ever held in Winchester. It's a whopper, all right, and carries the large photo of So-And-So and His Orchestra in the center. Other copy discloses that the Girls' Athletic Association presented their Mock Wedding; that a stage personality appeared in a special request program, and that a special program of modern music was rendered by the orchestra. The heralds were promoted without cost to the theatre except an outlay of $9.50 for printing, which included 50 free window cards.

Citizens of Winchester inclined to test their expenses in the art of opening safes were given an opportunity to do so when "Jewel Robbery" played the Capitol, according to a story in a local newspaper. The safe was very easy to open, so the story ran, as there were only four numerals in the combination to the small iron safe placed in the theatre lobby, the first of which was 20. All any man, woman or child had to do in order to obtain a pair of guest tickets was to exercise their skill in determining the remaining numerals.

We have several snap-shots showing various other activities around the Capitol but only one of them, owing to shade and lack of sharpness, is clear enough to reproduce. This deals with "Down to Earth" and we think everyone will agree that it was a good looking display. Another shows a front made for "Horsefeathers," which featured large caricature posters atop the marquee and a view of a student band playing in front of the theatre.

Now do you all agree with us that Frank Boucker is a busy showman? As a matter of fact we could go on and on, offering additional proof that he must be on mighty good terms with his newspaper friends down in Winchester, according to this and that news item and reader here and there in various tear sheets. So we'll sign off for this time and look forward to receipt of another batch of material on this Round Tabler's interesting activities.

ACROSS THE CITY DESK!

Here's a Real Timely Article Picked Up from RKO's "Now"; Do You Fit Either Description?

by A City Editor

THEATRE managers? From my point of observation there are two kinds. One type is a considerable pain in the neck. The other is going to find a welcome in my city room. How do I draw the line? I'll answer that, too. The pain in the neck is the manager who is too lazy to study his patrons and his city—and tries to "plant" asinine, uninteresting "plugs" in my paper through friendship or the broadcasting of ducats.

The guy who finds a welcome is the manager who knows his city well enough to realize the element of NEWS when it slaps him in the face—and hands me that type of copy. He's the fellow who gets a break with me.

Here's a bit of advice that you can pass along to the managers of your circuit. If they're wise, if they want to get the benefit of publicity in the news columns of newspapers, let them realize that the editor is trying to satisfy HIS public just as certainly as the theatre manager is trying to satisfy HIS patrons.

It Must Be "News"!

I wouldn't go to a theatre manager and ask him to sell my newspaper from his stage. At least, I wouldn't ask it unless I tied it up in some way which would give to his patrons entertainment, the commodity they paid for when they entered his theatre.

In return, I don't want a manager to hand me a story (and expect me to run it) unless it has in it the thing I am selling to the public. And the thing I'm selling is NEWS.

I can't realize how so many managers pass up opportunities for legitimate publicity—the kind an editor would be glad to print. The stuff is there, in virtually every show, every film, every campaign, if the manager utilizes it. But he can't utilize it unless he knows his city, his people and develops the NEWS sense.

Men sitting behind city desks, whether in New York or Ong's Hat, are interested primarily in one thing—giving their readers the stories about why some star wears a riding habit in a bathing pool. But they are interested (and their readers will be entertained) in a story linking a current attraction with some LOCAL event or movement by a story which reads like a news story and does not carry the press agent brand in every phrase.

Cut the Superlatives!

And superlatives are "out" when I handle theatre copy. I've seen too many thousands of yarns about "Greatest pictures ever made and the most astonishing stage show ever presented." My readers don't believe such fairy tales—and I'm not going to ask them to. In my belief, a sane story, logically written and put together without bombast gets the attention of newspaper readers and sells them an idea. In these days, I don't think Barnum would be 100% right.

I'm open-minded on theatre publicity and I think the majority of editors feel as I do. I'm ready to give a manager or a press agent a break—if he'll remember and respect the purpose of MY job. I'm sitting in this chair, trying in my humble way to give the readers of my paper the thing for which they pay their pennies. That thing is NEWS—and, Mister, you can put that word in bold face caps, for it's one thing which influences a story in this paper.

(NOTE: The sub-heads are ours.—ED.)

WE OFTEN WONDER! By LOU SYLVESTER

We are also wondering whether Lou is referring to Xmas shopping or seasonal art work for the theatres. However, both thoughts are happy ones and will, perhaps, be acted upon after this cartoon makes its appearance.

ED LYNCH PULLED NOVEL STUNT WHEN PLAYING "FUGITIVE"

Taking advantage of the vast amount of nation-wide newspaper publicity accorded the sweat-box tragedy down in Florida a short time ago, Ed Lynch, manager of the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., cashed in on a whale of a lot of word-of-mouth advertising and free space when exploiting "I Am a Fugitive."

He arranged with a reporter on the local newspaper to impersonate imprisonment of a chain-gang victim in an improvised sweat box placed in front of the theatre, betting the reporter that he couldn't stand the gag for over five minutes. The stunt was good for two-column art, caption and a lengthy account of the reporter's experience in next day's paper. Lest the accompanying photo does not reproduce to advantage, let us state that the sweat box, showing the intrepid reporter inside, was equipped with conventional bracelets for neck, arms and legs in order to carry out a realistic set-up.

Lynch's campaign also included use of 24-sheets; 500 window cards; 100 special 40x60 posters; 10,000 "Roosevelt Wins" tabs (similar to those used in the New York campaign); 5,000 door knob hangers; window displays in all book stores, and considerable additional newspaper space. In fact, he went after trade in a big way and returns were excellent.

Ed strongly recommends use of the sweat box as a lobby display which will stop 'em right and left, not only when used with the reporter stunt, but just by itself. That the Florida affair is still fresh in the public mind is an angle not to be overlooked.

A "Hooeywood" Premiere!

Burlesquing the well known west coast first nights, Lew Golden, manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Omaha, Neb., recently turned the prop room topsy-turvy to ballyhoo the appearance of Olsen & Johnson.

Tie-ups were made with a leading local newspaper and Creighton University, the latter supplying plenty of broken down flivvers and "celebrities" of every description. Front and marquee were rigged up in mock splendor by digging up a dilapidated canopy and more color was supplied by red flares and comic cameramen. Olson & Johnson acted as stooges and were all over the lobby. The first two days attendance broke all opening day records at the house.

SANTA CLAUS CAME TO ED HIEHLE VIA 'PLANE AND PARADE

There was a great hullaballoo December 10 out in Newark, Ohio, where Ed Hiehle operates the Midland Theatre, according to the dope on an extra large newspaper ad we have at hand. It announced that Santa Claus would arrive in town on that date and that the kiddies would be in one swell time!

Santa was to arrive by plane, no less, and his arrival was to be heralded by a powerful siren. It was further stated that he would drop by parachute in a secret spot on the outskirts of Newark, from which he was scheduled to proceed to the High School to head a Stupendous Boy, Girl and Pet Parade through the principal streets.

All the boys and girls in town were invited to participate in the parade and to bring along pets, if any, for which valuable gifts were awarded as follows: 1—For the most unique outfit. 2—Boy with funniest make-up. 3—Girl with funniest make-up. 4—Best combination of boy and pet. 5—Best combination of girl and pet. 6—Best movie star character make-up. 7—Best newspaper comic strip character make-up. Awards were made at the "Junior Talent Show," held at the Midland on a Saturday at 1 P. M. Admission to the matinee was ten cents and it was not necessary to attend the show to participate in the parade. Each entrant was given a number and judged accordingly.

Another Xmas stunt that Hiehle announced in the same ad was the placing of a mammoth Santa Claus letter box on a prominent spot on the Court House grounds. As the ad stated: "Santa Claus will gather these letters before he leaves Newark for his next stop, so that he can familiarize himself with the wants and requirements of the children of Newark and Licking County. Sit down and write your letter to Santa and be sure to mail it in the big box. Store exteriors and interiors have been decorated and the show windows will display Santa's latest and finest gift wares."

Next time we hear from Ed Hiehle we'll probably be able to give his fellow Round Tablers full details on the above stunt. We're pushing it along right now with the thought that some other member will want to arrange similar festivities.

As we go to press comes word of Ed's Annual Toy Matinee, held Nov. 26, so that all the toys donated by the 2,000 youngsters who packed the house that day could be repaired and classified for distribution at Xmas time by the Central Xmas Committee, a local relief organization that fills baskets with clothing, goodies and whatnot. A newspaper clipping discloses that cameramen were on hand when city trucks came to haul away the big loads. Hiehle has been pulling this stunt for the past 10 years and this one was the biggest of all.

START THE NEW YEAR RIGHT!

—and the best way to do so is to get under way with a gala midnight show on New Year's Eve. If surrounded with sufficient glamour and a certain amount of mysterious promise as to the affair itself, you should create enough interest and excitement to insure a sell-out.

As to the show itself: extreme care should be exercised in the selection of the screen subjects, and these, if possible, should be augmented with proper stage talent.

If a theatre full of people leave your house after a successful midnight show on New Year's Eve, that crowd will be goodwill dispensers for many weeks after. As a money-maker, these midnight parties can always show a handsome profit if smart showmanship is at the helm.

BROWN RECOGNIZES INSTITUTIONAL WORK AS AID TO THEATRE

The value of institutional exploitation is strongly recognized by Fred Brown, manager of the Fox Theatre and director of other Fox houses in Green Bay, Wis., and in order to show his fellow Club members exactly what he has in mind, we'll attempt to describe a stunt that took considerable time and effort to bring to a successful conclusion.

Fred Brown

Three years ago when Green Bay had two park commissioners but very slim attendance at the summer playgrounds, Brown induced the city authorities to stage a Doll Buggy Parade. Each child who entered the pageant was given a pass to the theatre for the current attraction and the event was well patronized by both children and their parents. This year the Doll Parade reached the proportions of a civic event.

In all seven parades that Brown has held in the parks his theatre has stolen the show. Approximately 64,000 people have attended the parades and the theatre obtained credit in over 200 inches of free editorial space. Many will ask what real benefit, outside of the foregoing, came from all the time and effort put forth to promote these affairs and Brown will answer this question with the statement that he had four boy acrobats, dressed like Mickey Mouse, cavort in front of their large audience. While the parade was on the loudspeaker system also announced the current program at the theatre, as well as the donation of guest tickets to the entrants. To further capitalize on the event, "grand finals" were held on the theatre stage, with winners from each park on hand. Capacity trade resulted from the move.

Brown does not mean by the above that managers should neglect exploitation of individual pictures, because he and his crew do not miss anything in this respect. He invariably has some street bally or house-to-house gag in effect and proper stress is made on other exploitation and advertising angles. However, he does believe that institutional selling, such as promotion of Park Parades, etc., are of immense value as producers of the right kind of publicity for any theatre that gets behind such a move. He has also tried out a "Million Dollar Baby" stunt and perhaps he'll send us full details. In the meantime, we wish this progressive member of the Round Table Club continued success. He has held a number of managerial posts in this field and we predict his future contributions to this department will be read with much interest.

Dugger Publix D. M. in Southwest

J. B. Dugger, for several years manager for Publix in Dallas, Texas, has been promoted to the post of district manager for the company in the southwest division. The move follows the recent halving of territory formerly under Harry Balance, when New Orleans, Memphis, Jacksonville, Atlanta and Charlotte were given to Oscar Morgan.

COAST INGENUITY

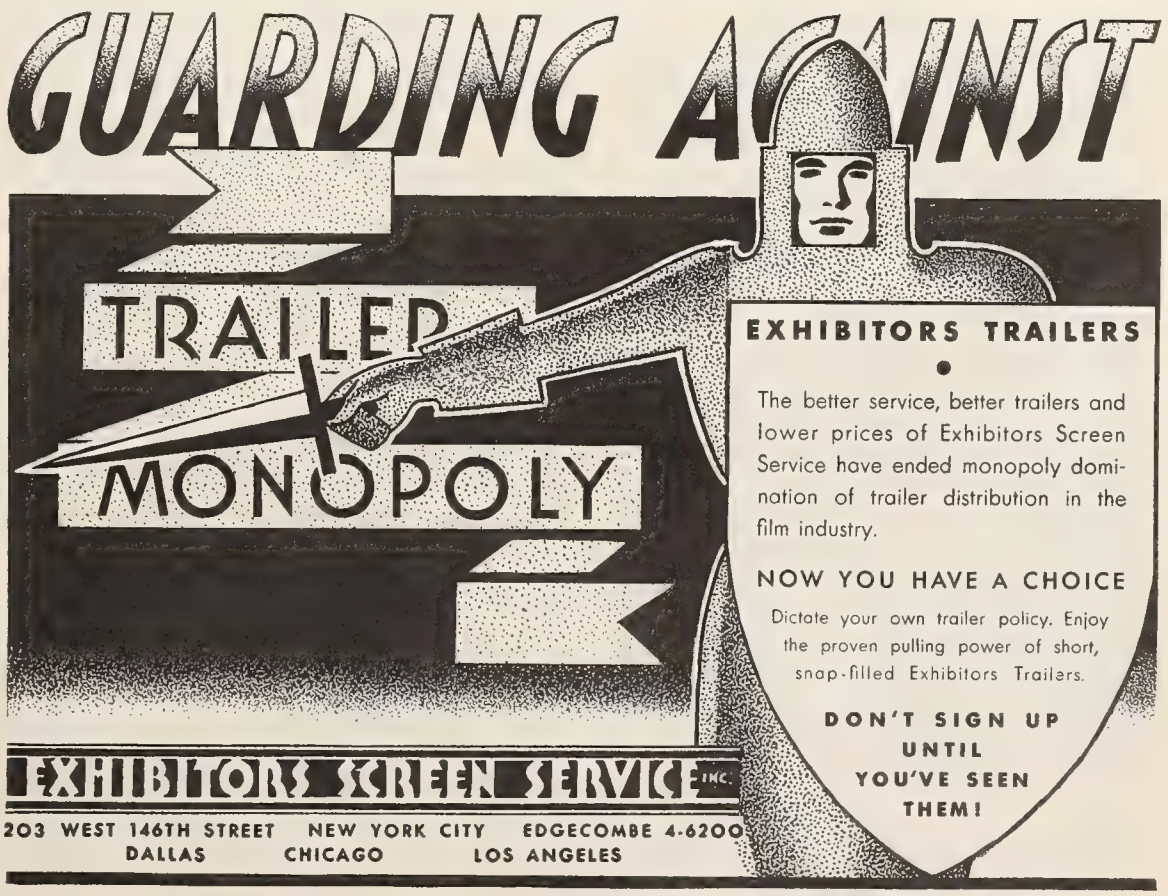
When exploiting "Big Broadcast," H. T. Lashley, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Greenville, S. C., found a number of local radio dealers receptive to a cooperative ad.

He lined them up in advance for a series of co-op ads, each one giving the theatre a generous slice of space, and on opening night they came through for a give-away at the theatre of one of the most expensive models. The stunt took care of opening and the picture had what it took to return excellent business for remainder of date.

It's not at all surprising to hear that City Manager Lashley has been out lining up local merchants for ads that rate free space and promoting give-aways, for that's one of his regular activities. He and the other Palmetto Amusement fellows are always on the job and we'll tell you more soon.

GOOD WORK DONE BY HERMAN LORENCE ON "PROSPERITY" FILM



A front page boost by the Mayor, wide distribution of stickers, window streamers and napkins, and a novel "dividend" give-away, were salient points of the campaign made on "Prosperity" by Herman Lorence, manager of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

In fact, in addition to the Mayor's proclamation on the first page of the local newspaper, which mentioned the picture by title and described it as a "vivid portrayal of a state of mind to which people should permit themselves to become adjusted," the whole neighborhood became prosperity-minded due to Lorence's efforts.

Everyone who went into a cafeteria was confronted with 20,000 paper napkins imprinted with title, name of theatre and play-dates and supplied free by the restaurant except for cost of imprinting. Everyone who glanced at shop windows saw one of the 800 window streamers that announced: "Prosperity Week Is Here"; to say nothing of the 15,000 stickers that bore the same copy.

Distribution of 10,000 novel "Prosperity Bonds" about town proved a neat gag. Each one was good for "100 Shares of The Laughing Stock of America," and more and more copy in the same vein. It was also stated that the bearer should bring the certificate to the Strand during "Prosperity Week" and share in a special dividend. The certificates were a good, if inexpensive, imitation of the kind regularly used. You can guess, yourselves, that the "dividend" was handled in the fashion usual to give-aways, etc.

Lorence has been doing some aggressive campaigning since he took over management of the Strand and there's every indication that the box office is flourishing as the result of his effective work. We predict that Club members will look forward with interest to further accounts of his activities. We will tell you more about his novel exploitation work in future issues.

THE THEATRE FRONT

Real Box Office Appeal Can Be Applied Via Paint and Brush, According to This Fine Artist!

by IRVING SINCLAIR

THE entertainment-shopping population of a given district would, at first glance, appear to be a limited circulation in the measurement of box office appeal. There is, nevertheless, a tremendous importance attached to the lobby display of a theatre. No need to tell this to a live manager. He knows it. He knows that the men in the Art Department of his theatre must be showmen as well as artists. He has lived with good, and with inferior, craftsmen.

There have been nickel hoarders who, in this era of all too true depression, have dispensed with elaborate display. They have one-sheeted the fronts of first class houses, and have lived to rue the idea. The public, they find, reacts with uncanny psychology in the face of cheapness.

The luxurious sweep of a well executed, colorful, original lobby has a drawing power often extending, through word of mouth, far beyond the mere front house of the theatre in question. A good manager knows that there are artists even among patrons, and that many a lay person has a feeling for the correctness of things.

Mr. Sinclair Painting the Garbo Poster

Good Lobbies an Asset!

In fact, the general public wants good lobbies. It has been educated up to a certain expectation of beauty. It leaves its humdrum daily existence for the express purpose of forgetting such realities, it searches for glamour. The first sock in the jaded eye is, of course, the front house lobby.

The artist aims to create novel ideas to tempt the gaze of the casual passerby. Managers often rely upon the lobby to sell a "dud," and the artist's ingenuity is, in fact, always necessary to sell any picture.

One artist's forte may be oil, another's pastel or water color. Oil has always seemed to me to be a bolder, more arrestive, and above all a richer medium. However, I do not make the mistake of using it in instances where it is uncalled for. Pencil and pastel, water color and air-brush all have their special value. Some photoplays call for caricature, or lightness, or delicacy, in which the employment of oil would be oppressive.

In doing Star heads the artist endeavors to make them a shade more handsome and theatrical than he sees them in the still photograph from which he is painting. In working on sexy "clinches" he injects voluptuousness into the woman's form and passion into the man's gaze. These tricks often have their desired effect upon the minds of the shoppers. As a matter of fact, there must be an appeal of some sort in the fundamental idea of any lobby display, even if it be only "atmosphere appeal," as has been the case in many Western, war, Spanish and Oriental lobbies.

And speaking of "stills," it is the far-flung cry of all theatre artists that the Hollywood Studios make better photographs, since the still photographs of the motion picture sequences are the very backbone upon which a lobby is built. When an artist has good photos from which to work he will very likely turn out an excellent front. It is next to impossible to get a good likeness from a photograph in which the detail is poor. And the Hollywood photographer sometimes loses sight of the why and wherefor of his business.

The advance photos for a Road Show are usually much more carefully made than are those accompanying a mere program picture. A complete and elaborate set of the more tense dramatic sequences of the photoplay are sent to all art departments and it remains for the artists to decide upon various angles from which to sell the picture.

In the creation of a lobby for GRAND HOTEL I attempted a rather unusual treatment. I made a straight portrait several times larger than life-size of each of the seven stars in this production. The idea, somewhat to my surprise, rated special newspaper publicity.

Accompanying this article there are several reproductions of the GRAND HOTEL lobby. Upon inspecting the portraits one sees that it was my endeavor to present the characters in their most alluring and salable moods. For instance, Lewis Stone played the somewhat obnoxious part of a Doctor whose face bore a hideous disfigurement. A faithful reproduction of this character might send a chicken-hearted shopper far from the theatre. Therefore Mr. Stone looked out from his lobby frame happily minus disfigurement.

Joan Crawford I endowed with flaming hair and provocative flesh, an arrogant Flammchen challenging the world to great regret if it does not stop in to see her performance in GRAND HOTEL.

Garbo, I had striven to represent as a piquant, wistful, fleetingly happy Grusinkaya, of whom one yearns to know more.

MANAGER FRIED SURE GETS AWAY WITH LOT OF NEWSPAPER SPACE

Several copies of a neighborhood newspaper at hand testify beyond all doubt that Sam Fried, manager of the Parthenon Theatre, Randforce house over in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, doesn't need to be announced when he makes calls on his newspaper boy-friends.

We don't know just what sort of treatment Sam gives his publisher-friend, but you can believe us when we tell you that stealing a whole front page is just a mere incident in Sam's young life. It's just an every-day occurrence to read a large, front page streamer announcing that "White Zombie Is Coming"; or, "Spectacular Film at Parthenon and Glenwood Brings New Life To Screen"; or, perhaps, a more subtle head such as—"Scandal Smears Ridgewood." The latter tied-in the arrival of "Blessed Event" at the theatre and the announcement that the paper would feature a column called "Strictly Confidential," which would bare the private lives of Ridgewood round-the-towners. We wouldn't be at all surprised to hear that Eddie Boyce, author of the column, is Sam himself, for he's certainly been out in his neck of Brooklyn long enough to find out a few things.

All we can add is Okay, Sam, and more power to you for grabbing such a lot of valuable publicity. Maybe you'll drop the Club a line some day and let us in on the secret of your success, so that we can pass this very worthwhile tip along to the other fellows. Whatever your system is, we'll say it's good!

ON THE WAY!

The Club is fortunate in having in its possession complete data on the fine campaign waged in behalf of Greater Movie Season by Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va. Just as soon as time and space permit, this department will take pleasure in presenting it in detail to all Round Tablers.

A NEW KIND OF CO-OP!

SIXTH ANNIVERSARY was celebrated in a lavish manner a few weeks ago by the Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla., and included a gala week of outstanding screen and stage attractions, kiddies' matinee, special invitations, dancing in the lobby and special radio broadcast. The affair was ably handled by Jesse L. Clark, supervisor of E. J. Sparks theatres in the district; Jack Fitzwater, manager of the Tampa, and his efficient staff.

The week started off with a Kiddies' Matinee at 10 A. M. on Saturday and during the ensuing week a number of popular stage personalities, radio singers and a well known organist contributed their bit. Couples married in '26 were also invited to join with the Tampa in celebration of their anniversaries by attending the theatre as guests of the management. The Birthday

Dancing Party in the lobby and broadcast of this festivity was one of the outstanding features.

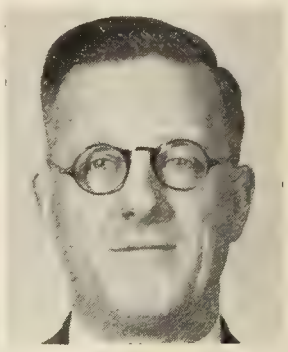
As a testimonial to the Tampa a local newspaper assisted with the promotion of a double truck cooperative ad among a large number of merchants. It was a corker, as you may see for yourselves by the reproduction herewith. At last something different in the way of co-ops, to our way of looking at it, and its general scheme reminds us of the old-time olio drops which are still in evidence in "Opery" houses in many sections of the country.

But wasn't that a novel way to set up the spread? Instead of arranging a flock of ads in the cut-and-dried style, Fitzwater and his associates used a street scene, names on buildings, signs, trucks and other spots to credit the many merchants and advertise the fact that all were in on the Tampa's Big Week.

And was that an attractive display fashioned by the art department for the inner lobby! As you see from the accompanying photo, the place that extended across the entire width of the lobby bore large cutouts of Bing Crosby and John Barrymore, both featured in attractions for the week. In the upper portion of the center the figure of a youngster held the ribbons which ran to candle replicas for the Tampa's six years' existence as a theatre.

The Tampa has often been described as one of the handsomest theatres in Florida. It was built from plans drawn by the well-known John Eberson and the Hispano-Italian style, particularly appropriate for Florida's historical background, was lavishly followed out. Congratulations to Jesse Clark, Manager Fitzwater and their staff for putting over a good job, to say nothing of that splendid co-op.

PHILLIPS PROMOTED LOT OF FREE SPACE WHEN HE REOPENED



Over 600 inches of free space is hereby chalked up to the credit of Ralph E. Phillips, manager of the State Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., on occasion of his return to that city and reopening of the theatre for the fall and winter season.

The large ad was headed "Welcome Back! Chattanooga Welcomes the Reopening of the State—Chattanooga Welcomes Back As Manager Mr. Ralph Phillips," etc., etc. Balance of copy pointed out the State's importance as a city institution and included endorsements of about a dozen local concerns. We scarcely need add that the theatre and current show received a good break for a display ad.

Nice work, Ralph, and a mighty effective way of breaking the ice on occasion of your return to town. Now let's hear what took place in exploitation activities following the theft of all that free space.

CLUB GETS LINE ON WHAT JOHN TREWHELA DOES FOR A LIVING

When one of our newly elected Round Tablers includes show-selling data with his application, that's the way we like to see him make his debut in this department. We refer to none other than John W. Trewhela, manager of the Fox-Judith Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho, for right off the bat we can give his fellow showmen a slant on what he and his staff have been doing of late.

To make the introduction complete, we'll call attention to the small photo. That's John himself. The other photo shows the very attractive front fashioned for "Congorilla" by Oscar Wilson, lobby display artist, and his assistant, Linn Casey. It registered in a big way, reports Trewhela, and materially helped the picture play to a packed house. We also note that a relative of Frank Buck's was discovered out in Lewiston by the theatre management and this fact, along with a corking boost for the picture, found its way into a column on the front page of the local newspaper.

A glance at a tear-sheet from the same newspaper discloses that he also tied-up with the classified ad department for the granting of guest tickets to those who inserted ads during a designated week. Another tear-sheet shows the fine cooperative page he and the newspaper boys worked up on "Congorilla," with the picture getting a great break right in the center of the page. About a dozen merchants participated.

His Mickey Mouse Club also appears to be in a flourishing condition and during a recent Birthday Matinee he arranged to give away large balloons to all the youngsters. Furthermore, on these occasions he takes special space in the newspaper to herald the event.

Trewhela has a fine house out in his town and it boasts the largest stage of any theatre in the state of Montana. We have some interesting picture post cards at hand, showing sections of Lewiston and surrounding country. Our eyes immediately lit on one captioned "Spring Creek—Famous Trout Stream," and, believe us, John, if we ever get out your way again it certainly would be a treat to fish that good looking piece of water. What say? In the meantime, however, we'll await further news from you and your staff.

PRE-ELECTION STUNT WORKED OUT BY BOYD MADE HIT WITH FANS

A pre-Election Day stunt that brought a lot of sizzling publicity to the RKO Albee Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, was recently tried out by Manager Boyd.

He placed a microphone in the lobby, wired through to a local station, and twice daily patrons were allowed to participate in the "First Radio Straw Vote Ever Taken." They stated their names, professions, party choice, ideas on the bonus and prohibition questions and gave their low-down on respective candidates. The stunt kept patrons all "het-up" for a whole week and fitted in nicely with the run of "Washington Merry-Go-Round" at the Lyric, another local RKO house.

Incidentally, while on the subject of the RKO Lyric, Clem Pope, RKO city manager, advises us that Manager Hastings is supervising a dance class, which we will attempt to tell you more about later on if Hastings or Clem will come through with details.

Boyd's election gag was a corker all right and we can very well see that it made a great hit with a public supercharged with thoughts about the coming national election. It's a good one to file away under this classification, fellows, or to use, perhaps, for some other event you may be able to fit it to.

TOILET CLEANLINESS!

If there is any part of your theatre demanding close attention it is your toilets. Yet, you can walk into hundreds of theatres and find these rooms foul-smelling and an insult to your patrons.

Particularly on those days when the kiddies predominate, you must exercise extreme caution and make frequent trips to those rooms to make sure that they are fit for the use of your patrons.

Toilets, especially in the busy theatres, cannot wait until the following day for a mopping or cleaning. This is necessary every hour or two and be positive that the toilet paper holders are full, too. In ladies' rooms you should make doubly sure that everything is O.K., because nothing will chase away the ladies quicker than dirty lounge rooms and toilets.

There is nothing delicate about this subject. It's as important as any phase of your theatre's operation; so just check up a lot more in the future than you have in the past, to be certain that your hired help is not overlooking or neglecting the toilets.

New Publicity Set-Up

A new set-up in the Fox publicity department, New York City, includes Morris Helprin, formerly with Paramount, who will serve under Earl Wingart, recently with Paramount as publicity manager. Resignations include Mike Vogel, Edward Eustace and E. F. Simpson.

GILLMAN'S SWELL BALLYHOO!

SEE the funny looking gazebos? And the animal that is not a bull? The combination represents a novel street bally used by S. A. Gillman, manager of Loew's Parkway Theatre, Baltimore, to exploit Laurel & Hardy in "Pack Up Your Troubles" and, from what we hear, the stunt tied up traffic and brought out the police.

Two ushers were dressed in clothes similar to those worn by Laurel & Hardy and caricature heads made from papier mache. The model cow was promoted from a local dairy concern and carried a banner reading "This Is No Bull," and other copy pertaining to picture, theatre and playdates. The bally attracted such a large crowd that a hurry call had to be made to the police department for help to straighten out traffic, which suggested to Gillman the faking of an arrest.

The playing off of this comedy also suggested a "Laff Week" program, which included a Charley Chase two-reeler and a Betty Boop cartoon. The Week was played up on the marquee sign and on 5,000 heralds distributed from house to house. Lines such as "Laff Week," "All Comedy Show" and "Barrels of Fun"—the latter painted on two barrels placed atop the marquee—were used to advertise the occasion.

Results at the close of the Week were all that could be looked for and considerable credit for the excellent returns is attributed to the novel bally. The papier mache heads look mighty good to us and there's no reason why these couldn't be used again and again on future Laurel & Hardy attractions. As near as we can learn the heads were obtained from the M-G-M home exchange in New York and if other Club members want to invest the small amount necessary to secure a pair of them, we'd suggest getting in touch with your local exchange. The "No Bull" idea, Gillman tells us, was inspired from a cartoon run in this department some time ago.

Lest we forget, let us also credit Assistant Manager R. F. Etchberger for his share in the Laff Week campaign. We'll be looking for further news concerning the show-selling activities of these men because we like the way they do things.

HERE'S PROOF FROM SWANK THAT CO-OPS GO IN SMALL TOWNS

In order to prove to the man who doubts the possibility of promoting a full page co-operative ad in small towns we are presenting facsimile evidence of one that was put over by M. M. Swank, manager of the Nova Theatre, Stockton, Kas.

With "All American" booked for Armistice Night, Swank called on his newspaper friends and together they cooked up the attractive page reproduced here. He designed the ad, using a re-vamp of a stock mat, with copy built around the local "Big Game" of the season. The merchants who stood the cost were given credit for the free tickets for the team and Pep Club, but the theatre actually stood this portion of the expense. In addition to lining up the merchants' signatures the newspaper came through with a corking publicity story on the front page.

"Give us small town fellows more dope on how to sell our shows," S. O. S's Round Tabler Swank and we are hereby broadcasting his message to other Club members similarly situated. It takes real shows, he tells us, to bring patrons to town after the cows and chickens have been put to bed and unless there's a good attraction in town the Fords are also put to roost for the night. So come on through, fellows, and let's us see what you can do to help this member out, even though he appears to be getting on pretty well with his own ideas.

AN EXCELLENT GROUP OF ADS FROM DIFFERENT TOWNS AND CITIES DEMONSTRATING AGAIN HOW EFFECTIVE EXCHANGE MATS CAN BE IN THE MAKE-UP OF GOOD NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING. THEIR USE IF STRONGLY RECOMMENDED TO EVERY SHOWMAN WHO HAS STILL TO EMPLOY THEM IN HIS SHOW SELLING VIA THE LOCAL NEWSPAPERS!

(C) Explain, in some detail, the basic principle or reason electricity is able to perform work. Sounds hard, but if you think the matter over it is really very simple. (D) What term is used to express work performed by current and how may we determine what horsepower is used when power consumption is so expressed? (E) Just what is the physical effect of resistance overcome by electric current. Note the physical.

Answer to Question No. 147

Question No. 147 was: "(A) In examining a diagrammatic illustration of alternating current, as per Page 6, Vol. 1, of your Bluebook, what do the various lines represent? (B) Explain the action of the generation of one cycle of alternating current. By that it is meant, tell us at what point the voltage starts, how the voltage rises and how long it takes for it to rise to maximum and what is happening to the amperage at the same time; also, what happens after the voltage has reached its peak. (C) Explain why alternating current reverses its direction

Some of the answers are absolutely correct, and others sufficiently so to get by. Those whose answers were correct are:

Lester Borst, C. Rau and E. Evans, G. E. Doe, Gale Danielson, J. Wentworth, T. Van Vaulkenburg, W. S. Andrus, B. Diglah and O. Garling, D. Holler and B. Eilers, A. Bailey, S. Kay, M. L. Tomlinson, H. There are a large number of answers to Section A suitable for publication. I have selected that of T. Van Vaulkenburg:

"The diagram referred to is conventional. It is a horizontal line which, at its left end, joins the center of a vertical line. The horizontal line, in its length, represents seconds of time. The vertical line represents voltage.

"Over and under the horizontal line are blunt-tipped triangles formed by one continuous line which starts from the junction of the horizontal and vertical lines, passes upward and then again down, and then, after having formed one of the aforesaid triangles, crosses it downward, where the process is repeated in reverse, and so on as far as one may find it desirable to carry the line.

"Thus a series of triangles are formed above and below the line which exactly represent the action of a. c. as follows. The horizontal line represents time in its length, but in its position up and down it represents zero in voltage. The triangle line leaves the intersection of the two lines and moves upward and away from the vertical line. The upward movement represents rise in voltage, and since voltage in a closed circuit represents amperage as well, it also may represent current flow. The movement of the line away from the vertical line represents time, its total slope representing the time required for one alternation. When the line (voltage) has reached its apex, it drops downward, with the same slope (time), until it reaches the time-zero voltage line, whereupon the process is repeated in reverse on the under side of the horizontal line, whereupon two alternations (one complete cycle) has been completed."

I don't know what you chaps think about it, but that I regard as the best verbal explanation I have yet seen of such a diagram.

(B) I believe we must hand the palm to H. Edwards on this one, though Rau and Evans and some others did mighty well, too. Edwards says:

"This I believe may only be done by examining the action of a single coil on the armature of a single-magnet generator. Remembering that current is generated when a conductor cuts lines of magnetic force, and that lines of magnetic force will not be cut when a conductor is moving in the same direction the said lines are, and that current in the conductor will move in a direction at right angles to the direction the conductor is moving (see text, Page 7, Vol. 1 of Bluebook, and Fig. 1), let us examine into the matter.

"The magnetic poles (N and S) will be on opposite sides of the armature. Lines of magnetic force will move straight across from N to S through the armature. The coil (conductor) will be rotating, of course. When it is in vertical position both its sides will be moving either with or directly against the lines of force and cutting across none of them. The voltage of our coil is therefore at zero. As the conductor continues to rotate one side of it begins to cut down and the other up through the lines, and across them; therefore voltage is generated, and in increasing amount as a greater number of lines are cut, until the coil is in horizontal position, where the greatest number are cut. It then passes on around, cutting less and less, until it again is in vertical position and voltage at zero, whereupon the process is repeated, but with the other wire or coil side rising and the one that before ascended now descending, and since the current generated must always flow in one direction, the direction of the current in the coil and whatever the coil is connected to, is reversed. When once more the coil attains vertical position the voltage has again fallen to zero and one cycle has been completed."

(C) On this, Dale Danielson says:

"To properly answer this I will first state one of Faraday's principles: 'When a conducting circuit is moved in a magnetic field so as to alter the lines of force passing through it, a current is induced therein, in a direction at right angles to the direction of motion, and at right angles also to the direction of the lines of force, as viewed from a point from which the motion originated.' Thus, in an alternator, when one coil (Fig. 1, Page 7, Vol. 1, Bluebook) is moved in a field of magnetic lines, the current must flow in one direction, as from the above stated principle. When this coil has turned half around and the other half is cutting lines of force, the current induced flows in the same direction. But as the coil is reversed the flow is reversed in the coil itself, and through the brushes and rings the external circuit is still connected to the same sides of the coil it was formerly. Consequently the external current flow is reversed every cycle."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Gracella and Theodore
Baltimore Century

Here's a novelty adagio and singing act in three scenes. First is the medieval. The second part is done through a special drop with cat and dog masks and included an aria from an opera. Third come jungle scenes and adagio dancing. There was big applause.

Manuel
Detroit Hollywood

Manuel performs on a slack wire without the usual parasol. In Mexican attire, with a flat bottle, he staggers along the wire like an inebriate bound for disaster. This striking novelty wins large applause.

The Four Normans
Detroit Fox

These jugglers seem to exhaust the possibilities for varied novelty with Indian clubs. They work four in a line, criss-cross in a square and three to one, interspersing their act with a good brand of comedy.

INSTRUMENTAL

Paul Whiteman & Orchestra
New York Capitol

After opening with his famous "Rhapsody in Blue," Whiteman introduces Ramona, pianiste in the orchestra, who favors with a low-down rendition of a gal named "Birmingham Bertha." The Rhythm Boys then harmonize with "Jig Time," and get plenty of laughs with a novelty impersonation bit themed around the "Scat Song." Whiteman scores with a violin solo of "When Day Is Done," after which Goldie, the trumpeter, offers a bit of clowning. Irene Taylor, blues singer, gets over nicely with "Underneath the Harlem Moon," Jack Fulton aces with "Say It Isn't So," and Peggy Healy, audition winner, gets hot with "Fit as a Fiddle" and "Dinah," for a good reception. The orchestra features a special arrangement of "Dark Eyes," and Paul closes the entertaining show by introducing two Harlemites who offer a hot "Lindy Hop."—H. P.

Col. Feodor Maybohm (12) And His Russian Revels
Baltimore Hippodrome

The routine was practically the same used by this troupe for some time, with the Colonel directing. There are the two girl violinists, the girl toe dancer who gives the bronze buddha dance, and the girl acrobatic dancer, with some Russian steps by the Colonel and another man in the troupe. All went over in a fast manner.

Recording Service Moves

National Sound Recording Service, Inc., has removed its New York studio to 729 Seventh avenue. Leonard Herzig is head of the organization.

Patrons Request Additional Music

Fourteen of 32 patrons of the Cohen Theatres in Detroit requested that the management return Bob Clarke, organist, in place of the screen organlogues now in use, in the course of a patron reaction plan inaugurated by Ben and Lou Cohen, who operate the houses.

The definite indication of the desire on the part of patrons for the musical entertainment in addition to the screen attraction was further emphasized by the fact that several persons requested a larger orchestra than the present 10-piece novelty band now used. Also a few patrons asked the return of Eddie Loughton, who previously acted as master of ceremonies. Comedy-drama was indicated as the most acceptable type of screen entertainment.

The management utilized a card method of obtaining reactions.

Spitalny Partner in Radio Talent and Program Bureau

H. Leopold Spitalny, musical director for Publix Balaban and Katz, Chicago circuit, and Martin A. North, formerly with the McJunkin Advertising Company, have organized a radio talent and program bureau in Chicago.

The bureau is described as the first in Chicago to provide a complete planning and supervising service, in connection with the maintenance of a talent service. Records are made of all available talent and kept on file, so that the sponsor may select the voice desired without the necessity of individul interviews.

Named Canada Radio Head

Hector Charlesworth, prominent as a dramatic critic in Toronto for many years, has been appointed chairman of the new National Radio Commission with headquarters in Ottawa at a salary of $10,000 a year. The commission has been created by the Dominion government for the purpose of carrying on the business of broadcasting in Canada, including the control of commercial stations.

Named NBC Program Director

Frank Black, conductor and composer, has been named general program director of the National Broadcasting Company. The appointment becomes effective immediately. Mr. Black will work under the supervision of John Royal, vice-president in charge of programs.

DANCERS

Sammy Krevoff
Buffalo Hippodrome

"Dance Impressions," with Fay Galpin, Eleanor Rumrill, Grace Walsh and Edith Donnan, is attractively mounted and costumed and made considerable of an impression. Besides Krevoff's solo work and the girls' ballet dancing, impressions also are offered of Anna Pavlowa, Marilyn Miller, Harriet Hoctor and others.

John and Edna Torrence (2)
Detroit Michigan

This act is marked by the versatility of the Torrences, and more particularly by the slender gracefulness of Miss Torrence. Their first number is a delightfully smooth piece of ballroom dancing, to the haunting strains of "At the Masquerade," immediately followed by a jazz number of torrid temperature. In their second appearance, the Torrences are aided somewhat by twelve shapely girls of the chorus, and by the novelty and lavishness of the setting.

SINGERS

Brooklyn Metropolitan

Brooklyn's own Gus Van drew them into the Met this week and offered the audiences his inimitable dialect characterizations in a cycle of well chosen numbers. He got off to a good start with his opening number, "Come on Prosperity," and followed it up with a visit in song and dialect "around the town," for closing. Here is a first class "name" act that audiences can't fail to like.—E. D.

Bernice Claire
New York Paramount

Miss Claire, with a charming stage personality and a pleasing soprano, opens with a Victor Herbert semi-classic and then offers a medley of songs themed in the various pictures in which she had appeared.—H. P.

COMEDY

Chic Kennedy
Boston Metropolitan

Miss Kennedy's appearance gives the audience the expectation of a love ballad, but instead she sings "Gas House" song, taking the audience by storm. She follows with laughable portrayal of the farmer's daughter, the farmer, the villain and the whole police force.

ACROBATICS

Pasquali Brothers (3)
Buffalo Buffalo

These gymnasts and tumblers have one of the most sensational acts of its kind now being offered. Instead of slow building up for thrills they go through their routine with such aplomb that the hardest stunts look easy. They got a good round of applause.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) offered for his organ solo selections from Ziegfeld's "Showboat." Opening with "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," Jesse modulates into "Make Believe," the vocal chorus sung by a boy behind a colonial scrim, while a girl also behind the scrim answers with "Why Do I Love You?" Crawford then finales with "Ol' Man River," with an effective Mississippi river scene flashed on the scrim.

EDDIE WEAVER (New Haven Paramount) currently presents an entertaining organ novelty, entitled "All Around the Town." He builds it up with talk and parody on local affairs and achieves an outstanding and interesting solo. The basic idea is a novel way of presenting the requests for songs from patrons from the different locales around New Haven. These numbers are: "Another Cup of Coffee," then "Humoresque" and "Swanee River" simultaneously, one with the left and one with the right hand; "Sure of Everything," "Two Hearts," and a finale of "Please." The solo opens with a cleverly written parody and special lyrics to "East Side," and a smartly worded oral introduction by the popular Weaver. This young chap has been at this same house for the past six years and still is going strong.

TED CRAWFORD (Phoenix Orpheum) recently presented a colorful and entertaining organ solo which he called "At the Bal Masque." Opening with a chorus of the sensational hit, "Masquerade," at the finish of which he registered the organ at a kinura solo stop, with harp accompaniment, and played a chorus of the old hit, "When Lights Are Low." Following this with a bright passage of "Loin Du Bal," brilliantly played on the orchestral bells, and a vocal chorus of "Masquerade," on the non-synchronous device, with full organ accompaniment at the finish, Crawford built up a spectacular climax with the aid of lighted lanterns. Crawford and his solo earned the tremendous applause.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) offered a recent solo, "The Evolution of the Waltz." Selections included many old waltz hits, including "The Blue Danube," "Three o'Clock in the Morning," and "After the Ball." These numbers were accompanied by pictures of dancers waltzing upon the screen and between numbers Al played several partial parodies on memories, including "Should Auld Acquaintance Be Forgot" and "Memories." He closed his organ number with the popular waltz hit, "Masquerade."

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand) offered but one number from the stage console this week. This was "That's Why Darkies Were Born," and after the first chorus by Hammond, the "Singing Barrister," Fred Morill, offered a vocal of it. The number was beautifully played and was enhanced by a picturesque "river" scene. Though Morill's voice is good, most of his singing is much too loud, and consequently not as enjoyable as it could be.

HERBIE KOCH (Buffalo Buffalo) drew plenty of applause and vociferous singing with his "Thanksgiving Menu." Opening with original words to "Is There Anything Wrong in That?" Herbie swung into "All American Girl," followed by "Let's Put Out the Light and Go to Sleep" and "You've Got Me in the Palm of Your Hand." For dessert, he offered an original, "Goodbye Turkey," to the tune of "Goodnight, Sweetheart."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

The "All-America" of the musical field has been chosen. . . . This contest, as you no doubt know, is conducted by the Music Corporation of America each year in some 800 newspapers throughout the country. . . . The race for captaincy this year was a close one with Guy Lombardo and Ben Bernie running a neck-and-neck race until a few days before the contest closed. . . .

Here's the "team" line-up of the "All-America Eleven":

Jack Denny.....left guard
Ted Weems..... center
Abe Lyman.....right guard
Gus Arnheim.....right tackle
Rudy Vallee.....right end
Guy Lombardo (Captain).....quarterback
Wayne King.....right halfback
Ben Bernie.....fullback

While the eleven winners listed above comprise the biggest vote-getters, there are many other orchestras throughout the country that showed their strength in various sections. . . .

Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians open a three weeks' engagement at the new Carter hotel, Cleveland, this coming Monday, December 19. . . . Theirs is a national and international popularity. . . .

Donald "Monk" Watson, who set an m. c. consecutive performance record at the Riviera theatre in Detroit a few years ago, has returned to the Hollywood theatre, that city, on a four weeks' contract. . . .

He succeeds Frankie Ruff, who has moved to Indianapolis. . . . Clarence Raynolds, former organist at the municipal auditorium in Denver, is now playing at the Ogden, that city. . . . Reynolds replaces Erminie DeLaVergne, who passed away recently. . . . He will share time at the Ogden with Carmenza Van der Lezz, who has been at the theatre a long time. . . . Incidentally, Katherine Kaderly, former New York organist, who, with Eloise Rowan, played at the twin consoles of the Paramount, Denver, as the team of "Jackie and Jean," is back in Denver and featured at the Denver theatre. . . .

In the September issue of Edward B. Mark's official organ, the Almanac, mention was made of the impending publication of Emery Deutsch's Viennese waltz, "Play Fiddle Play." . . . Since that time this number has become not just another success but the waltz hit of the year. . . .

OVERTURES

RUSS MORGAN (Detroit Fox), assisted by the 25 Fox Choral Singers, offers Victor Herbert's best known works in a pleasingly arranged form. The introduction is "The March of the Toys," followed by the appearance of the choral singers in a campfire set, singing "Czardas." A lithe, dark-eyed girl presented a tambourine dance throughout this number. The familiar strains of "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life" swell from the throats of the entire chorus. "Kiss Me Again," sung by the Choral singers, has an interpolated passage of plaintive violin notes. The final offering of this group is "Italian Street Song." They are followed by Irene Kessler, she of the eloquent eyes and lively lashes, singing "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby" and "If It Ain't Love."

FRED SCHMITT (Buffalo Buffalo), for the final week of his popular tarry here, offered his musical conception of "The First Thanksgiving" which drew a big hand from a capacity audience. With the use of occasional colored atmospheric screen backgrounds, the orchestra depicted in turn "An Old English Countryside," "The Departure of the Pilgrims," "A Storm at Sea," "The Landing," "Indian Cabaret" and "The First Thanksgiving." A mixed vocal octet aided at the climax with several selections, including "I am a Pilgrim," "Rock of Ages" and "Onward Christian Soldiers."

HARRY SILVERSTADT (Brooklyn Metropolitan) offered a short and snappily played overture this week that met with the favorable response of the patron! The energetic Silverstadt built the overture of selections from the musical show, "Show Boat," and arranged each number in an entertaining manner, that proved the versatility of each member and his own capable leadership.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) begins his overture with ballet music from some of the better known operas. Before the applause given this portion of the number has subsided, Forbes swings quickly into "How Deep is the Ocean" and "Alabama Bound." The overture is brought to a whirlwind finish, typically characteristic of Forbes, while on the screen the wild flight of a runaway train is depicted.

HERBERT STRAUB (Buffalo Buffalo), back at Shea's ace theatre after two years' absence in the same circuit's Hippodrome and in night clubs, received a prolonged ovation with his opening overture. Herb offered excerpts from Ferdie Grofe's "Grand Canyon Suite," with special arrangement by Cal Janowitz.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) is given generous applause for his deft rendition of some of the most romantic and inspiring passages from such operas as "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Tannhauser" and "Pagliacci."

Davis Is M. C. in Milwaukee

Charlie Davis, former Indianapolis orchestra leader, is now master of ceremonies and band leader at the Fox Wisconsin theatre in Milwaukee. Observations ¶ Still further reports from here and there of motion picture theatre reopenings are gradually extending the list of more than 500 houses which have resumed activity since the middle of August. A portion of these reopenings may be safely attributed to the beginning of a new theatrical season, but not all of them. Some of them had ceased operation before the last summer season, and their return to service is due either to a local pickup in business conditions, or to a general optimism.

Whatever the reason, the addition of 500 theatres to the film and equipment market means a lot to the motion picture industry, and we hope it signifies as many favorable things to the owners of those theatres themselves. During a depression so protracted as this one has been it is only natural that morale should suffer, and a disintegrated morale represents quite as effective a condition as the tangible underlying causes. Theatre and manufacturing executives longest in this business have not been so disturbed, especially if their own financial resources seemed sufficient to tide them over. We have heard more than one say, "Of course the theatre business is going to be all right," while one (a manufacturer who had been hit the hardest, by the way) smilingly prophesied lively activity in theatre construction before long, not only to reallocate and modernize, but to add to the number of theatres now existing. "I've seen these conditions before," he said. One hopes he is right, although we believe that theatre construction might be placed on a much sounder basis than that which sufficed during the hectic days of 1928-29. Industrial politics and the real estate business are not show business.

It is interesting to note the distribution of these more than 500 reopenings. There was one in over 357 different cities and towns. The city to have the greatest number of reopenings was Chicago, which in many ways has felt the depression more than any large city. Among the States, Texas reports the largest number of reopenings—56. Warner Brothers led the circuits with 39.

¶ Completed for its long awaited opening December 29, the RKO Roxy now reveals in the unequivocal assertions of stone and metal practically all of the things that have been previously said about it. It is a grand theatre, and it is the motion picture theatre of the grand Radio City. One should also say, of the grand Rockefeller Center, which is quite as stupendous an undertaking as even New York has been the site of. When begun, it was stated that this huge real estate improvement in midtown Manhattan was to cost $250,000,000. In boom times, that would be a lot of money. Now it is inconceivable. Therefore one hesitates to pay much attention to rumors that the total cost is proving more than that. One hopes that the Rockefellers can afford it if it is.

While the RKO Roxy is Radio City's home of the motion picture, the screen will have to share honors with older forms of the theatre arts. We hoped that so monumental an amusement center might vouchsafe the cinema a place all its own. Of course that would have given the original and dynamic Roxy relatively little to do of an immediately visible nature around the very theatre that bore his name, but with the Radio City Music Hall to engage his genius to a rather limitless extent, he would not have objected to motion pictures exclusively in his latest Roxy. Once it was actually decided to elevate the screen to that eminence.

But Roxy himself is author of the statement that "conditions do not permit this." Economic conditions in general? The quality of present studio product? Or the nature, the inherent conditions, of the cinema art? We know only this: That no big-scale theatre operators that we know of have indicated a willingness to put the motion picture on its own, and doubtless Roxy and his Radio Keith Orpheum associates have confirmed this with counting room arguments. Perhaps the motion picture is not a suitable medium for the sole support of the huge palatial theatre. Fortunately, that may not matter. We don't think it does. There is a swell place for the motion picture in the amusement world, one consisting in serving the great masses of people, principally, with a possible subordinate division catering to those interested in special subjects. Neither of these services need huge theatres or elegant ones. They merely need technically perfect theatres located for the most part just around the corner from where its public lives.

THE RKO ROXY THEATRE

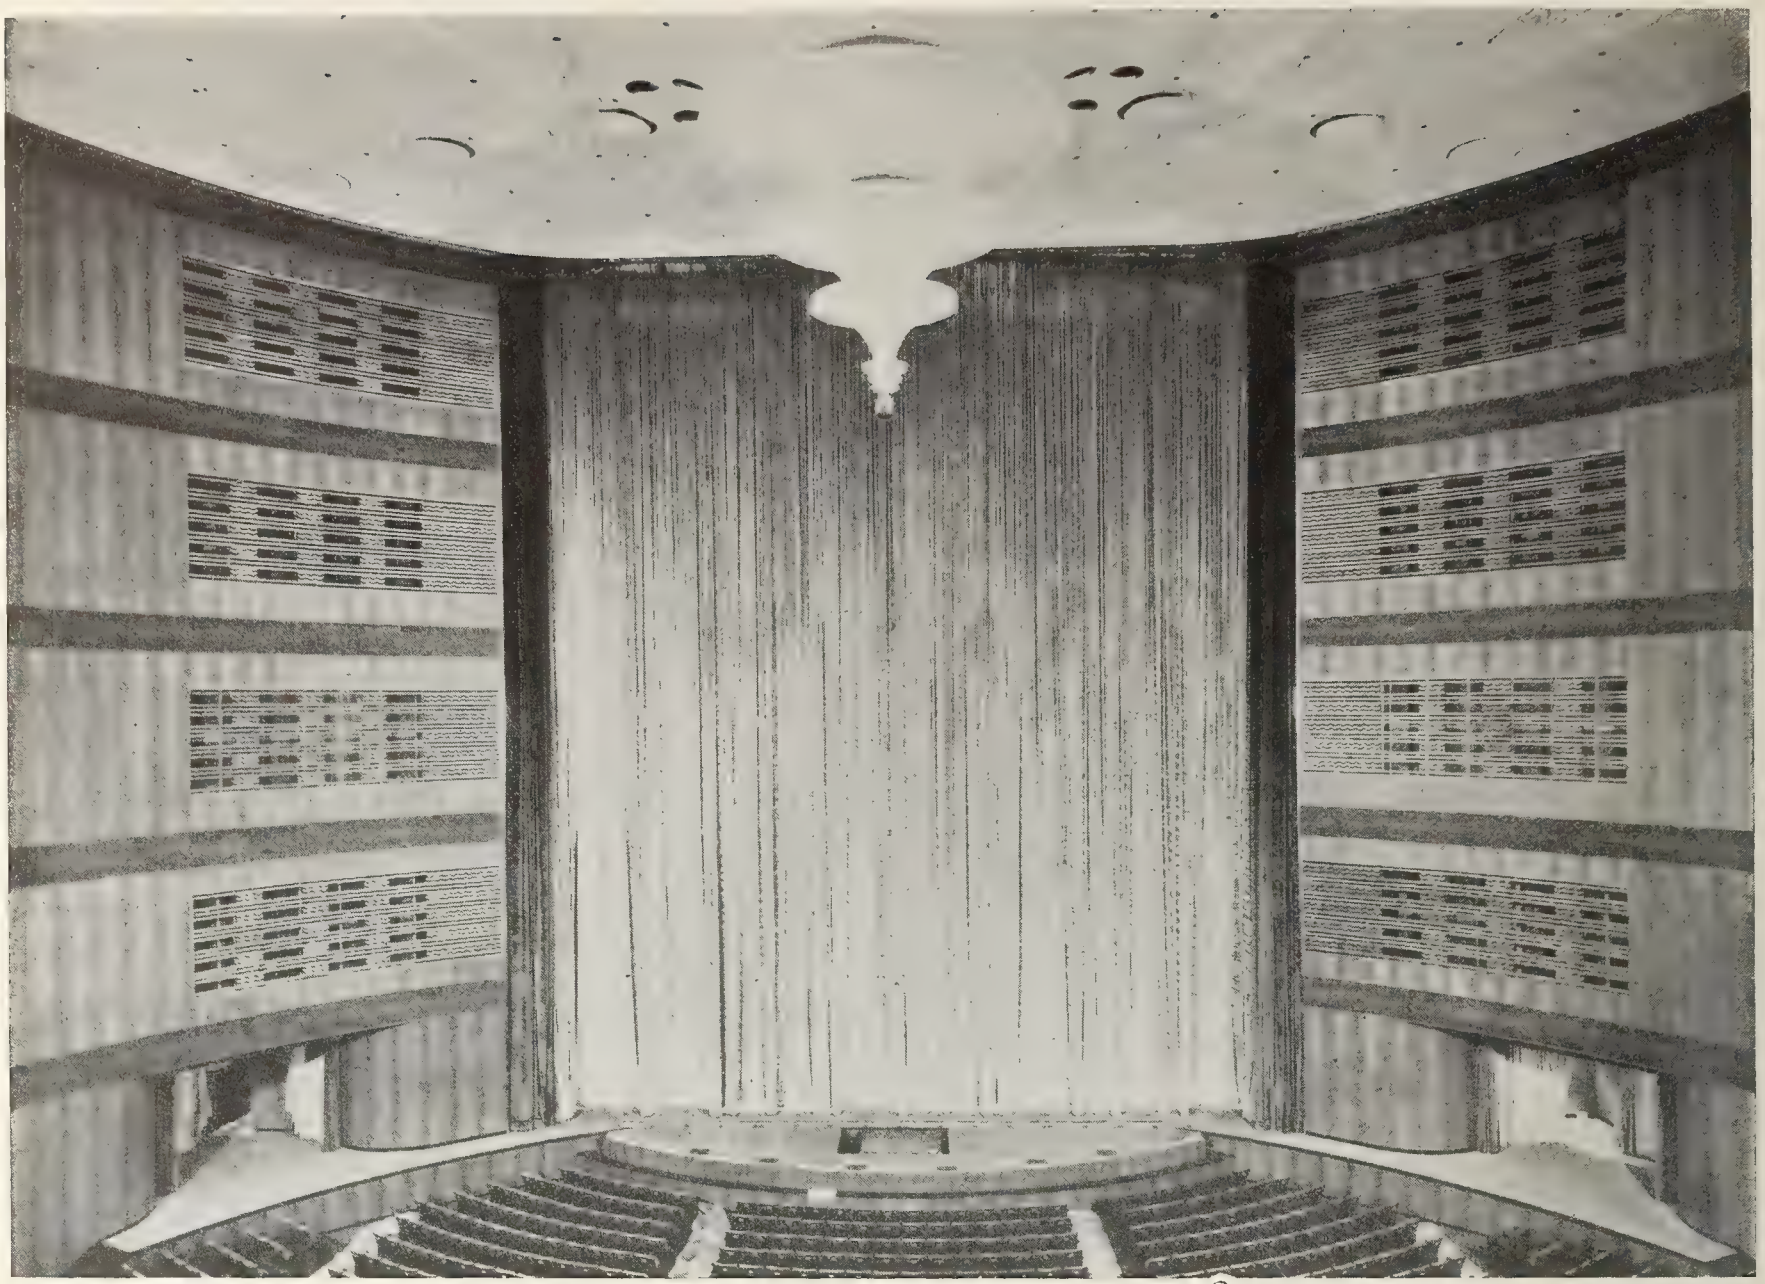
By EUGENE CLUTE

CONSIDERED at least on the basis of intention and association, the motion picture has monumental representation in the vast Rockefeller Center development in New York City. The theatre designated as the motion picture's own is the RKO Roxy, now revealed in the completed state for its opening December 29. With the Music Hall, the RKO Roxy inaugurates the operation of that sizeable portion of the entire project known as Radio City, a community ruled over by the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries, including Radio Keith Orpheum and the National Broadcasting Company, with the theatres therein under the direct supervision of S. L. Rothafel. To these theatres an opera house may be added later.

Innovations that have possibilities for wide influence upon motion picture theatre design, equipment and decoration are of course to be found in the completed RKO Roxy theatre. In addition to the major departure from accepted practice in the substitution of three shallow mezzanines, or balconies, in place of the usual large single overhanging balcony, there are a number of outstanding features of a novel character and countless lesser departures. For instance, the walls of the auditorium are entirely surfaced with wood, the system of lighting is unique, the sound reproduction and reinforcement equipment, and the stage equipment for presentations, represent notable advances, and the interior decoration sets a high standard of a rich and dignified type of modernism. An unusually large number of technical experts and distinguished artists have collaborated with the architects, Reinhard & Hofmeister; Corbett, Harrison & MacMurray; and Hood & Fouilhoux.

Eugene Schoen, professor of interior decorating at New York University, was in charge of the interior decoration.

The large single balcony was avoided in order to permit a view of all parts of the large picture screen from every seat in the house, and to facilitate the delivery of the sound most satisfactorily to every part of the audience. The screen when used at its maximum size, will fill practically the entire height and width of the proscenium opening. Then, too, the shallow mezzanines were designed to give the desired intimacy of grouping.



A Mahogany Lined Auditorium

Wood was chosen for the main wall surfaces in the auditorium because of the peculiar value of this material in giving friendliness, warmth and intimacy to an interior. The prevailing tendency toward the use of wood in great unbroken surfaces which display the beauty of its grain and the richness of its color to advantage, caused the avoidance of any pilasters, cornices or even raised panel frames.

Obtaining this effect with a surface of genuine wood and at the same time conforming to the rigid requirements for safety from fire, presented a problem that called for the development of an entirely new system of construction for the wall lining. This has been accomplished with highly satisfactory results. The surface is of crotch mahogany veneer cemented to sheets of steel, which are attached to steel furring that in turn is anchored to the steel frame of the building and to the structural wall of hollow tile. The surface of the wood veneer lining is about 4 inches in advance of the structural wall, and this lining is backed with rock wool in sheet form, wired to steel clips attached to the steel furring to prevent any possible trouble from resonance of the wall lining. This sound deadening varies from 1½ to 4 inches in thickness in different locations.

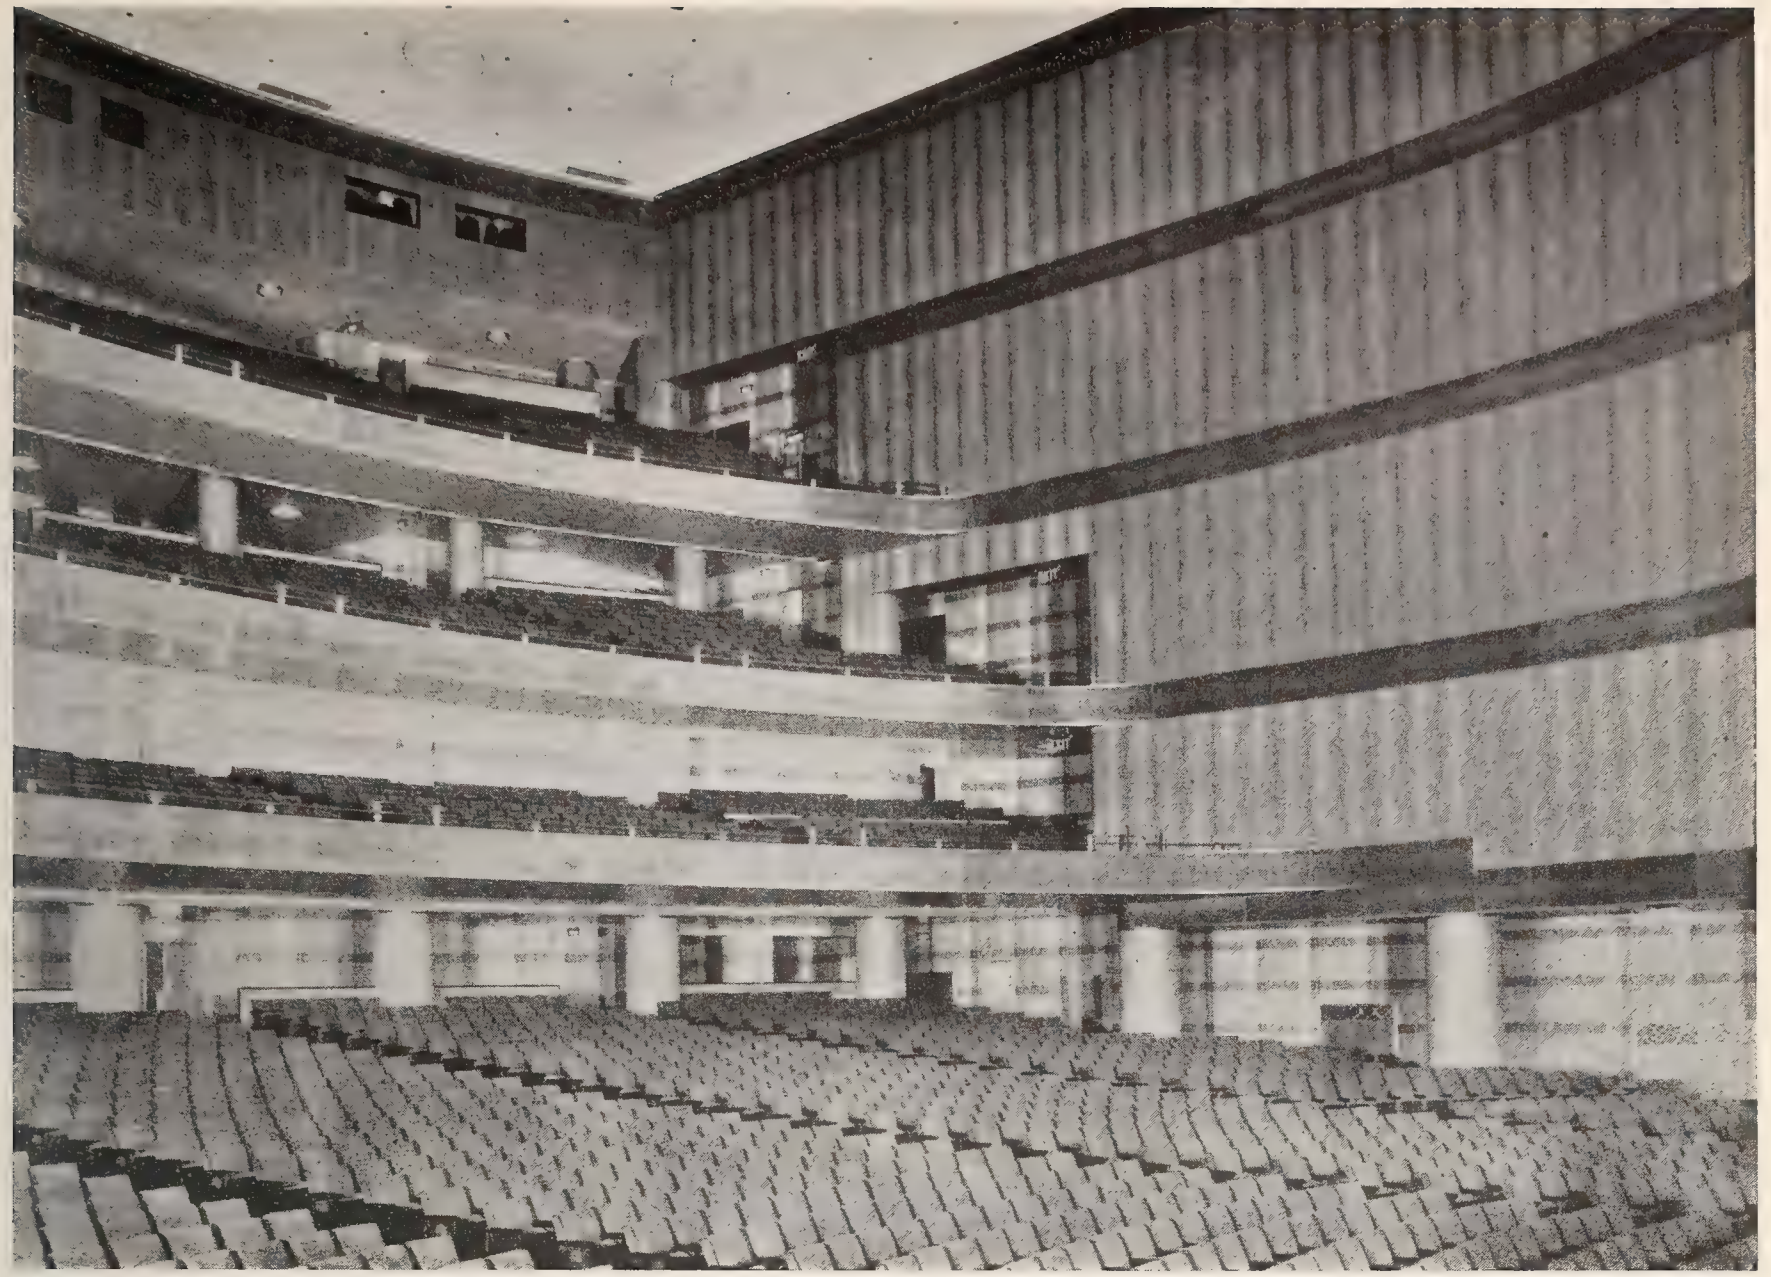
The lining of the auditorium walls is composed of large panels of sheets, 4 feet, 4½ inches wide, which extend from floor level to floor level. The vertical joints between these sheets are ¾-inch in width and are filled with strips of wood let in flush with the surface. These battens, like the veneer of the panels, are of mahogany, and both the veneer and the strips are fireproofed. This makes a finish for the joints without any attempt to conceal them and without emphasizing them to a noticeable degree.



The grain of the wood veneer has been arranged to form a pattern of simple vertical rectangles indicating the panels just sufficiently to give interest and richness and a sense of structural character. This pattern relieves the walls of plainness, while it is in line with the modern feeling for unbroken wall surfaces.

The idea of pattern is carried further by the horizontal bands at the various mezzanine levels, which continue the lines of the fronts of the balconies along the walls without destroying the unity of the surfaces. This also ties the mezzanines in with the walls. These bands show the wood grain running horizontally, at right angles to the grain in the panels, and they are stained somewhat darker than the other portions of the wall. At the top and bottom edges of these bands, plain flat strips of golden bronze are used for accent. These strips are 1¼ inches wide, and they project ⅛-inch.

There is a simple rounded moulding of extruded bronze at the junction of the walls and the ceiling, and a narrow bronze moulding at the top of the black wall base. The large, plain cylindrical columns at the sides of the auditorium towards the rear, are surfaced with sheet steel lacquered in plain red-brown to match the color of the mahogany walls. Around the top of each column are narrow bands of golden bronze.

The method by which this wall lining is constructed is of interest because it is of wide applicability, and it is a logical use of modern materials. Along the back of each vertical edge of each steel panel, a strip of steel, formed in Z-section, is electrically welded. The veneer is applied to the panel in the shop after the welding is done. These strips are the means of attachment to the furring, and they form a recess ¾-inch wide by ¾-inch deep from top to bottom between the panels. This takes care of whatever expansion and contraction of the sheets may occur with change of temperature. Into these recesses, are fitted the flush battens of fireproofed wood, covering the screw heads. The edges of the veneer and of the battens are chamfered slightly, forming small V-shaped grooves along the sides of the battens. At the back of each of the horizontal joints, above and below the horizontal bands, is a steel member of T-section upon which the sheets are lapped and to which they are fastened, with a space of ¼ inch wide between their edges. This T is attached to the furring back of it. The space between the panels allows for expansion and contraction, and into it fits a rib formed upon the back of the extruded bronze strip that covers each horizontal joint. The furring back of these vertical and horizontal connections consists of steel Z- and angle-sections fastened to each other by bolts in slots which permit of adjustment during erection. Strips of felt ⅛-inch thick are inserted between members of the furrings to deaden sound. The horizontal bands are formed of veneered sheets, each equal in length to the width of two vertical panels, every second vertical panel joint extending through the bands.

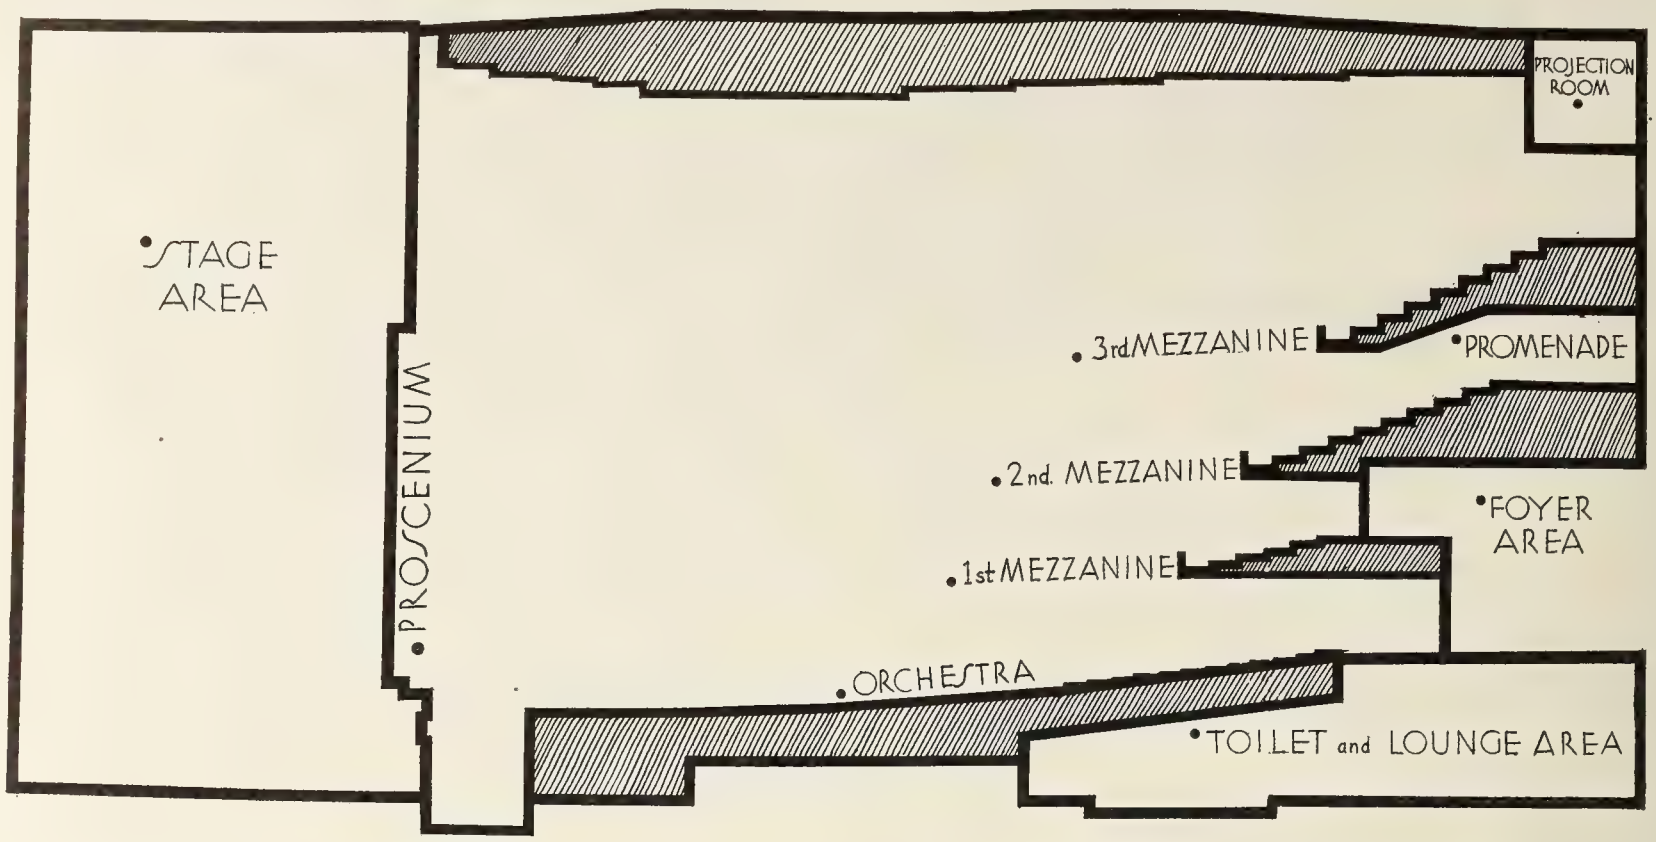
Acoustical Materials

THE FRONTS of the mezzanines (balcony facias), which are continuous with the horizontal bands upon the walls, are also of wood veneer on steel and are similarly constructed, but here the surface is perforated all over with holes ¼-inch in diameter, spaced ½-inch apart and backed by rockwool to prevent the reflection of sound. The entire front of the projection booth and of the rooms that adjoin it, extending across the rear of the auditorium above the third mezzanine, is of wood veneer on steel pierced and backed like the balcony fronts, for the same acoustical reason.

To prevent the reflection of sound towards the stage or from side to side in the rear of the auditorium, the back wall of the auditorium and the portions of the side walls at the ends of the mezzanines are of sound-absorbing acoustical material, which is covered with fabric for decorative effect. This fabric is a linen crash woven in a special plaid pattern in Czecho-Slovakia. It is in subdued shades of brown, orange and yellow that tone in with the mahogany-lined walls.

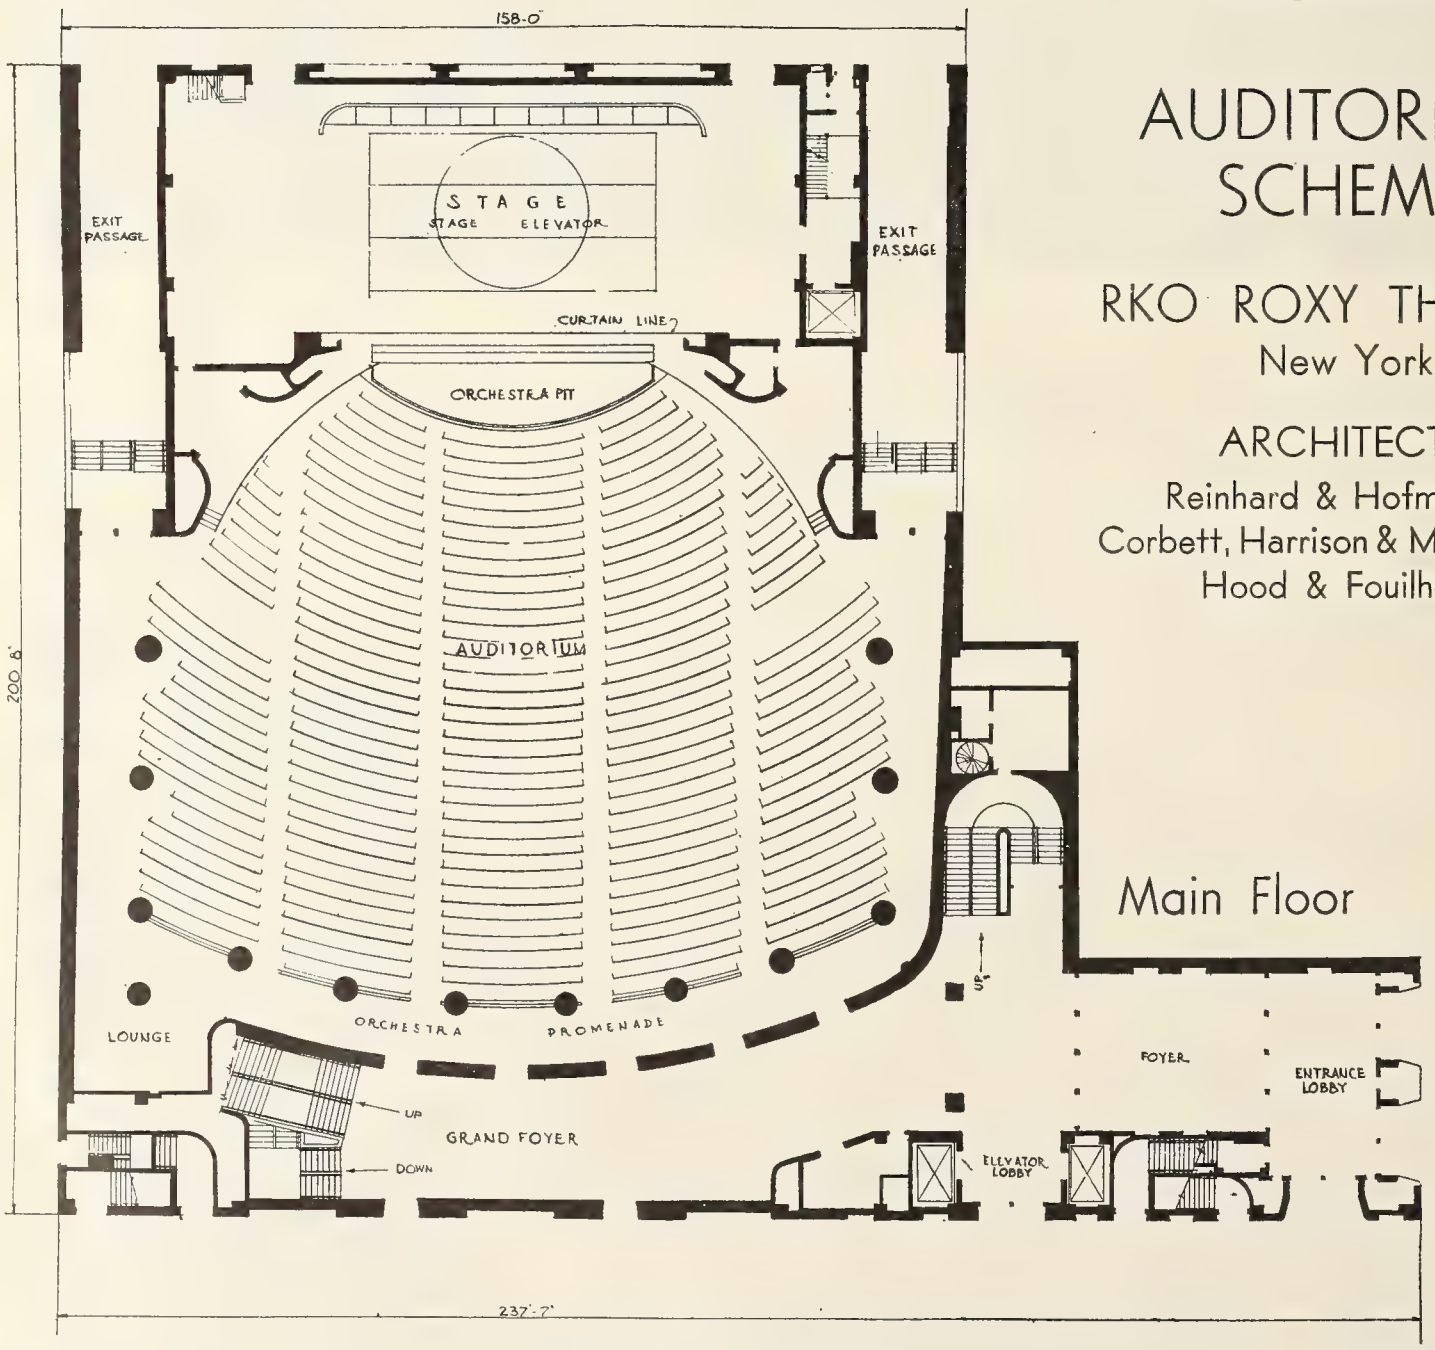
The acoustical material in the wall areas in back of the cloth is as follows: First, a brown coat of plaster was applied to the hollow tile wall, all over the area. Next, vertical furring strips of flameproofed wood (1⅝ x 2 inches) 2 feet on centers, were fastened against the plaster with 3/16-inch toggle bolts running into the tile. Then a rockwool blanket was fitted between the furring strips and (Johns-Manville) perforated transite applied over this, forming the wall surface (Installation by Acoustical Construction Corporation).

Combination Organ Grilles and Light Sources



In the walls at either side of the proscenium opening are four large rectangular organ grilles which are also decorative light sources. They are so designed as to preserve the plane of the wall, horizontal lines carrying through, and the vertical surfaces between openings being lightened by pierced horizontal wave lines. These grilles are of plaster composition finished to match the mahogany wall surface and enlivened with touches of gold that recall the bronze of the strips upon the walls. They are reinforced by steel angles in the main horizontal members, and by square steel bars in back of them. The openings are splayed towards the back.

These grilles are illuminated with a soft glow of light, the color of which can be changed. In the light chamber in back of each grille are lamps in individual reflectors fitted with red, blue, green and amber roundels. They are concealed just below the grille and project their light upward and slightly backwards upon a screen of fine woven wire that is set 14 inches in back of the grille.



Loud speakers for the public address system are concealed behind the grilles at the second mezzanine level, two at each side of the auditorium. Slots 6 inches wide through the floors of the light chambers in back of the grilles interconnect them for the passage of sound of the organ.

at the first mezzanine level is a grand piano played from the organ console, and involving amplification.

Below these grilles are recesses at the right and left of the proscenium. Curtains of plain sand color form a semicircle at the back of each recess, and a straight curtain may be drawn across the front. The platforms of these recesses extend to the stage and to the side aisles with which they are connected by steps.

The console of the organ (by Wurlitzer) occupies the recess at the left of the proscenium. It is of rose-wood and of special modern design to harmonize with the interior architecture of this theatre. The instrument combines the characteristics of a cathedral organ with those common to the usual theatre organ. This is a four manual organ, and the four separate organ chambers are in spaces at the sides of the proscenium in back of the light chambers, which latter are immediately behind the organ grilles. The organ chambers are separated from the light chambers by walls provided with openings having movable shutters operated from the organ console, to regulate the volume of the sound. The organ blower room is in the sub-basement below the front of the auditorium.

Auxiliary Stage and Band Wagon

The recess at the right side of the auditorium which balances the recess that contains the organ console is for use as a stage from which artists may present special features during the making of elaborate changes of settings.

The orchestra pit is provided with an elevator of the screw type, upon which is a platform or bandwagon.

Curvature and Contour Curtains

There are three stage curtains—an outer, or curvature, curtain, which continues the curve of the auditorium walls; a contour curtain looped up mechanically and electrically controlled; and the asbestos curtain. The curvature curtain hangs in straight folds all the way from the ceiling to the stage. It is of warm sand colored short-pile velvet, soft and lustrous. When drawn back the greater part of its width folds into curtain pockets in the walls, only enough remaining visible to form a frame at the sides of the proscenium opening. The contour curtain is of golden champagne-colored rough silk and is equipped with a special apparatus (by Peter Clark) that operates nine lines or draw cables which loop the curtain up as it opens and make possible an almost limitless variety of contours for framing the stage opening. The desired arrangement can be pre-set and operated by pressing push buttons at the electric control board, or operated by means of a master control; also, the apparatus can be manipulated freely by push buttons without pre-set or master control, if desired. The asbestos curtain is entirely covered with gold leaf, plain excepting for the variations of light caught by the pleasantly irregular, indefinite forms of the sheets of gold which give it richness and vibrancy.

Furnishings and Decorations

THE CHAIRS are upholstered in a plain mohair velour of orange terra cotta color, with black welt seams of the same material. The arms of the chairs are covered with black mohair velour. Battery-operated program lights are recessed in the backs of the seats. There is one battery to two seats. Upon the aisle seats at the ends of alternate rows are illuminated letters, making it possible to find any row readily.

The carpet shows an abstract pattern of curved forms in two tones of terra cotta, with a very dark brown used sparingly for emphasis.

The chairs, designed and executed by American Seating Company, number approximately 3,600, half of them in the orchestra. The first mezzanine seats about 400, the two upper mezzanines the remainder. The chairs in the orchestra have backs 20½ inches high in vertical measurement, with a pitch of 7½ inches. The average spacing of chairs in the orchestra area is 2 feet 9 9/16 inches, from back to back. The distance between the backs of the seats in the last row, and those in the row in front, totals 3 feet, 6 inches. The backs of the seats in the first row of the orchestra are 3 feet, 4 inches from the musicians' pit rail.

In the first mezzanine the seats possess backs 22½ inches high in vertical measurement, with a pitch of 8¼ inches. The average spacing between seats in the first mezzanine level is 3 feet, 4 inches from back to back, and the front row is 3 feet, 6 inches from the balcony parapet, while the back row lies 3 feet, 8 inches from the row in front of it.

The average spacing of seats in the second mezzanine level is 3 feet, 4 inches, with 3 feet, 6 inches for the front row, and 3 feet, 8 inches for the back row. The seat backs are 21½ inches high, with a 7⅞-inch pitch. In the third mezzanine level the chairs have the same height and inclination of back as those on the orchestra floor, namely 20½ inches, with a 7½-inch pitch, but they have a somewhat greater inclination downward toward the back of the seat for greater comfort.

The ceiling is the chief decorative feature of the auditorium. It is of plaster moulded in relief from models by René Chambellan and Oronzio Maldarelli. Figures from classical mythology, together with symbolic designs, lead the mind away from every-day concerns and into the pleasant realm of fantasy. There are Apollo, Diana, Venus and others of the ancient Greek Pantheon. The freedom of the air is suggested by a group of birds on the wing. The sun, moon and stars in another group carry one's thoughts beyond the limits of our universe, and there are other varied subjects to engage the eye and to stimulate mind and emotions. The simplicity and beauty of the design, and the masterly sculptural quality of this

By LEO T. PARKER

Continuing the discussion begun in the November 19th issue, seeking to give theatre operators the fundamentals of contract law

IN THE PREVIOUS article on contracts, it was noted that any contract is void if the object is illegal. For example, in the recent case of Film Corporation v. Tri-State Theatres (6 P. 2d, 135), it was disclosed that a theatre owner entered into a standard form contract with a film distributing company by which the theatre owner agreed to exhibit certain films at a specified price.

The theatre owner sold his theatre and under the terms of this sales contract he assigned to the purchaser the above mentioned film lease contract.

The purchaser of the theatre failed to complete the contract and the distributor filed suit against the seller of the theatre to recover the rental price specified in the contract for the films. The counsel for the seller of the theatre argued that he should not be liable because he had assigned the rental contract to the purchaser of the theatre. Although the lower court held the seller of the theatre not liable on the contract, the higher court reversed this decision.

This contract contained a usual clause which provided that in the event of disagreement between the film company and the theatre owner the controversy must be submitted to a board of arbitrators, and that if the theatre owner refused to consent to arbitrations the film company had privilege of demanding payment of an additional sum not exceeding $500, and in the event the theatre owner refused to pay this additional sum the film company had the privilege of cancelling the film contract within seven days. This clause had previously been held void by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Therefore, this court held the theatre owner relieved from liability for failure to exhibit the pictures on the ground that the whole contract was made void by the decision rendered by the Supreme Court, which held the above clause invalid on the contention that it violated the anti-trust laws.

In another late case, Artists Corporation v. Mills (11 P. [2d] 1025), it was shown that a theatre operator and a film distributor entered into a film rental contract which contained a clause that the theatre owner agreed to charge for admission to the theatre not less than ten cents while the pictures were being exhibited.

Although the theatre owner breached the contract by refusing to exhibit the films, the court held that he was not liable in damages because the contract clause violated the anti-trust laws and, therefore, was void.

Therefore, it is quite apparent that any contract is void by the terms of which either contracting party actually is prevented from entering into free competition in conduction of its business.

On the other hnad, this assertion does not mean that a theatre owner may avoid liability on a valid contract simply because the other party may be conducting his business illegally. For example, in a late case (42 F. [2d] 873), a theatre owner attempted to avoid liability on a contract by which he agreed in writing with a distributor to exhibit and pay a stipulated rental for 29 "first-run" photoplays.

The counsel for the theatre owner contended that the contract was unenforceable because the distributor with whom the contract was made distributes approximately 98% of the motion picture films in the United States, and that a theatre owner who desired to secure pictures for theatre business was compelled to deal with this distributor.

Since the contract was held valid, the Court held that a theatre owner cannot avoid liability for breaching a contract on these grounds and explained that there is no illegality in such an agreement, and that the mere fact that the theatre owner was compelled to make purchases from the illegal combination, because of its control of the supply of pictures, does not make a valid obligation an invalid one.

Liability for Breach

THE HIGHER courts have consistently held that any person who breaches a valid contract is liable in damages to the other contracting party. Generally speaking, the amount of damages is determined by the profits lost had the other party not breached the contract. So held the higher court in Hocott v. Dougan (29 S. W. [2d] 1088).

In this case it was disclosed that an orchestra leader and a theatre owner entered into a contract by the terms of which the theatre owner agreed to employ the leader and his orchestra in his theatre for five days and pay $515 therefor.

The theatre owner refused to permit the orchestra to play, and the leader sued the theatre owner for the profits which he estimated he would have earned if the theatre owner had fulfilled the terms of the agreement. The higher court promptly held the theatre owner liable.

In another litigation, where a theatre owner breached a film contract, the court said:

"The damages recoverable for the breach of a contract are such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either as arising naturally, that is, according to the usual course of things, from such breach itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract as the probable result of a breach thereof." (29 S. W. [2d] 170).

Inability to Perform

A PERSON who sues to recover damages on a breached contract is bound to prove that he was ready and willing to perform his obligations. However, it is not necessary that he endeavor to fulfill his part of the contract when he knows he will not be permitted to do so. The latest higher court case on this subject is Weinglass v. Gibson (155 Atl. 439).

The facts are that a producer and a theatre owner entered into a written contract by the terms of which the producer contracted to supply a performance during a specified week. After the contract was properly signed the theatre owner asked the producer to defer the performance date because he desired to show another production during the week specified in the contract. The producer refused to cancel the contract.

However, the theatre owner entered into another contract with a producer and advertised a production for exhibition the week specified in the original contract. The producer telegraphed the theatre owner and informed him that he had forwarded his billing matter and stated that he was ready to fulfill his contract. The theatre owner did not request the producer to fulfill the contract and the producer sued the theatre owner for damages.

The counsel for the theatre owner contended that the producer was not entitled to recover damages because he had not appeared at the theatre ready to perform the contract. However, the higher court held the theatre owner liable in heavy damages, saying:

"Plaintiff (producer) knew that the other play was about to be staged and defendant did not advise him otherwise

THEATRE TECHNOLOGY IN MANAGEMENT

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

An examination into the relationship of equipment to the whole business of the theatre and the manager's function

IN THIS AGE so fundamentally characterized by an increasing application of technology to all our affairs, we get used to new contrivances. We have a word for them that is even expressive of the casualness with which we accept them. "Some new gadget," is the way we put it, and even though we appreciate the significance of the gadget to ourselves, we are apt to consider it the business of persons who have made it their special concern. Those of us in direct charge of motion picture theatres are responsible for the proper functioning of a class of enterprise which technically is one of the most complex—which is, indeed, something of a symbol of this very age—yet motion picture theatre management is only beginning to extend its purview to the immense technology basic to its practical, every-day interests.

Originally, motion picture theatre management consisted in an elementary form of film renting, opening the doors at a certain hour, seeing that no employes cheated in admissions and time, and similar simple functions. The nature of the business was such that such a rudimentary form of management quite sufficed. The public expected little, and the net profits usually concealed the inefficiency that might have existed even then.

When a little over a decade ago, the cinema began its steady period of intensive development, both as an art and as a commercial product, specialization was sought as the method of meeting the new demands. No longer did cameraman and director contrive a script, fashion a background with the aid of the studio janitor, and achieve a saleable film by nightfall. Gone were the days of store-room auditoriums, folding chairs and canvas screens. These changes, of course, were just the beginning. David Wark Griffith made "The Birth of a Nation." The five-reeler, long enough to form the principal part of a show, was established. A few theatres added symphony orchestras. And architects were asked to create theatres for the motion picture grander far than any devoted to the stage.

This was the beginning still. At the studio, artist and artisan alike were understanding better the resources and limitations of this new medium. At the theatre, architects began to realize the vast technical importance of the various elements of their designs. "Theatre architecture is a matter of engineering," said one. And after he said that came the architectural revolution commanded by Sound. Meanwhile, a discriminating public was exacting more from every facility of the theatre—projection, acoustics, air conditioning and others—by which was presented screen entertainment in stimulating, comfortable surroundings. From those who designed it, to those who operated it, the motion picture theatre had become the specialized technological organization that it is today.

The circuits commenced early to cope with these rapidly developing demands of their business. It is significant to motion picture exhibition in general that the circuits had to. Circuit operation requires a high order of efficiency if there is to be any profit at all, and specialization was developed throughout their personnel, with the result that they had recourse to expert supervision in every phase of theatre operation. They established methods by which they could know the quality of their projection, the kind of carpets for their purposes and when they would have to be replaced, the best substances with which to keep brass foyer rails shiney, the air conditions of each theatre with respect to health and comfort, and similarly throughout the long list of functions and paraphernalia now involved in theatre operation.

UNDER ANY method of operation, however, it cannot be desirable that such technological knowledge be restricted to a few specialists in certain theatre organizations. It is of fundamental importance to every theatre, and too intimately involved in the economy of the theatre not to be generally accessible in some effective measure from the immediate management, whether it be of the owner or employe type. The breaking up of large circuits, and the so-called Decentralization movement generally, makes it more than ever imperative that theatre management be understood to include in its knowledge, some effective understanding of each class of theatre equipment.

The motion picture theatre business resembles many another industrial and commercial field in its creation of new or more complex methods faster than they could be generally disseminated.

Technical elaborations have piled up on those in charge of the average individual theatre. Screens have become directional, diffusive and otherwise. Chairs now represent the elaborate studies of seating engineers, and acoustical factors may have to be considered in their selection. The manager may well depend upon his projectionist for details, but since he pays or okays the bills, he is now aware of elaborations in lamps and lenses and a whole new family of gadgets from exciter lamps to photocells through amplifiers to speakers. Engineers tell of finding misuses of equipment which they hold are chargeable only to stupidity. But are they? More commonly they are the result of an effort to carry on the full functions of management without having kept technologically abreast with the business.

The question that immediately arises, of course, is: How much should the responsible head of a theatre know about equipment?

The simplest answer is that he should be able to choose equipment most suitable to his purse and purpose, and to know whether or not he should be satisfied with its performance.

From contact with both theatre operator and motion picture technician, I submit this as representing knowledge continually appealed to by the common affairs of management, and knowledge that management can reasonably be expected to acquire.

To be able to select equipment, furnishings and supplies intelligently, management should know the classes, types and makes on the current market, their characteristics and the significance of those characteristics. With publications and the manufacturers themselves eager to give the information, it should not be difficult to obtain it.

Whether or not his equipment is being properly operated will often appear in obvious results. Even then, however, expense might be saved if the management was in a position to supervise a local repair. But insidious defects, general unsuitability, or employe incompetence are commonly not to be discerned at once. Here some knowledge of the design and principles of operation would permit a first-hand checkup, and it is knowledge to be had rather readily from experience, consultations with engineers, books and other publications, and even from manufacturers' agents and brochures, if management has sufficient interest.

Properly, the interest in the technics of the modern motion picture is imposed upon management, not by the responsibilities of the technical specialist, but by the ultimate purpose of the theatre, which is, I believe, to make money. And it is by an intricate mechanism, involving important overhead costs and fundamental to customer satisfaction, that the theatre sells its wares.

PROJECTION IN RADIO CITY

By F. H. RICHARDSON

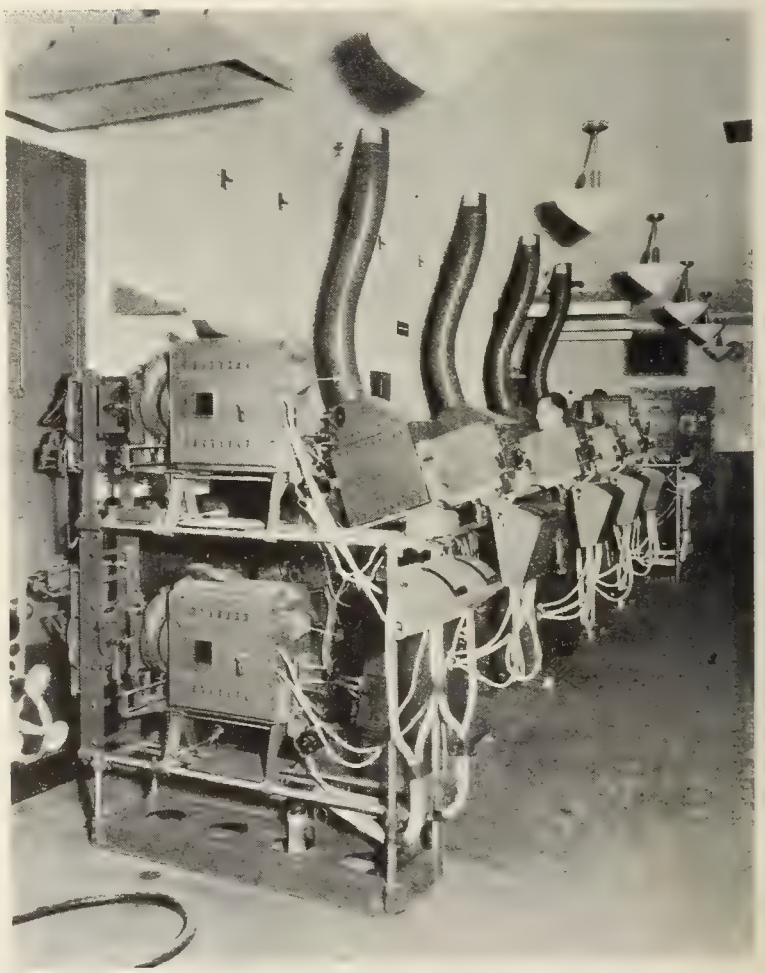
Describing the facilities for projection and reproduction of motion pictures in the RKO Roxy Theatre

AN EXAMINATION of the projection layout of the RKO Roxy theatre and Radio City Music Hall in Rockefeller Center, New York, discloses the fact that they are to all intents and purposes identical, although the RKO Roxy is to be used for motion pictures, with stage presentations supporting the screen program, whereas it is not intended motion pictures shall form any part of the programs of the Music Hall. The equipment is there should need it for it arise. The projection rooms and the equipment of each are the same, save for a few minor differences due to structural variations in the two buildings. A description of the RKO Roxy room and apparatus therefore embraces all projection facilities installed in Radio City.

The main projection room is 55 feet in length by 12 feet, 6 inches from front to back at the center. The front wall is in the form of a rather flat bow, and since the rear wall is of course straight, it is approximately 4 feet deeper at the ends than at the center. The height is 9 feet, 10 inches.

The walls and ceiling are surfaced with sound-absorbing material. From the floor up, for about 3½ feet, the wall surface is smooth and is painted olive green, as also are painted the projectors and all metal work in the room. This color is very pleasing and it has the quality of reflecting very little light.

Above the dado the sound-absorbing material is in the form of blocks about 1 foot high by 2 feet in length. From the top of the green dado up to within one foot of the ceiling, the finish is in a golden buff. The top tier of acoustic tiles is of much lighter shade in the same tone, so much lighter in fact that it has, by contrast, the appearance of being gray. The ceiling, which is also finished in the tiles, is the same color as this upper wall tier. Viewed as a whole, the effect is one of massiveness. The floor is of dark red asphalt tiles.



At either end, against the front wall, with a hallway in back of them, is a row of rooms, some of which will have our attention a bit later.

The ports are equipped with Seiler automatic fire shutters. In this system, each individual shutter is separately counterweighted, and each such counterweight is built into the shutter frame. The shutters as a whole are sustained in open position by a wire trip line which, by suitable means, is carried over each motion picture projector. This line is so held at either end that it may be manually released from a position beside either of the entrances to the projection room.

Over each motion picture projector a fuse is so connected into the line that if it blows, the line will be released. Each individual shutter is held in open position by this line, therefore in the event the line is released, either manually or by the blowing of a fuse, all shutters held open will be instantly closed. The thing is excellent and if the fuses be so located that they will blow and break the line within one second of the start of a fire, it may be said to be perfect.

The observation ports are all covered with optical glass set at proper angle in order so far as possible to kill all reflection.

Whether the lens ports will be so covered or not is not yet decided. My own advice is against projecting through glass covered ports. Under normal conditions it is not necessary. An opening sufficiently large to pass the beam from a motion picture projector set the usual distance from the wall, will not pass any appreciable amount of sound out into the auditorium. Such an opening undoubtedly would be relatively small in the RKO Roxy because of the fact that the projection distance is long (about 180 feet), hence the beam would diverge but little between the lens and wall. The objection to projecting through glass is two-fold. First, it means a light loss of from 6% to 8%, even if the glass be perfectly clean. Secondly, should either surface of the glass carry any sort of mark, such as an almost indistinguishable finger print, the definition of the screen image would suffer. It seems to me better to leave open the space for the beam.

Along the curving front wall are ten pieces of equipment: four motion picture projectors made up with Chicago Cinema bases, Super-Simplex mechanism equipped with lens turrets, Hall & Conolly type HC-10 high intensity lamps of 120 amperes capacity each, and sound heads of new design by RCA Photophone.

TO THE RIGHT and to the left of the motion picture projectors is a Brenkert Master Brenograph (Model F-7), by means of which effects many and various may be produced. These machines may, of course, be used as dissolving stereopticons. To the right and to the left of the Brenographs are two huge new type Kliegl spots (four in all), fully equipped with color attachments and double dowsers. Just above and below the beam are two metallic blades having straight upper and lower edges. These blades are so connected that when the projectionist moves a lever, they are brought toward each other, cutting the top and bottom of the beam in a straight line. These may be moved inward any desired distance until they come into contact, so that the projectionist may project a beam having a flat top and bottom of any desired thickness clear across the screen.

But this is not all, for at the sides are two other similar blades so connected that they too may, by means of a lever, be moved inward any desired distance, thus producing a straight edged vertical beam.

Or the two may be (and usually are) used together. With this device at his disposal, the projectionist may project a round beam, a long or short horiontal or vertical beam, or a square beam of any desired dimensions within the capacity of the spot. The blades are just in front of the spot lens. This model broadens the range of usefulness of spotlights very decidedly.

Just to the right of each motion picture projector, on the front wall by the observation port, is a small board upon which is mounted a voltmeter an ammeter and four push buttons. The meters measure the voltage and volume of the current being used by the projector then in operation. The purpose of the push buttons is to enable the projectionist to set the screen dimensions to either of four possible sizes.

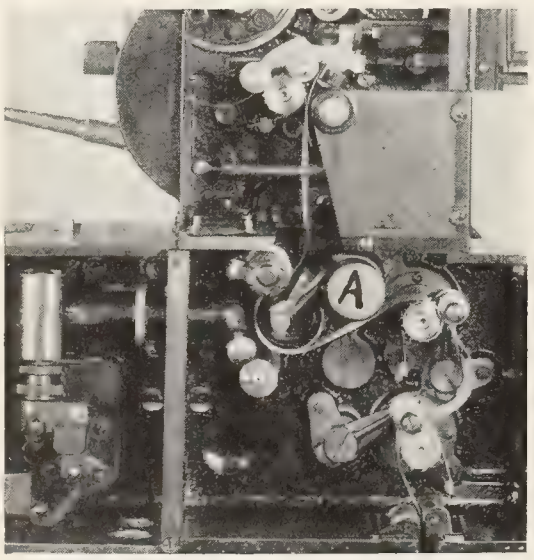
Four screen sizes are to be used. These sizes are attained by means of a motor-controlled mechanical device by means of which the top and bottom maskings, and the side maskings, may be separated or moved toward each other until the desired screen dimensions are obtained. The chief projectionist first sets the device for one desired screen size and locks the movement-limiting devices into place, so that when the projectionist thereafter presses the proper button on the afore described board, the motor will automatically move the masks in or out, as the case may be, to exactly the proper points, then stop. All four possible positions are thus pre-set, and each is controlled by one of the four buttons, all of which are of course marked.

First, there is a mammoth screen known as the "full sheet," measuring 60 feet wide by 40 feet high.

It is expected that the Music Hall screen will be still larger at full size. Next, there is the "magnascope" screen, measuring approximately 40 feet in width. The regular picture sheet is 25 feet wide by something more than three-quarters of that height. The screen is an Orthochrome by the National Paper Process Company.

I was assured by the architect that the projection angle is 21°. Actual computations on the basis of figures derived from the plans, show a projection angle of approximately 26°. Be that as it may, even 21° is far in excess of the maximum angle approved by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The fourth and last possible screen size is somewhat larger than the regular motion picture sheet size. It is for the purpose of permitting the projection of colored border effects around the motion picture image upon occasion. The screen surfaces have been very carefully selected so that as nearly as possible perfect diffusion will be had, and so that that bugaboo, "fade-away," is almost entirely eliminated. A 26-foot screen will be difficult to illuminate adequately, but with modern light sources and efficient optical systems it can be done. Personally, I am of the opinion that, taking the house as a whole, front and rear, a better general effect would be had with a somewhat smaller screen image. However, assuming adequate illumination, the large picture is best for that portion of the audience seated at the rear.



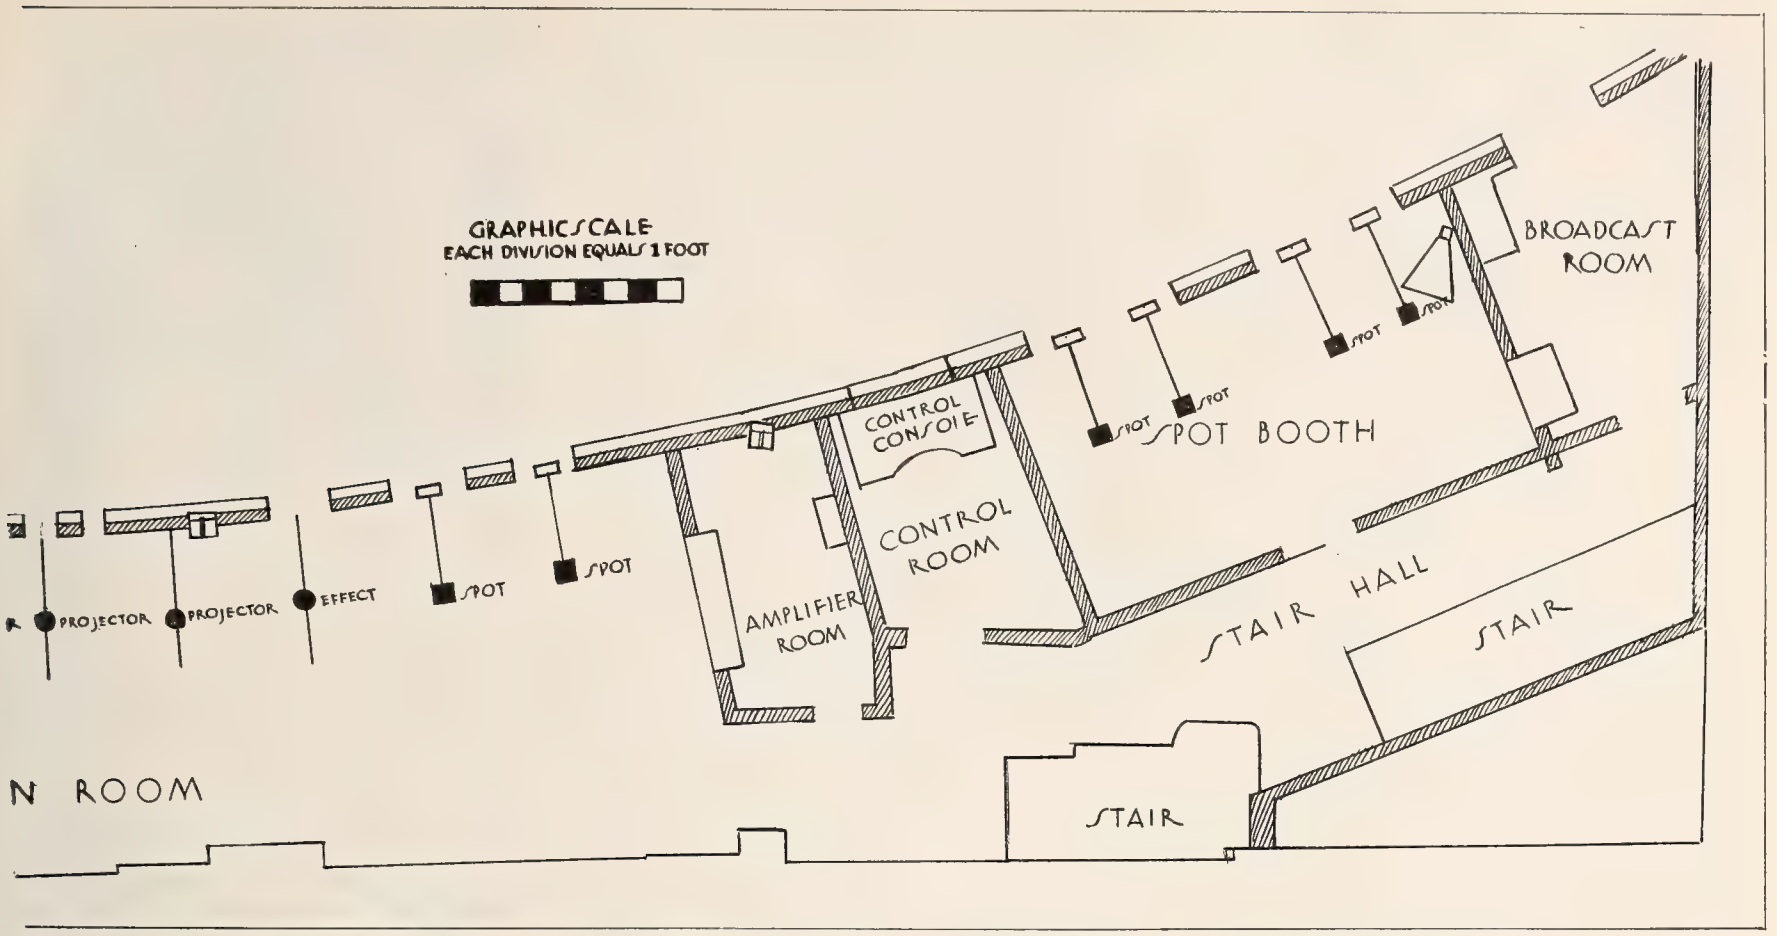


Fig. 1. RCA Photophone sound head.

On the front wall of the projection room, at its center and high up, is a small panel upon which 20 tiny lamps are mounted, each one of which corresponds to one of the 20 points on the gain control (RCA systems do not control sound volume by means of a "fader," but by what is called the "gain control"). One of these lamps is always lighted while sound reproduction is in progress. If the gain control is on Point 9, then Lamp 9 will be lighted. If the gain control be moved to 12, Light 9 will be extinguished and Light 12 will light up. By this it is possible for any projectionist in the room to see, at a glance, exactly at what point or volume the speakers are operating.

The room is provided with what is claimed to be a very efficient sound monitoring system, but that any such system can possibly be of any large aid to the projectionists in determining sound volume or quality, must be subject to question. There are many reasons why it is impossible for it to be done with monitoring horns, one of which is that such horns must operate against the many mechanical sounds incident to projection.

THE SOUND heads are of distinctly new design and are deserving of special attention. They represent part of the RCA Photophone development of an improved system in both recording and reproduction, involving frequency range extension. The threading of these sound heads is very simple and easily done. The path of the film may be traced in Figure 1, which illustration shows the operating side of the head attached to a Simplex mechanism. The film passes down from the projector mechanism, around a smooth-faced drum (no sprocket teeth), under photocell A, over a constant speed sprocket, and on down over what corresponds to a take-up sprocket. All this of course is enclosed by metal doors, in which is a glass panel about 5 inches square. The exciter lamp-house, photo-tube base, transformer housing, the sound head itself, and the motor base are all in one casting.

The sound head mechanism is driven by the motor shown in Figure 2. The drive is by means of a worm and gear, the worm being on the inner end of the motor shaft. These gears run in an oil bath. The shaft is provided with an oil seal, so that the oil level may be carried above the level of the gearing without fear of oil leakage. The motor speed is 3,600 r.p.m.

All rotating shafts are mounted on ball-bearings. Other features of unusual interest are the sound drum, the damping wheel and the new pad roller brackets and the means for their adjustment, the photo-tube and prism condenser lens arrangement, the magnetically shielded photo-tube mechanism, a new form of exciter lamp socket, and the hand wheel for framing.

The new sound head has no sliding friction and no "sound gate." The film passes down around the sound drum immediately behind and a bit below the photocell (A, Fig. 1). Mounted on the back end of the shaft carrying the sound drum, is a light sheet metal casing, round in form and about 6 inches in diameter, containing a wheel of metal. This assembly consists of a thin outer casing, inside of which is suspended, on ball bearings, the wheel itself, the casing being filled with oil. The wheel is mounted on the hub of the casing, upon which it runs free. The effect of this is that the fly-wheel, the casing and the oil are ordinarily rotated at the same speed through friction of the sound drum with the film. Should any inequality in the film occur, such as, for example, a rough splice or a sprocket tooth ripple, the speed of the casing would tend to be varied slightly from constant, but the fly wheel, being heavy, would continue to run at constant speed, and the friction between the casing, the oil and the fly wheel would tend to bring the casing back to constant speed. This may not be altogether clear to some of you, but the effect is to smooth out all irregularities in the sound. Without such an arrangement any slight variation in film speed would tend to impair sound quality.

The exciter lamp socket is of a new type designed to permit pre-focus and quick removal and replacement. The exciter lamp itself is surrounded by a metal shield, open on one side. The top of the sprocket, which is of solid metallic construction, is a heavy knurled nut threaded on a socket, which latter is split into six sections. The effect of tightening this nut down is to press these sections together and thus clamp the lamp base solidly. To remove a lamp it is necessary only to loosen the nut and pull the lamp out, whereupon another one may be inserted and clamped in place. There are two slots in the socket which automatically locate the lamp filament in proper alignment.

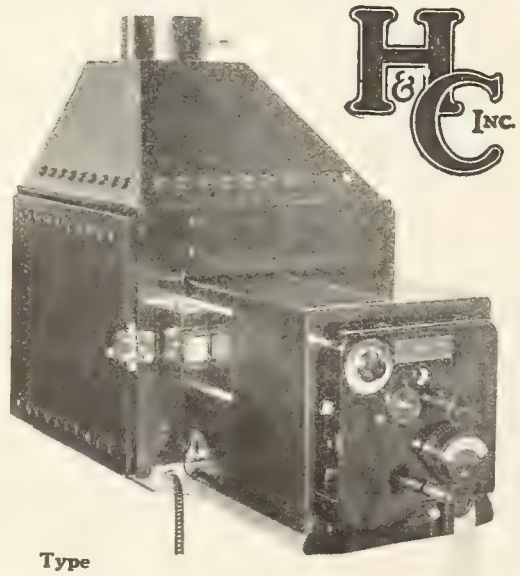
The motor switch is located on the operating side of the motor frame, in a very convenient place. The framing knob is a big knurled knob attached to the front end of the shaft. By means of it the projectionist may rotate the motor armature and everything connected with it.

THE VENTILATION system of the projection room is unique. The various rooms, including the main room, are ventilated by the main theatre ventilation system, so that the men are supplied with fully conditioned air, exactly as is the audience. In addition to this, however, there is an entirely separate system installed for the ventilation of projector lamphouses. Every lamphouse is connected thereto and may be ventilated to the maximum extent of 500 cubic feet of air per minute, which amount may, by conveniently located dampers, be reduced to any desired amount. This system has absolutely no connection of any sort with the theatre ventilation system, all gasses and heat from the various arcs being blown immediately to air outside the theatre building.



Built into the left end wall of the main room is the master switchboard, the rear of which opens into an adjoining room, so that access to its wires, bus bars and connections may be conveniently had. The board carries twelve 2-pole, double-throw switches, each switch and its circuit protected by cartridge fuses of 200-ampere capacity. The face of the board is protected by a metallic door, which when closed, covers the entire board. This door sets flush with the surface of the wall. It is supplied with a glass panel so that the projectionists may at all times observe the position of all switches.

On either side of this board, mounted on the wall about 6 feet from the floor, is a board carrying a voltmeter and an ammeter; also, a heavy knob by means of which the ballast resistances of the motor generator circuits are controlled. Remembering that the main board switches are all of double-throw type, and with the further information that each "side" is supplied by a different motor-generator, it will be understood that the instruments on each of these boards measures the voltage and amperage of one side, and the two knobs control the ballast resistance of either side. Put in another way, these knobs control the generator fields.

Down in the basement (where I was escorted by Chief Engineer Smith) are six great motor-generators by General Electric. Two have ratings of 40 k.w., or 110 volts and 400 amperes, and four of 30 k.w., or 100 volt, 300 amperes. Elsewhere are two other similar machines supplying the stage circuits.

These great machines are set in a row conveniently spaced and on bases which raise there working parts to convenient position, about 4 feet from the floor. Above is a heavy steel trolley track on which a chain hoist is mounted, so that any portion of any motor generator, or a whole machine, may be lifted and moved at will.

Returning to the main projection room: Into its right end wall a rack is built, its face flush with the plaster surface. The purpose of this rack is to enable the projection staff to control sound-on-film amplification.

On either side of the main room, removed one small room therefrom, is a room in which are mounted four more Kliegl spotlights, measuring 4 feet from rear wall of lamphouse to front of color attachments fastened thereto. These light projectors are also all equipped with beam shaping devices such as previously described. They will be handled by spotlight projectionists, not by the regular projection room staff.

Immediately adjoining the left main room wall is the rewind room. It is equipped with all things essential to the inspection and repair of film. In this room is a 24-reel capacity film storage cabinet so connected with the outer air by a metal fireproof duct that in the unlikely event that film catches on fire, all gasses and smoke are carried outside of the theatre.

In addition to all the various things I have set before you, there are lavatory rooms with hot and cold water, toilets, a shower bath and steel lockers for the projection staff.

Arthur Smith, who has served Roxy as chief projectionist for many years, will be chief projectionist of the RKO Roxy.

ALL-ELECTRIC REPRODUCTION

By A. N. MASON

IN THE LIGHT of recent developments, the storage batteries that accompanied most of the earlier sound systems seem fairly to fall into the category of emergency expedients, adopted because of the headlong demand for sound equipment in the early days, and not because they represented either the most suitable or the most economical method of achieving the purpose in hand.

Certainly, replacement of storage batteries by "all-electric" methods has made rapid progress in the year just past, in spite of (or perhaps, because of) unusual economic conditions. It is precisely the action of that large and important number of projectionists, managers and sound supervisors of theatre circuits in replacing their batteries with "socket-power" eliminators, plus the well-known fact that no manufacturer of sound equipment includes batteries in any of his recent models, that justify this long-range view of the storage battery as a temporary measure, used to fill the gap between the sudden need for sound equipment and the full commercial development of socket-power methods suited to theatre requirements.

In some of the earlier sound systems even the high-voltage, direct current needed to supply the plates of the amplifier tubes was provided by a rack of several hundred small storage batteries. There are comparatively few theatres left that have not eliminated that arrangement. Sound manufacturers themselves soon got rid of it. Charging, watering, cleaning and watching that number of batteries was an intolerable nuisance. The "A" and other batteries that provided low-voltage direct current for the filaments of tubes, for the exciting lamps and for the field coils of loud speakers lingered longer, partly because these batternes were fewer in number, and partly because "all-electric" methods for replacing them were not perfected quickly. But manufacturers began leaving them out of their new equipment as long as three years ago, and now theatres that still have such batteries seem to be eliminating them almost as rapidly as they wear out.

The choice of a convenient, economical and practical battery eliminator is therefore a question of timely importance to the projectionist and manager of any theatre where storage batteries are still in service.

Motor-Generators

THE EARLIEST wholesale assault upon the storage battery was undoubtedly that led by the motor-generator. This device is essentially a small dynamo, wound to deliver direct current of the voltage necessary for the circuits it is to supply. A motor, operated by the commercial power supply available in the theatre, drives it, and motor and generator are commonly coupled together into one instrument; sometimes, by means of suitable windings, they are one instrument.

The drawback to the original use of the motor-generator was that no generator, however well made, can deliver current as smooth as that of a storage battery, or smooth enough for the operation of a sound system. The small discontinuities of its current output would be heard in the sound as a hum—called commutator ripple. This hindrance was overcome by the development of suitable filters to smooth out the ripple, and the motor-generator thereupon became so popular that some of the early sound systems used this device entirely to supply all their direct current needs.

Motor-generators have since been used successfully to replace storage batteries of all kinds. Their disadvantages have been steadily eliminated as fast as they became apparent. For example, when brushes wore, and carbon dust collected in the slots of the commutator, sound would become noisy in spite of all filtering. This difficulty was minimized by using brushes made of a harder carbon, which wore out far less rapidly. The harder brushes, however, put a greater strain on the commutator. Projectionists then learned to sand the commutator at frequent intervals, rather than wait until—after a long period during which the sound had been more or less noisy—it became necessary to remove the armature and turn the commutator down on a lathe. Bearings that wore easily, used in some of the earlier models, have been improved, and projectionists have been guided by manufacturers—or have led themselves, by trial and error—into lubrication routines that proved immensely helpful in that direction.

Occasionally the noise of a generator in operation, or the vibration its motion created in floors or walls, could be heard by the audience. Sound-proofing methods were developed that involved, in extreme cases, mounting the generator on a base of concrete and cork. These have been carried so far that it is fair to say that there is now no case of this kind, however extreme, which cannot be solved by application of some form of those methods.

All these improvements, modifications and precautions, revealed as necessary by experience, have resulted in the battery-eliminating motor-generator of today, that is used in many theatres with success.

Rectifiers

THE RECTIFIER is a device fundamentally different from the motor-generator, one that came into commercial importance at a somewhat later date, and that operates upon another principle altogether. As such, it has never been troubled by the long process of development and evolution that made the motor-generator fit for theatre use; bein a different instrument, it did not share most of the genera-tor's initial handicaps. The rectifier has no moving parts to wear out or need replacement; therefore it needs no lubrication of any kind; it is not noisy enough in operation to set up vibration in floors or walls; no routines of attention and repair are necessary because there can be nothing to repair except for replacing worn-out tubes, while some of the latest types, that use copper-oxide "stacks" instead of tubes, need practically no attention.

The rectifier differs from the generator in that its action is entirely electrical, and not, as in the other case, partly electrical and partly mechanical. The action of the tubes—or stacks, whichever is used—is to convert the alternating current supplied to it into direct current. Like the motor-generator, the rectifier requires a filter for sound supply purposes; its initial output is rougher than that of the generator, and its filter correspondingly more effective. Development of a low-voltage, high-current filter of the required degree of perfection was one of the things that delayed the advent of the rectifier as a storage battery eliminator for theatre use.

For this reason, perhaps, the rectifier's introduction to the sound field was as a means of replacing the inordinate number of small storage batteries used for plate supply. New amplifiers were devised in which the rectifier—using tubes at first, but in some makes, copper-oxide stacks—was an integral part. In some models rectifiers were added to the sound apparatus to supply plate current to the earlier type of amplifiers. Still another method that came into common use was to use a rectifier built into a large amplifier to supply both its own plate needs and those of a smaller amplifier not similarly equipped.

The advent of tube rectifiers for this purpose was easily noticed. Tubes were divided into rectifier and amplifier tubes, and both needed replacing from time to time. The stack rectifier fulfilling the same function was less conspicuous. Since nothing about it needed either replacement or attention, the designer would bury the stack away under other apparatus wherever he thought convenient. Such stacks have been used for years in many theatres by projectionists who remember their presence only at long intervals, if at all.

The rectifier as a means of eliminating large A, H and F storage batteries, lagged behind the motor-generator, as has been said, but within the past year it appears to have advanced in its development, and it promises to have an important future.

The copper-sulphide and copper-oxide stacks, in particular, have only within the past year come to rival the tube in such battery-replacement rectifiers. The first-named type has a comparatively low maintenance cost—there being no tubes to burn out—while the cost of maintaining the copper-oxide instrument is practically zero. The copper-sulphide type needs very little watching or attention of any kind; the copper-oxide, none at all. In each case it is a good idea to blow out accumulated dust with a bellows once in six months or so, and it is never a bad thought with any electrical apparatus to check over soldered connections at some similar interval.

Some manufacturers add a small relay, which functions when an exciting lamp burns out; others avoid this by a change in design and wiring. Where the relay exists, it should be checked occasionally to make sure it has not become inoperative through inaction.

Stack Rectifiers

BOTH TYPES of stack consist of a number of metal discs coated with the sulphide—or the oxide, as the case may be—and held together by pressure. The exact degree of pressure is important, and the nuts holding the discs together are taken up in the factory by precision machinery and locked into place so they cannot move. Each stack is surrounded by fins to radiate the heat developed by its operation. Four such stacks in a bridge circuit commonly make up one rectifier unit.

The action of the copper sulphide rectifier is known to be chemical, and stacks of this kind, while they have a long life, running over a number of years of ordinary theatre operation, do eventually wear out through chemical deterioration. Toward the end of their expected life it is necessary to watch them and have spares on hand. When the stack finally becomes inoperative it is removed from the rectifier box (which also contains the filter) and a new one installed.

The copper oxide type, on the contrary, seems never to wear out. Its action is definitely known not to be chemical, but nothing else is known about it. It is as mysterious as electricity itself, and for all anyone is able to say at the present time, it can go on functioning eternally. In the absence of any acceptable theory of its conduct, life tests have been made upon copper-oxide stacks. They have thus far brought out no signs of deterioration. Commercial practice bears out the experience of the laboratories. The first stacks of this type, made eight or ten years ago for radio B eliminators and the field supply of radio speakers, are still working. Some projectionists have been using stacks for years as part of their plate supply or speaker field supply rectifiers.

Comparative Costs

IN DETERMINING the choice of a battery eliminator there are several factors to be considered besides the initial purchase price. Price, of course, is not only an inadequate criterion by itself; it may be and sometimes is the smallest part of the actual cost involved. Installation expense is a matter of great importance. It can be extremely small in some theatres, and fantastically high in others. The physical layout of the projection room, and the consequent ease and economy with which new pipe can be run and new wires pulled in, is largely responsible for this difference from theatre to theatre. It is a difference that contributes markedly to making the choice of a battery substitute an individual problem for each theatre concerned. In some cases one motor-generator, with its filters, located at some central point, may be the most practical answer to the installation problem. Again the necessity of building a sound-proof base for the motor generator in that location may swing the decision toward combination rectifiers similarly located; or the local conditions may call for a number of rectifiers, each located conveniently to the apparatus which it is intended to serve.

Maintenance costs are another matter that deserve careful thought. They go on after purchase price and installation expense have been written off and forgotten. The motor-generator requires brushes, oil, attention to its commutator, and at reasonable intervals it may or may not need the services of a machine shop in turning down the commutator or in the matter of the bearings. The chief maintenance cost in the case of the tube rectifier is the replacing of tubes, of which a reasonable supply of spares must always be kept on hand. A tube burning out suddenly can stop the show for a brief interval, but if they are changed when they show signs of reasonable age, without waiting for the last spark of life, this risk is very small. The copper sulphide rectifier requires replacement of its stack, which may amount to about a third, or possibly even a half, of the original cost of the apparatus, according to circumstances, and this also should be done in reasonable time to avoid the long delay to the show that will follow if the stack breaks down while in use. The copper oxide rectifier may generally be regarded as pretty self-sustaining.

or in reply to his telegram. . . . By contracting to exhibit the other production during the week when plaintiff's (producer's) was to have appeared, defendant (theatre owner) put it beyond his power to perform so far as plaintiff was concerned."

FILM CONTRACT LAW

IT IS WELL settled that any person who forecloses a lien on property, such as films, may rent or sell the same. The same contract law is applicable after a creditor notifies the owner of the property that if payments past due are not promptly paid he intends to sell or rent the property.

For illustration, in Lewyn vs. Exchange (35 F. [2d] 129), a contract entered into by a man named Lewyn with a producer provided for the production, financing and exploitation of a photoplay. The producer agreed to distribute the picture and bear other expenses.

Another contract made with a creditor provided that the latter had the privilege of seizing the film if its advances were not promptly paid. Subsequently, the creditor notified Lewyn of the true state of conditions and as the money advanced was not paid the Court held the creditor not liable for exhibiting and renting the film to secure payment of its advances.

RECTIFIERS FOR SOUND

● A line of rectifiers to replace storage batteries in sound systems has been brought out by the P. E. Chapman Electrical Works of St. Louis. One size has been developed to feed direct current to the exciting lamp of all sound systems, and the filaments of the photoelectric cell amplifier usually attached to the projector. Other rectifiers are adapted to feed the amplification system.

There are three sizes in the line thus far, one to feed the 41a amplifier, another for an 8a or 8b amplifier, and the other as indicated above, for exciter lamp and photocell amplifier. Input ratings are 110 to 135 volts, 60 cycles, single-phase. Output of the first size is specified at 3 amperes, 8-12 volts d. c.; the second, 2.6 amperes, 8-10 volts d. c.; and the third, two d. c. circuits, one 4 amperes, 8-12 volts (exciter lamp); and the other, 3 amperes, 8-12 volts, adapted to feed the pickup system.

PROJECTION LAMP

● A new projection lamp has been developed by the Imperial Electric and Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles. In place of the conventional feed rollers and tension springs, the Sterling high-intensity employs a heavy feed screw and positive clamping carbon grip.

The positive contact shoes are so designed that they may be removed for inspection without the aid of tools by pressing the contact arms together at the lower end and lifting the contacts. It is not necessary to clean the contacts daily, as it is desirable to obtain a natural polish from contact with the carbon itself.

REFLECTOR RESILVERING

● A resilvering laboratory for the refinishing of used projection reflectors has been announced by the Fish-Schurman Company of New York. The process includes complete removal of old coatings, cleaning of silvered surface, depositing of a new coat of silver and protecting it by an extra heavy electrolytic copper deposit, over which a final heat-resisting non-peeling backing is applied. Pitted reflectors can also be reground and repolished.

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

THE PERFORATED VERSUS THE SOLID SCREEN

I DESIRE again to go on record as absolutely opposed to the perforated screen, at least until the sponsers of such surfaces have produced much more convincing evidence than they have up to this time that it is better than the solid surface.

To this date I have seen no real evidence set forth that perforation is necessary. Granting there may be some very small advantage, from the viewpoint of sound, there are decided disadvantages which in my opinion, very far outweigh them.

I brought this matter before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at its Washington meeting last spring. Not one of the sound and theatre men there present, including Erpi men, was able to refute my charge that a solid screen, with horns at sides, top or bottom, was preferable to the perforated screen. Even Erpi men made the admission that probably only a relatively small percentage of the members of audiences would be able to detect any difference if the horns were placed in one of the positions named. Others, including President Goldsmith of the S.M.P.E. and a high official in RCA, said they had grave doubts as to the wisdom of using perforated screens.

Let us for a moment examine the claims as made by Erpi, the chief sponsor of perforated screens. They amount, so far as I am aware, chiefly to the contention that (a) sound distribution will be somewhat better than with horns at locations above named, and (b) the best effect is produced when the sound issues as closely as possible to the figure or object from whence it is presumed to emanate.

That is, so far as I know (and I have listened to various sound men set forth the reasons for perforation and horn placement in back of the screen) all the major advantages claimed.

Let us have a look-see at the other side. First, unquestionably the perforated screen sets up heavy light loss. Projectionists and directors of projection universally agree to, that, and sound men do not question it. Exhibitors meanwhile are demanding screen illumination which has put a very heavy strain on just about everything in connection with projection, including the films (high spot temperature) themselves. Second, the very fact that while only one-tenth or less of the screen surface is open to sound passage demands that we concede that the screen must and does act as a muffler. Third, perforation adds measurably to screen cost, and that is a serious matter. Fourth, the perforated screen loses reflection power much faster than the solid one, for reasons well understood by all projectionists and directors of projection; also, it is much more difficult to clean. Fifth, with horns placed in one or more of the locations before suggested, the baffling effect would be entirely removed and presumably the same sound distribution effect, minus much of the sound loss, might be had by placing in front of the horns a baffle of light cloth or other material. Sixth, while granting there might be some added injury in the nature of sound fade-away at extreme seating angles (down front in wide auditoriums), certainly all the rest of the audience should have measurably better sound effect, with less—decidedly less—strain on the sound apparatus. Seventh, those who have decided back-of-the-screen horn placement to be best have invariably had knowledge of horn position when making their decision. I venture the assertion that with carefully worked out horn placement and a solid screen, if those same men attended a theatre without any inkling of the fact that this was the case, not one in ten (if any at all) would detect any difference, except indeed that they might feel moved to comment upon the excellence of results and to wonder why the picture itself looked so much better than usual.

QUESTIONS IN LICENSE TESTS

FROM TIME to time, probably an average of once a week, I receive requests for a "list of questions" asked by examiners, not infrequently naming some particular examining board.

There is no such list. The examination, which consisted of a set of routine questions, the same ones being asked each time, would be in the nature of a very bad joke. The examiner who has ordinary intelligence, which presumably includes all of them, asks such questions as may seem necessary to determine the amount of knowledge possessed by an applicant on various items in projection work.

If an examiner asks a question regarding, for example, intermittent movements or resistance, and an answer is promptly given and is of such a nature as to indicate that the applicant for license has a good general understanding of intermittent movements or resistance, or whatever the subject may be, the examiner is unlikely to ask many more questions on that topic. However, if the applicant hesitates too much, or gives a doubtful answer, then the examiner very naturally will ask other questions along the same lines, to ascertain whether the hesitation or poor answer is due to nervousness, to inability to express the matter clearly, or to lack of knowledge.

If, for example, I were an examiner and asked an applicant for a license this question: "Why has the rotating shutter of a motion picture projector more than one blade?" and he answered promptly or without too much hesitation, "Because of the time element; the light interruptions must be of a certain proportion and occur with sufficient frequency so that the dark periods will not be discerned by the eyes of the audiences, or there will be a resultant flicker and heavy eye strain," I would instantly conclude that the applicant understood shutter action at least very well, and would ask no further questions along that line.

On the other hand, if the applicant hesitated too much, or made an unsatisfactory answer, I should ask other questions covering the same point. That is the way a proper examination is conducted.

If there were such a list, I most emphatically would not print it. We do not want men licensed who merely know a lot of answers "by heart," but men who understand projection thoroughly, both in its practical and technical phases.

ARE BLACK AND WHITE COLORS?

USUALLY one can get plenty of argument if he declares that neither black nor white is a color. Recently Projectionist Irl Gordon sent in a clipping from some question and answer department which appears to answer these questions very thoroughly, and it seems to me completely, too. It reads as follows:

"Q. Are black and white colors?

"A. Speaking in a physical sense, black is not a color. It indicates the total absence of light; white, on the other hand, is the combination of all colors of the spectrum. In art, however, black and white are colors."

EXPOUNDING BASIC ELECTRICS

RECENTLY in "The Blue-book School" in the HERALD, the question was asked, "(A) Tell us your idea of what basic knowledge is necessary to an understanding of electrical action. (B) Just why is it essential that the projectionist have a good basic knowledge of electrical action; also, what will be the result if he has not such basic knowledge?"

The published answer to this question was excellent, but here is one by a Blue-book School "student," Stanley G. Williams of Cornwall, Ontario, so complete that it deserves to be quoted in full. Williams says:

"A good basic knowledge of electrical action should include the latest theories concerning molecules, atoms, electrons, polarity, magnetism and Ohm's Law.

"No one yet quite knows what electricity really is. Various theories have, however, been advanced by engineers and scientists, and today we seem to have one that seems to fit in with our observations and experiments.

"The smallest particle in the structure of any particular kind of matter—for example, steel, wood or butter—is the molecule. Each molecule is entirely separate and distinct from every other molecule. The distance between them varies with the state of the particular matter they compose. In dense solids, such as steel, they are very close together. In liquids, such as water, they are further apart. In gases—air, for example—they are very far apart—speaking relatively. The distances, as we are accustomed to view distance, are of course infinitesimal. In steel the 'distance' is too small to be readily conceived.

"The molecule is a structure made up of two or more atoms—in air, two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen. A molecule of battery electrolyte consists of two atoms of hydrogen, one of sulphur and four of oxygen. Ordinarily table salt molecules have one atom of sodium and one of chlorine, and so on through the whole long, long list.

"Scientists claim that the atom is also a structure consisting of electrical charges; the electron, which is negative; the nuclei, or proton, which is positive.

"The accepted theory of today is that a flow of electricity is a disturbance of electrons. The speed of this disturbance is approximately 186,000 miles per second.

"The source of an electromotive force (e.m.f.), be it battery or dynamo, has a positive pole—or terminal, and a negative pole—or terminal. When the battery is charged, or the dynamo is properly set up and running, there is an electrical pressure difference, measured in volts, between these two poles or terminals. If a wire consisting of current-carrying materials be attached to each of these poles or terminals, and these wires be brought into physical contact with each other, at any point in their length, there will be a 'flow' of current established, the amount of which will be dependent upon the amount of pressure or voltage established in or by the battery or dynamo. This flow is due to the effort of the two (negative and positive) to equalize themselves, or put in another way, an effort to dissipate the pressure between negative and positive poles.

"Negative charges repel negative charges. Positive charges repel charges of the same polarity. Electrical affinity exists only between opposite of the same power sources.

"Magnets are classed as natural and artificial. The natural magnet is a piece of iron called 'lodestone.' It has the power to attract certain classes of metals to itself, which power is what is known as 'magnetism.' A bit of lodestone, if suspended from some object by means of a thread, will so align itself that its opposite poles will point to the North and South Poles, or at least to the magnetic poles.

"Artificial magnets may be either temporary or permanent. The permanent magnet is made of hard steel. It retains its magnetic power indefinitely. The temporary magnet retains its magnetic power only while in actual or magnetic contact with another magnet. Suspend two magnets near each other and you will note that their opposite poles; namely, north or south, will attract each other, whereas their like poles will repel each other.

"All current carrying wires or conductors are surrounded by invisible concentric circles termed 'lines of force.' The direction of these lines, with relation to the conductor, depends upon the direction of the current action in the conductor itself. The strength of the lines will be dependent upon the strength of the electrical action (current flow) in the conductor.

"If we wind a wire spirally around a core of soft iron and pass an alternating current through the wire, lines of force will join each other and pass through the iron, imparting to it magnetic power. It loses this power, however, when the current is cut off. Such a contrivance is called electromagnet.

"At this point we must consider inductance, which is that property of magnetism which enables it to set up an induced electric current in an electric conductor with which it has no mechanical connection. Immediately a.c. starts to flow through a wire, lines of magnetic force surround the conductor and expand to their maximum for the current action set up in the wire. Instantly the current is shut off, the lines of force collapse and presumably return into the wire. This action takes place at each alternation. Place the wire of another closed circuit and in that circuit an e.m.f. will be instantly induced, but this induction will only continue so long as an a.c. current is passed through the first circuit and the expanding and contracting lines of magnetic force of the first circuit cut across a portion of the second circuit.

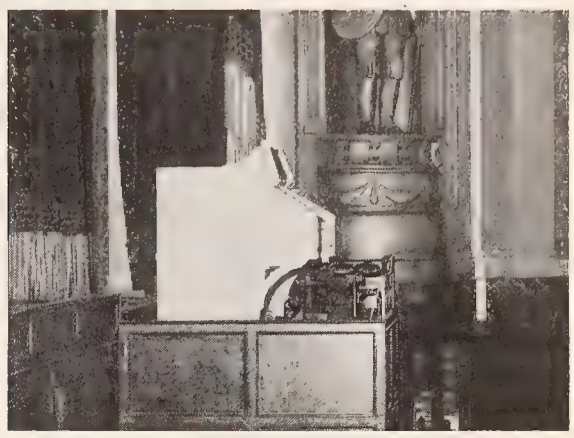
"In order to secure service (work) from a generator at a distance therefrom, we must extend its terminals. This is done by connecting a suitable wire to each of them. These wires then become in effect the generator terminals at any point of their length. They are positive and negative, exactly as are the terminals to which they are attached. We may therefore connect power producing devices of suitable capacity and voltage between them at any point; a lamp for light, a motor for power, or a heat producing device for heat.

"Electric current must have a complete circuit over which it may pass from one pole of the power source to the other pole. It 'flows' out from one pole, through the power, heat or light producing device, into the other wire and back to the other generator terminal. The pressure of the generator is expressed in volts, the current volume or flow in amperes, and the resistance encountered by the current in flowing through the wires and power producing device, in ohms.

"All conductors, switches, power producing devices, etc., offer resistance to current flow, but in a widely varying degree. To measure this resistance Ohm's Law was developed. It states that the resistance of anything through which electric current flows may be determined by dividing the number of amperes of current flowing by the applied voltage, the voltage being measured at the terminals of whatever circuit or individual device is being measured."



This is, in my judgment, an able discussion of the subject, though it was not an answer suitable for publication to the question as asked. However, there are some minor points where I hold there is error. Let us see how many projectionists can point them out.

As to Section B of the question, the projectionist must handle electrical devices of many sorts, and certainly a man may fairly be expected to handle them better and more efficiently if he has basic understanding of the power he is applying to them. Lack of such basic knowledge cannot mean anything but decreased efficiency in the operation of electrical devices and delay when trouble comes.

screen made from bleached cotton cloth similar to that used for bed sheeting would be any good for sound."

The carbons will be just as well as ever, provided they are thoroughly dried. You might leave them in clean water for a month without any injury to them whatsoever. Remember, though, they must be thoroughly dried before you try to use them, or the arc will sputter.

Cloth such as you speak of would be all right with the horns behind it, provided it contains no starch. I do not say it would be an efficient screen, but while new and clean it would not be bad, always provided the cloth be bleached quite white. Cloth would not reflect nearly the same percentage of light that modern screens do, but it would pass sound somewhat better, I think.

LIGHTING THE AUDITORIUM

AT THE LAST meeting of the Projection Practice Committee of the S.M.P.E., President Goldsmith, who attended, suggested that the picture would be very much easier on the eyes of observers if different lights were substituted in the auditorium for those now in use. He said he had done considerable experimenting, and had found that the use of flame-colored lights in the auditorium would enable exhibitors to light the auditorium more than is now possible without in any degree lowering the screen image visibility, and at the same time decreasing eye strain very materially.

Why cannot some exhibitors give this a tryout? It sounds feasible to me and would involve nothing more than the cost of amber lamps.

If any try this, it is hoped they will let me hear what the results were. But don't decide until the lights have been in use at least two or three days. Often effects which, because of their newness, do not please very well, please immensely when we get accustomed to the change.

CORRECTING FIGURES ON S.R.A. CARBONS

EVERY ONCE in a while (not often, thanks be!) I pull a boner. Right now I am as guilty as His Satanic Majesty's Dominions, as is indicated by the following letter from Mr. E. R. Geib, manager of the Arc Department of the National Carbon Company. He says:

"Dear Mr. Richardson, I have read with a great deal of interest your comments on the capacity of S. R. A. carbons in the October issue of Better Theatres. You may rest assured we appreciate your assistance in conveying proper carbon information to projectionists. There is just one place where we believe a slight typographical error has slipped in in the fifth paragraph of the second column, reading:"

"'S.R.A. carbons of from 12 to 15 millimeters are given the following current ratings, etc.' This paragraph should read, '12-mm. combination, 28 to 32 amperes (sputtering starts at 34 amperes), 13-mm., 32 to 42 amperes (above 44 sputtering may be expected).'

"There has not been sufficient demand for a 14-mm. combination to justify the company's placing it on the market, but from laboratory tests we would say a 14-mm. positive would carry from 42 to 52 amperes. Above 55 there would sputtering."

I appreciate the kindness with which the correction is made, but think I must slap Friend Geib on the wrist, for the figures were taken from Table V of the new National Carbon Company Projection Carbon book (Page 48), and in that table, now before me, 14-mm. carbons are quoted to carry what my article said. Surely if they are quoted in their own table, I had no reason to assume they were not available.

As to the error, it is quite evident that I inadvertently quoted the second figure instead of the first in the left hand column of the afore named table, and the first figures of the second column, the second (13-mm.) the same, finally correcting myself without realizing the error I had made on the fourth or 14-mm. combination.

However (Haw, haw, haw!) Friend Geib himself erred in quoting the paragraph by using 15 where I used 14 in print. So maybe we're more or less even anyhow.

NEW BRITISH PROJECTION PAPER

I AM IN receipt of a copy of the first issue of a new publication published in London, England. It is a monthly called Projectionists Journal. Its initial number consists of four neatly gotten up pages filled with matter of real value to Projectionists in that "right little tight little isle."

The publication is issued by the Guild of British Kinema Projectionists and Technicians, Ltd., of which Mr. Stanley T. Perry is president. It proposes to supply news items of the various "courts" of the Guild, scattered throughout various cities of England. The initial number carries an editorial by President Perry explaining the purposes of the journal.

I compliment the Guild upon this forward step. Such a publication is needed over there by reason of the reluctance of British trade papers to give publication to projection matters, save those dealing solely with equipment or technical projection matters.

May I be permitted to offer a bit of advice to the Journal Editor? Technical projection problems have great publication value, as also have practical problems in the work of projection. But after all, that forms at this time only half the possible value of such a journal as has been launched. The other half consists of editorials and articles tending to build up the pride and ambition of the men themselves, to instill in them pride in their profession and leading them to regard and treat projection as a profession. More than this, it is of importance that exhibitors and managers be addressed and led to understand that they may gain at the box office and in projection overhead by being willing to pay enough money to make projection attractive to men of real ability.

Of course it is not claimed that mere increase in pay will materially alter the incompetent men. It certainly will, however, act to replace gradually the incompetent.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

I AM enclosing a rough plan of a 500-seat neighborhood or small town theatre which embodies my ideas (several of which I have not yet seen used) of a theatre of this type. This theatre will not be built, but I will greatly appreciate your comment.

I have found that commercial space in a house of this size is nearly always unrentable and with this in mind have omitted stores, etc., and planned its placement between existing buildings with an alley or exit court at the rear in preference to the L-shaped layout with stores, etc., as is customary in larger houses. An exit court on one side would be desirable but is apparently unnecessary in Michigan.

Features I particularly wish you to note are: Ample size of stage placement of front seats 16 feet to 20 feet from screen, all front seats within vision lines, location and width of aisles, number of seats to each section (this arrangement is well worth the sacrifice of seats), exit passages designed for free movement of traffic, depth of foyer, exit well providing a space which will attract patrons to exit doors, location of rest room stair and box office eliminating cross traffic in foyer and using otherwise waste lobby space, check room for baby carriages, packages, etc., and providing entrance to balcony rooms as well as an outside door for exit from balcony and film delivery, etc.; separate stair to commercial or living quarters, and manager's office off foyer.

On balcony plan please note: Two exits from projection room (one emergency) location of projection room on 12-foot balcony, using otherwise waste space and shortening projection throw so that low intensity lamps would be entirely satisfactory. In the basement I have shown location of rest rooms in waste space, size and layout of rest rooms and common foundation with lobby walls. You may object to the common stair to rest rooms, but it has been my experience that this is not an issue. It is further my intention that the separate lounges would be distinctively decorated and well marked. I have placed the women's to the left side of the theatre, which is opposite to the natural direction and would therefore be less liable to be mistaken.

This plan is quite flexible and I believe entirely practical, although it could be altered to be slightly more economical to build.

If you have been patient enough to read this long letter, I thank you.—G. P.

The Answer:

I AGREE with you that commercial space in a theatre of the size you mentioned is nearly always unrentable unless the theatre is located in the heart of a city or on a very busy street. On the other hand, besides that I always figured that when an exhibitor builds a theatre out of his own finances he never should go into the real estate business, as that is entirely out of his line. However, should the theatre be leased and the owner derive the interest out of the commercial space, it might be a different proposition.

There are only two means of egress required for a 500-seat house. The location of those exits are well planned, but are too narrow. The majority of the theatre codes ask for at least a 6-foot opening, while you have only planned 4-foot, 6-inch. On account of the small seating capacity of the theatre no side exit courts are necessary.

Your stage size is ample. Of course you could increase the width of the proscenium arch a little bit more, as a 30-foot arch would be just about right.

It would be better to build the stairway from the stage to the basement parallel to the wall between stage and exit space than to build it around the corner, as it takes too much space from the back stage; besides, you will have to provide a means of egress from the stage to the alley independently, and planning the exit door at the head of the stairway, the same exit could answer for egress from basement. Of course this stairway should be enclosed with a fireproof wall.

The distance of the front seats (20 feet) from screen is not any too large, but of course the screen could be put farther back.

The orchestra pit (6 feetx18 feet) is rather small.

I do not like the arrangement of the aisles, as you have entirely too much waste space taken by aisles. You could eliminate two wall aisles. At present for your requirements, you have now 20 seats in one row across the house. The majority of the codes allow you 13 seats in a row, with aisles on each side, and not more than seven seats between aisles and wall, so why not build the center bank of 13 seats, and the side banks of five seats each, giving 23 seats in a row. Figuring the width of the seats at 20 inches, this would allow you at least 4-foot aisles, with about 4 inches to 6 inches space between the wall and end seats for the wall banks. Always remember that the center seats are the seats in the house. Besides, by eliminating the two wall aisles, you save the carpets and aisle lights, and you will have more seats than shown on your plan.

You could thus eliminate the stair-way beyond the box office to basement, giving you space for three sets of doors and providing you with space for lobby or vestibule, which I deem is necessary, and by arranging the seats as above described you will gain enough space for a good-sized lobby. Build your box office in the way of a ticket booth.

There is no objection to the use of a common stairway to the rest rooms, but if you would like to have this proposition as you planned in the basement, it might be just as well to have the stairway enter into one general lounge used by men and women and have the rest rooms of this general lounge. There should always be some kind of a room, either smoking or rest room, between toilets and general lounge. This idea you will find carried out a great deal in the larger cities.

If according to my plan you would have too many seats, it would be well to reduce the total length of the building. Of the extra space you could use 4 feet next to the alley so that you could build the stairway from the stage to the basement outside of the rear stage wall. This would give you a larger stage space by eliminating the stairway from stage proper, and the balance of the space saved you could use either to enlarge the foyer or lobby.

ceiling make it a decorative piece of the first order.

The plain surfaces of this ceiling are of sound-absorbing acoustical plaster, sponge-stippled in tones of light warm sand color. The designs in relief are in the same color, but glazed slightly to accentuate and enliven them with highlights. This ceiling of neutral tone forms a ground upon which colors gorgeous or delicate may be painted by means of the light projected from the great central chandelier. The shadings may be changed and modulated at will at the electron control board on the stage.

Under the seats are triangular perforated metal heads of the ventilating ducts, through which the vitiated air is removed from the auditorium to the plenum chamber under the floor, to be passed to the exhaust or to the air conditioning plant. There are also ventilating grilles, of golden bronze in the side walls, some for direct radiation, others for ventilation. Fully conditioned air is admitted to the auditorium from circular ducts opening downward through the ceiling. The mouths of these ducts are covered by circular baffle plates hung slightly below the ceiling in splayed circular openings. These baffles disperse the air delivered by the ducts and cause it to settle gently down to the audience. Air is admitted also through the light sources in the mezzanine soffits.

Auditorium Lighting

The ceiling is pierced by nearly 200 round openings, each 5 inches in diameter, through which special down light units, designed by Professor Stanley R. McCandless of Yale, project their light evenly into all parts of the auditorium. These units are so aimed that they throw their light slightly towards the stage, with those in the front section directed somewhat towards the main center line of the auditorium as well as forward. Consequently none of these lights shine directly in the eyes of anyone in the audience, and they are not visible as spots of light unless one looks backward and upward, in which case only two or three would be seen at all directly. This provides illumination of ample intensity that is yet soft and agreeable in effect.

The down light units are of special and unusual design. Each consists of a parabolic reflector fixed mouth upward and with a round opening in its lower part. The lamp is fixed on a slanting position near the bottom of the reflector. The light is reflected upward to the circular cover of the unit, which in turn reflects it downward through the opening in the bottom, where it passes through condensing lenses. The reflecting surfaces are of errodeum plating, on a bronze base. Below the lenses and just over the tubular lining of the light port, is a square plate of pyrex glass to absorb the heat. The mouth of the port hole is provided with a wire screen to prevent anything from falling through into the auditorium. As a result of the design of this unit, the illumination is remarkably even. It was desired to keep the spread of the beam within 30°, and each unit illuminates an area about 22 feet in diameter at the level of the orchestar floor from a height of approximately 92 feet. Each of these units contains a 250-watt lamp. The down lights are white only.

For lighting the first and second mezzanines and the portion of the orchestra floor that is under the first mezzanine, continuous light sources extending entirely across the room and partly recessed in the balcony soffit (under-side of the mezzanine), are provided. These are formed of sheets of plate glass, spaced one above the other and over-lapping, which are held by metal supports below a recessed box containing the lamps. The light is soft and free from glare.

The third mezzanine is lighted by drum-shaped fixtures of glass and metal set tight against the under side of the gallery that contains the projection room, spot light room, etc., extending from side to side at the topmost level. There are no bracket or other side wall fixtures in the auditorium.

A striking feature of the lighting is the single chandelier, a colossal louver fixture located somewhat forward of the center of the ceiling. The top section is of plaster on a framework of steel. The three sections below, and the smaller portion at the bottom, are of sheet steel reinforced with curved ribs of steel angles. The whole fixture is painted a light buff, or warm sand color. Within the three metal bells are arranged lamps in individual directary reflectors, which confine the light to a narrow beam with a minimum of spill light. These units are fitted with colored roundels—red, blue, green and amber. They are directed upward and towards the perimeter of the bells, throwing their light upon the curved surfaces above them. Their narrow beams permit the decoration of these surfaces with vari-colored bands of light radiating upward in rainbow hues, as well as other unusual effects. Arranged just within the edge of each of these bells is a continuous row of colored lamps in red, blue, green, and amber of wattages graduated according to the amount of light absorbed by the various colored envelopes. These lamps throw their light upon the surfaces above and permit still further effects. The pendant at the bottom of the fixture, ending in the ball, consists of three circular trough reflectors, one above the other, containing lamps, which illuminate the surface of the lower bell section next above.

Acess to the units in the upper two metal bells or louvers for relamping or other maintenance, is had from the double-deck steel "cat-walk" platforms within the fixture. Access to the units in the lower bell is had through the opening in the bottom of the section above by lowering this section two feet. For this purpose this portion is suspended from a telescoping steel frame. Maintenance of the units in the section below the lowest bell is accomplished by lowering this section to the orchestra level on a cable suspended from a winch above the fixture. Incidentally, there are four down-lights in the plaster bell of the fixture.

This chandelier is also a great spotlight station containing batteries of projectors with color filters operated by selsyn control from the electron-control board on the stage. There are eighteen 2,000-watt spotlight projectors in back of circular portholes in the top bell of the chandelier, and there are four spotlights of 2,000 watts each in back of rectangular portholes in the first metal bell, which is next below the plaster bell. The group of 18 spotlighting units are for lighting the orchestra pit during overtures. With them, mobile color effects of great flexibility and range may be produced. The four units in the tier below illuminate the contour curtain with changing colors.

The orchestra pit, or overture lighting spots, are hung over a segmental opening in the concrete floor of a booth of hollow tile and concrete slab construction that is built in the attic space directly over the chandelier. Through a trap door in this floor and down in a steel ladder access is had to the interior of the chandelier. The booth over the fixture is reached by a railed steel "cat-walk" from the rear of the attic. This walk extends the whole length of the attic and connects with a transverse walk above the proscenium border. The down lights distributed over the ceiling are easily reached for maintenance.

[The other portions of the RKO Roxy will be discussed in detail by Mr. Clute in the January 14*th issue.*]

A MESSAGE

From the World's Oldest and Largest Manufacturers of Motion Picture Projectors

For nearly twenty years I have been actively connected with this Company and many others have been with us from ten years to over a quarter of a century. The manufacture of motion picture projectors is on a comparatively restricted basis calling for highly specialized knowledge and it is gratifying and important to have a personnel which is thoroughly experienced.

It is unfortunate that the industry does not more fully realize that in the manufacture of motion picture projectors precision workmanship has been established in our plant for many years which is only equalled in the manufacture of scientific instruments. Our personnel has a full understanding of the exacting requirements of the motion picture industry and we shall continue to produce and develop on the highest possible plane with reasonable, practical limitations, regardless of conditions.

The neglect of motion picture equipment is a false economy and the industry is paying for more through loss of entertainment value, damage to film and other evils, than would be incurred by reasonable repair and replacement. There is good reason to believe, however, that conditions are improving and that during the coming year theatre owners and managers will have a restored confidence which will enable them to see more clearly the harm done by unwise neglect.

With a firm belief that the outlook is already more cheerful and that much better times are not far away, I take great pleasure in extending to the Motion Picture Industry Best Wishes for A Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 109, No. 13 — December 24, 1932

READING THE HERALD

HAVE you been noticing the flourish with which the exhibitors in the lesser towns, and some of the larger ones, too, are giving voice in our newly reinstated department, "What the Picture Did for Me"?

Incidental to the warm flow of response is a line of correspondence which brings to us anew an appreciation of the careful attention which the thousands of industrious showmen of the nation give to every expression, from Motion Picture Herald, from the distributors' advertising announcements and from fellow exhibitor contributions concerning the product.

The exhibitor demands information about the pictures. He can supply his own adjectives, but of facts he cannot get enough. One tiny mistake in our release chart draws a dozen letters, and a serious one, of which happily we have few, may draw a hundred.

The service departments, which by their routine character attract little special attention on a Broadway hectic in pursuit and exploitation of the latest box office hope, are to the working showman in the field as important as a table of logarithms to a navigator.

Many an exhibitor reader of Motion Picture Herald starts his reading at the back of the book where the departments begin. One, and one of our many quarter-of-a-century subscribers, is so concentrated in his attention to departments that he wrote in this week suggesting that we run a table of contents in the release chart section—so we've invited his attention to the one we've had for a year or so on Page 8.

DON'T WIRE—WRITE

WE have troubles of our own but there's time to drop a hint to the Western Union that maybe there's an impairment of goodwill in some of the current activities including the use of messenger boy access to deliver samples of breakfast food and motor makers' selling messages. The messenger boy gets in because he's supposed to be carrying something immediately important. When that presumption is destroyed he won't get in so quickly. With the telegraph companies doing this and that in merchandising and advertising, we've taken to reading the mail first and looking at the messages after lunch.

KING RINGAPAT of the Big Nambas in the New Hebrides has announced, apparently as a New Year resolve, that he will never eat man's flesh, black or white, and has sent assurances to that effect to his contemporary highness, King George of England. Now, if various industries and businesses can bring themselves to the foregoing of "dog eat dog" tactics and general commercial cannibalism, civilization will have been begun.

SALOON COMPETITION

MR. CARL LAEMMLE has spoken a right lively piece for the press about what a great disaster the return of the saloon would be for the business of the motion picture. We make no argument for the saloon, which was good or bad as ordained by its management and patronage, but it may be observed that we recall no vast wave of prosperity which hit the box office with the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment. When Mr. Laemmle started his climb to fame and fortune with a nickelodeon on Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, there were at least one or two saloons in the vicinity, and the rise of the motion picture, by competition for the nickels, closed many a bar in Chicago's West and South Sides. The point is that the motion picture's destiny will be controlled by its own performance. It is hard to believe that this industry would fall before the competition of beer and pretzels. In any event, so far as the chief revenue centers are concerned, the competition of the bar and liquor have continued, at higher prices. With cocktails and highballs at fifteen cents there would be more money left for the box office.

LIPSTICKS AND MOVIES

THAT indefatigable religious scholar and student of the social sciences, Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn, has dipped into the Southern Baptist Handbook for 1932 and comes up with the assertion that it is estimated that Southern Baptist women "spend 20 per cent less for beautification than the average women of the nation," the figure per annum being put at $43,520,00. Their motion picture expenditure is estimated at between $25,000,000 and $40,000,000. While the Handbook wants the money for other causes, Mr. Pettijohn insists both appropriations could be increased to the public benefit.

BEING engaged at the moment in the breathless pursuit of sundry assorted statistics among the chaotic facts of the motion picture industry for presentation in the forthcoming 1933 Motion Picture Almanac, we are full of fiendish glee at the discovery of the admission in the public press that the great, scientific and damnably efficient electrical industry knows nothing whatever with anything remotely resembling accuracy about the cost of local distribution of electric energy. The more these depression days reveal about general industry the more able ours looks.

Now that we have seemingly run through the scale on "Hell" titles, it appears that a "Paradise" cycle is starting. As between them we would as leave have Hell.

¶ 'HAS OUTGROWN ITS AUDIENCES'

—WRITER IN CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER

GROWING UP

That the motion picture, having found its voice, has "outgrown its audiences" is the thought of W. Ward Marsh, writing in the PLAIN DEALER of CLEVELAND in OHIO. He fears there's a trend toward too much realism, but refuses to become very excited about that. He explains:

> . . . Hollywood must learn that "growing up" does not necessarily mean that it must shock, frighten or terrify.
> But I prefer Hollywood as it is to Hollywood as it was. It shows courage and a new spirit. Give it time and it will find itself again. . . .
> These plunges into realism are not fatal—but right now they are expensive at the box office. Hollywood will right itself. It always has.

ASSIGNMENT

That the screen should "not simply set forth the good, but do away with the evil" is the assignment from the SOUTHERN METHODIST at BALTIMORE in MARYLAND, in this editorial:

> . . . We are glad that the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors are more and more anxious to keep in line with public thought. We may admit that their sin, if sin it is, is that of the public also, for if there is a popular demand for salacious and immoral films—that is, if these pay—the producer may very properly say he is simply giving what the people want. The remedy here is, of course, an educated public and a better taste, but we contend that censorship does play a part in securing this, for a depraved appetite would be supported and made more voracious by giving it those things on which it feeds. In other words, the moving picture has a duty not simply to set forth the good, but to do away with the evil. . . .

GRAPPLING

That the motion picture is "venturing boldly" into the business of actual life is the basis for an editorial compliment from the PRESS-SCIMITAR of MEMPHIS in TENNESSEE, as follows:

> "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" . . . is another of several recent pictures that have been especially encouraging for their willingness to grapple with current problems in a vigorous manner. Such pictures as this one, as well as "Washington Merry-Go-Round" and "Cabin in the Cotton," indicate that the screen is at last leaving the land of make-believe and venturing boldly into the activities of actual life.

SOUR

Writing in EDITOR and PUBLISHER, Mr. Marlen Pew takes the industry to task for gearing its product and the advertising of it to a sophisticated Broadway standard, but adds that there may be a bit of unfairness at that, in view of developments in the book field. Says Mr. Pew:

> Some day, I think, the country will conspicuously express its objection to the practice obtaining in the motion picture field whereby the standards of Broadway are accepted for the whole American field. . . . Dirt they eat with glee is a sour dose in hundreds of communities where people are living upon an ethical plane which Broadway calls "old stuff." Nearly all advertising copy is geared to this Broadway O.K. . . .
> Admittedly, the worst advertisements of the film exhibitors are mild offenses . . . compared with certain book advertisements.
> Reading this stuff . . . I think we may have been a little unfair to the movie offenders.

SURPRISED

That double-edged phrase, "For Adults Only," comes in for a bit of illumination in the TIMES-STAR of CINCINNATI in OHIO in the report of an experience of Dr. F. M. Witte, former newspaperman who became manager of the Ufa theatre there. Thus:

> . . . As an apostle of frankness . .. Dr. Witte thought it advisable to inform prospective patrons beforehand of the unsuitability of certain film attractions for children by inserting in his advertisements the line "For Adults Only."
> He was surprised and a little chagrined to learn that many movie fans misinterpreted this announcement to mean that the feature to be shown was of a spicy and highly salacious nature. . . .

CHASTENED

There's a barb at the tip of the comment of the OREGONIAN at PORTLAND on a trend which it sees and ascribes to Hollywood's conviction that a "chastened nation wishes to turn back to Victorian morality." Says the writer:

> The sweet stories of a dozen years ago are being revived, including "Smilin' Through," and we are regaled with descriptions from Hollywood of lovely home life. And babies! Why dozens of Hollywood babies are suddenly in the news—babies we had never heard of before. And what a scrubbing and nursing and loving they get from the fair hands of our erstwhile wicked stars. It is all very touching, but not very convincing. The pendulum merely has swung to the opposite extreme. We wonder if it ever has occurred to Hollywood, or any other propaganda center, that the best propaganda would be the truth."

STET!

If the motion picture industry is free from "Government meddling," that is something to cheer about, says the STATESMAN of BOISE in IDAHO, long a foe of censorship:

> . . . The reaction of the average person is: "If there is one industry or business in which the Government is not meddling, for heaven's sake let's let it stay that way."
> So far as censorship is concerned, the movies have been almost censored to death anyway by local agencies.
> Admitting their faults—which are sometimes sins—the movies do not need more censorship. The public is a mighty good censor itself.

PARAMOUNT CUTTING COMMITMENTS 50% IN 1933, ANOTHER 30% IN 1934

Income Slightly Tops Operating Disbursements Throughout 1932; Negative Costs Reduced 31 Per Cent in Year

The management of Paramount Publix feels that it is making progress with its concentrated efforts to readjust the corporation's economic structure in keeping with the times.

Future commitments, which include serial payments on investments, purchase-money notes, real estate mortgages and bond maturities will in 1933 be 50 per cent less than in 1932, and in 1934 they will be reduced another 30 per cent, or to 20 per cent of the total 1932 commitments.

Savings totaling millions are disclosed as direct results of the policy of rigid economy in all branches of Paramount's international activities. According to John Hertz, chairman of the finance committee, enough cash is now on hand to meet interest payments on bonds when due on February 1. An unused bank credit is at the company's disposal. The Hertz policy of keeping expenses on a level with grosses has prevailed. From a high executive source comes word that the bankers who financed the company last April are satisfied with the progress made.

All of which, coupled with a statement from Mr. Hertz that no changes in the corporation's financial structure are contemplated at the moment, appears to give the lie to rumors in Wall Street which said that the directors were considering inviting a friendly receiver to participate. Also, reports of merger discussions with another large distributor are further scouted, following denial by Adolph Zukor, president, two weeks ago. "The board of directors has not discussed either," said a Paramount executive last week.

Right through the year cash income slightly topped operating disbursements. Losses reported in the formal financial statement are said to have resulted from interest, commitments, maturities, sinking fund requirements, amortization and the like.

Negative Costs Cut 31 Per Cent

Within the year negative costs were lowered on an average of 31 per cent per picture. General cash disbursements were $39,685,000 less during the first 48 weeks of 1932 than in the corresponding period last year.

Rental reductions effected by a revaluation of theatre leases total $3,600,000; adjusted foreign leases saved another $243,000. Real estate taxes and insurance charges were lowered as a result by $173,196 and $270,000, respectively, with expectations that the economies in insurance charges will reach $325,000 for the full year.

The cancellation of two theatre leases alone achieved a saving of nearly $2,000,000 and further verified opinion of the management that decentralization of the company's theatre properties, representing the largest in the world, would result in substantial savings and strengthen the corporation's position as a whole. It was learned the other day that the administration gives full credit for the plan and decision to decentralize to Leo Spitz, former Chicago attorney, who operates importantly behind the scenes at Paramount, and also to Sam Dembow, Jr., now in complete charge of the circuit.

Guaranteed stock repurchase obligations, which totaled $12,300,000, tightened the company's cash position for a while, but they are now nearing liquidation. There remains to be paid only $800,000, due serially in 1933, and $300,000, due in 1934. The obligation was undertaken a few years ago and represented partial payment for theatre properties purchased.

Substantial savings were made during the year in the purchasing department, but totals do not lend themselves to comparisons because of changes in the price level and also due to variations in the type and quality of materials needed, the company said.

Payrolls of departments including studios were lowered during the past 16 months to the point where they now represent weekly savings of $186,000, equal to a minimum of $6,000,000 for this year, and an expected $10,000,000 next year. With no bonus system for officers prevailing, as in the case of some other large motion picture corporations, a further economy order reduced executive's salaries considerably, even though officers are under contracts which still have two years to run.

The company has been writing off close to 96 per cent of its negative costs in the first 26 weeks. No change in this amortization policy is contemplated.

Declare Film Quality Improved

Unused bank credit is part of the $13,300,000 loan, due next April, which was underwritten by a group of important banks and bankers, including Kuhn, Loeb and Company and Chemical National. Mr. Hertz was brought into the Paramount picture by these bankers.

That Paramount has the sympathy of its bankers was made known the other day by an executive of high standing in the corporation. "Relations with our bankers have been splendid and constructive," he said.

The executive cabinet at Paramount does not view with alarm any of the suits filed in New York in which the company's commitment with the bankers on the $13,300,000 loan is attacked. The legal department holds that its position will be vindicated, as already indicated in the Relmar decision handed down a few weeks ago and duly reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of December 10, page 12.

There are said to be no threats of judgments, nor are any pending, in connection with routine operation or on any overdue obligations. Personal service contracts are the basis of a few actions, but it is held that these are of no more significance than similar actions in which any picture company might be involved.

The Paramount situation is looked upon by the Hertz group as being no worse than the economic condition existing in many other large corporations, due to the times, and that the future of the company depends on general economic conditions and the trend in gross receipts.

Pictures of the company have definitely

Revaluation of Theatre Leases Reduces Rentals $3,600,000; Say Stock Repurchase Obligations Nearing Liquidation increased in quality in recent months, according to executives in the home office, and this fact, it is held, has done much to strengthen the structure.

In explaining means taken to effect savings in theatre real estate activities, the company issued the following statement through the public relations department of Glenn Griswold:

"Paramount Publix, one of the largest real estate owners and operators in the world, has just completed a survey of 1,044 domestic leases involving an annual rental of $17,196,000. As these leases were surveyed, they were revalued and an attempt was made to revise them in keeping with current real estate values. That work thus far this year has resulted in 637 rental reductions amounting to approximately $3,600,000, of which $1,100,000 is applicable to 1932. In addition, a saving of $243,000 was effected by the adjustment of foreign lease rentals.

$7,000,000 Realty Savings

"The total savings effected by the department from January 1 to December 1 were approximately $7,000,000, of which $2,300,000 was applicable to that period. Included in this total is a saving of $173,196 on real estate taxes for this year. The cancellation of two theatre leases alone effected a saving of nearly $2,000,000.

"Last year it was the experience of the company that approximately 20 per cent of maturing real estate mortgages had to be paid. This year the company has been able to renew 98.8 per cent of those maturities. This has been the work of a new department set up by John Hertz shortly after he became chairman of the finance committee about a year ago. That department, under the direction of C. R. Hammer, has charge of all matters pertaining to real estate, insurance and purchases.

"From March 1, when this department took charge of insurance, to October 31, savings amounted to $170,000 and are expected to total $325,000 for the full year. These savings were accomplished by reductions of scheduled rates and insurable values. The matter of insurance rates as a whole is now under investigation and is the subject of a series of conferences with insurance companies and agents. A further substantial reduction in scheduled rates is anticipated."

Mr. Hertz said late last week that Paramount stands ready to "fight as honestly and decently as it can." The many important changes made during the year, he added, some involving personnel, were designed for economy purposes and as good business. If any mistakes were made, the company is said to regard them as "honest mistakes."

Brought from Chicago at the request of Kuhn, Loeb and Company, Mr. Hertz was first placed in the Paramount post as financial advisor, later delving into operation.

INDEPENDENTS WINNING THROUGH, KANN FINDS

Editor of 'Motion Picture Daily', in Tour of Key Cities, Cites Unaffiliated Exhibitors' Advantage in Trade Bargaining

Independent exhibitors are generally emerging on top in the period of general economic readjustment, according to Maurice D. ("Red") Kann, editor of MOTION PICTURE DAILY, who has just returned from a survey of conditions within the industry in Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Washington and Philadelphia.

The principal advantage held by independents is that they are in a more flexible position to bargain than the circuit theatres and consequently are able to make better deals with their landlords, their local unions and exchanges, Mr. Kann said. The circuits, on the other hand, are in a position where negotiations with other groups have to be considered from the national angle. Furthermore, it was pointed out, the independent exhibitor has no fixed charges and does not have to contribute to the maintenance of the New York office, all of which strengthens his situation.

Price Shopping a Factor

Mr. Kann specifically noted the tendency toward "price shopping," which, he says, is becoming more and more prevalent. "In Chicago particularly," Mr. Kann said, "you can find the greatest business during the 'early bird' price period. There are usually lines in front of the box office in the morning and early afternoon. People formerly selected what picture they would see on the basis of the star it featured, or the location of the theatre. Today the main consideration seems to be price. If the prospective picture-goer wants to while away a couple of hours, he or she will look around for the cheaper theatres rather than the one which has the show they would most like to see."

Reduction of wages and further increase in unemployment, he found, have taken away motion picture entertainment for hundreds of thousands for the time being. "Thousands of former picture patrons are now without enough money to go to a fifteen-cent show—to say nothing of a de luxe house to which they were formerly accustomed," Mr. Kann said. "Other things that are cheaper have supplanted the theatre temporarily for them. The trend in that direction has not been overcome."

The editor of MOTION PICTURE DAILY was informed that the tax problem has been troublesome in some places but that not many exhibitors had discussed it as being of primary importance. Although in most cases exhibitors have shaved prices as low as they can, the prospective theatre patron always views the extra percentage added by the admissions tax as higher cost to him. In the case of de luxe houses still above the forty-cent exemption price, there has been little or no reduction.

In Chicago, Detroit and Philadelphia theatre receipts were found particularly low. In Chicago Mr. Kann found that one very definite conclusion had been reached: "The industry is again a low price business, back in the 10-20-30 cent classification, and admissions must be curved downward, like it or not, to meet the times."

Curtailment in the automobile industry in Detroit, Michigan's key city, has resulted in a slowing up of theatre attendance in that territory. Agitation over the proposed 5 per cent amusement tax ordinance in Philadelphia, deemed "ruinous" by the industry, is the immediate concern of exhibitors in that city. The chief problem confronting exhibitors is a wash-up from the halcyon days when theatres were built right and left. Today the town is decidedly overseated, and, as Mr. Kann puts it, "the seats have no sitters."

A Complicated Situation

Mr. Kann reported that the situation in Cleveland was particularly complicated by national circuit operation, double features and giveaways and price shopping. Grosses there are 25 per cent under last year. Moreover, Mr. Kann points out, the local protection settlement is proving a disappointment.

Almost complete cessation of steel mill activities in the Pittsburgh district has dropped theatre attendance, in some instances to two shows a month—on pay days. The two-for-one admission plan is being used there. About 1,500,000 of these tickets are released to the public each week.

Washington, Government-maintained and Government-supported city, showed itself comparatively free from the effects of the depression. It is a "white-collar" town and employment is comparatively secure. However, if the Hoover plan for salary reductions and stagger employment becomes law, Mr. Kann said, it is likely that Washington theatres will begin to experience lower grosses and will learn for the first time that the depression is "somewhere in its back yard." Washington has no exclusives and not enough dual bills to worry about.

Ballyhoo Success In English House

Frederick J. Studd, manager of the Beaufort Cinema, motion picture theatre in Birmingham, England, consistently utilizes publicity ideas which, it is generally understood, have a greater vogue in the United States than in England. Mr. Studd, who operates the Beaufort on a policy of twice-weekly changes, has prepared a magazine-program in which the feature attractions for the month are noted. Advertising is carried in the program, and on the last page, headed "Backchat," Mr. Studd interestingly writes on practical mechanical matters in the exhibition of pictures.

Various other publicity ideas include a pamphlet illustrating the organ at the theatre, operated by Reginald New, which is distributed without charge to patrons, and a card good for a free admission sent to patrons on their birthdays. Every effort is made to draw, and hold the attention of prospective and regular patrons.

Final Tally Gives Warners Victory; Elect 5 Directors

All five directors supported by the management of Warner Brothers were elected at the annual stockholders' meeting at Wilmington, Del., a final tally of proxies indicated. The election judges, Harry R. Craig, vice president of the Wilmington Trust Company, and Abel Klaw of the legal department of E. I. DuPont de Nemours Company, turned the official figures over to former federal judge Hugh M. Morris, of Wilmington, chairman of the meeting, last Thursday, as the meeting had since adjourned.

The official figures, which indicate the victory of the Warner management despite the opposition presented by a minority group headed by Max Goldberg, Salem, Mass., and Arthur Berenson, Boston, resulted in the election of the directors.

The new directors and their vote are: John P. Laffey, Wilmington, 1,951,418 shares; Charles Guggenheimer, New York, 1,951,700 shares; Morris Wolf, Philadelphia, 1,951,394; Stanleigh P. Friedman, New York, 1,951,000; Samuel Morris, New York, 1,951,700. William Coyne,, Wilmington, another nominee, received a tally of 2,374 shares, and was not elected. All directors were elected to serve for a term of two years.

Two other matters of business were also decided in favor of the management. The first, a resolution of censure of the management introduced by the opposition, was defeated, 1,943,415 shares to 30,666 shares. The second, a vote on a charter amendment changing the common stock from no par value to $5 par value resulted in its adoption by 1,948,823 shares to 285 opposed.

All officers of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., were re-elected for one year at the first meeting of the new directors following the Wilmington session. Harry M. Warner continues as president, Jack L. Warner, Herman Starr and Sam E. Morris, vice presidents; Albert Warner, vice president and treasurer. Abel C. Thomas remains as secretary and general counsel; Sam Carlisle, assistant treasurer and comptroller; W. Stewart McDonald, assistant treasurer, and Harry S. Beresford, Paul A. Chase and Edward K. Hessberg, assistant secretaries. Thomas J. Martin continues as auditor.

Exhibitors Screen Service Acquires De Luxe Trailers

Exhibitors Screen Service has taken over the business of De Luxe Trailers, Inc., and the organization and equipment of the trailer company have been transferred. The De Luxe accounts will continue to be serviced by Exhibitors Screen Service. Louis Meyer and Jack Rieger, formerly with De Luxe, are joining Exhibitors where they will be active in production work.

Announcement has also been made of the appointment of Ben Rosenberg, western division manager of Exhibitors Screen Service, as special home office representative in charge of circuit selling in the territory west of Chicago.

A very quiet week on the production front, with very few pictures being taken out for previewing, together with the retrospective influence of the season of Advent, has given your correspondent time to look back over the past hectic year in the production community. And what a year! Let's jot down a few of the things that have happened—trivial and important—just as they come to mind.

Heavy casualties among major production chiefs resulted in five of them going into unit production, independent or otherwise. One or two of these may lap over into the end of 1931, but their current activities all started within the present year. Jesse Lasky, one of the founders and for many years production head of Paramount, joins Fox to make eight pictures a year. While he works in the Fox studios his pictures are made independently of the regular Fox product, and by his own producing staff. Charles R. Rogers, former RKO Pathe chief, with an independent unit producing eight pictures a year for Paramount. B. P. Schulberg, former Paramount studio chief, also on the Paramount lot with a similar unit, making eight for that company. All three of these units are being financed by the distributing companies. Joseph I. Schnitzer, former president of RKO Radio, producing independently for RKO release, with the former RKO Pathe studios in Culver City as his headquarters. William LeBaron, former production head at Radio, a unit production supervisor for Paramount, but under studio authority. It is interesting to note that all these former executives declare themselves far happier and feeling better than when they carried the tremendous responsibilities of trying to handle forty to sixty pictures a year.

Independent Unit Production

Independent unit production, with release through major distribution channels, has become the important development of the year as a result of these activities. Both Paramount and Radio are said to favor the system. The chief difficulty of the moment as to further expansion of the system seems to be that of independent financing.

Hollywood's famous eleven dollar world premieres drop to five and two dollar tops, tax included. Many stars are seen to drive up in last year's automobiles.

Stage trained actors, Helen Hayes and Fredric March, win honors of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. One screen-trained star, Wallace Beery, wins consolation prize because he is only one vote behind March. Direction honors continue to go to veteran motion picture directors, however, instead of to newly imported stage directors. Frank Borzage wins directorial honors, while "Grand Hotel," listed as the best production of the year, was handled by Edmund Goulding. John Ford is a runner-up with "Arrowsmith."

Winfield Sheehan resumes the production reins at Fox following prolonged illness. Julian Johnson, former Paramounteer, becomes Fox story chief.

Jason Joy abandons the job of enforcing the Production Code in the Hays office for a position as general assistant to Winfield Sheehan. Dr. Wingate, former New York state censor, succeeds him.

The stay of Joseph I. Breen, assistant to Will Hays, in Hollywood extends from six months to a year, with the probability that he will vote in Hollywood at the next presidential election.

40-Hour Week Adopted

The 40-hour week is adopted by the studios for craftsmen, technicians and laborers, for the purpose of decreasing unemployment. Paramount, first to adopt it, reports increased efficiency as well.

Salary reductions become general. Many contract stars are asked to make voluntary cuts, with a few holding out for what their contracts demand. This development also is generally true with executives, directors, writers. In almost every case, with expiration of long term contracts, renewals are at lower figures, if renewals are made. Many options are not being taken up and there is a substantial increase in the rank of free-lancers, who are now engaged for one, two or not more than four productions at a time. Frequently these engagements are made for a stipulated sum per picture, rather than upon a weekly salary basis, so that the artist, writer or director is on the payroll only while actually working.

Shooting schedules have been materially shortened, with the average now down to not more than three to four weeks. More time is given to rehearsals so that actual shooting may be speeded up, fewer retakes being required and less film and time wasted on unnecessary shots or sequences.

RCA Victor (Photophone) and Western Electric both improve the quality of sound recording materially, but installation of new devices is slow because of lack of funds. Studio sound engineers, however, have substantially improved sound recording methods during the year. Outdoor recordings are notably better.

Theodore Dreiser, the American Tragedian, decides to come back to motion pictures for more punishment—and cash.

Emanuel Cohen becomes Paramount production chief, following a brief reign by Sam Katz during which numerous changes were made.

Players Interchanged

Interchange of stars and contract players among major studios becomes a general practice in order to cut down idle time of high-salaried persons. Directors and writers also are being loaned.

Garbo keeps her threat and goes home.

The firm of Kelly-Bischoff-Saal makes noteworthy record among independent producers.

Frank Wilstach of Broadway spends his vacation in Hollywood and Caliente. He is said to have gathered sufficient material for a new book of similes.

The new aperture standard is adopted, resulting in pictures of more pleasing proportions.

Walt Disney produces Silly Symphonies in Technicolor's new three-color process, with recording done by the newest wrinkles of RCA's high fidelity system.

Independent producers form their own association with M. H. Hoffman as president and Trem Carr as vice president.

Trem Carr develops a highly efficient unit production system at Monogram studios, working so smoothly that he can spend week-ends at his ranch.

Educational takes over operation of Metropolitan studios in a deal with the principal creditor, Western Electric.

Home office advertising departments open studio branches, with men designated specifically to the business of lining up material for advertising and exploitation while pictures are in preparation and production.

Motion picture personalities of waning popularity, or temporarily out of vogue with the casting moguls, go into vaudeville or on personal appearance tours. Some contract players also go on tour with studio approval to cut down salary overhead when they are not busy.

Broadcasting Frowned Upon

Producers Association frowns upon broadcasting activities of leading picture personalities.

Academy adopts code of ethics for writers, also revises the producers' pact designed primarily to stop star raiding between producers. Conciliation machinery of the Academy is considerably enlarged, and many successful settlements of disputes are made through it without resort to litigation, notably the Warner-Cagney case.

Cycle of courtroom melodrama follows the gangster cycle, and dies out.

Craze for moving camera shots wanes because of criticism and expense, and while mobility of photography continues to be maintained, it is only used when actually helpful in story telling or improving smooth and continuous action. Novelty dissolves, shutter effects and cuts are now the rage, many of them very clever and others confusing and distracting. The best of them will soon become standardized and the others will go into the discard.

Home made gin, beer and wine cause hard times among important studio "merchants."

Perfection of the so called "projection process" of inserting backgrounds for characters while being photographed on studio stages reduces considerable location expense. Camera crew can now get backgrounds from any part of the world, and they can be inserted in the picture at the studio by the projection process, limited only now by the size of plate glass screens required for projection of background pictures. This adds much realism in shots from sets to outside areas by showing street or other action in progress.

Conrad Nagel succeeds M. C. Levee as Academy president.

Louis B. Mayer is re-elected president of the Producers Association.

The industry entertains President-elect Roosevelt at a brilliant electrical pageant in Olympic stadium, directed by Jack L. Warner.

Studios and movielites royally entertain Olympic Games visitors.

Salary reductions cause the price of Corona Coronas to drop to 3 for $1.

Big U. S. treasury deficit is attributed by some to the same cause.

Incidental musical accompaniments for dramatic pictures come into general usage, due to improved methods of re-recording which permit insertion of music after the film is shot and cut, thus eliminating the heavy expense of having large orchestras on sets while shooting is in progress.

Hollywood still seems to be the production center of the world. Our only forecast: It will continue to be a year from today.

BRITISH EXHIBITORS JOINING ISSUE AGAIN ON COOPERATIVE TRADING

Ormiston Leads Opposition to Plan Revived Time and Again Over Period of Years, With No Real Decision Ever Made

Two topics that stand with special significance before the British industry today are cooperative trading and Sunday openings.

Cooperative training has been brought well into the light of controversy once more as a result of a meeting of the council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association. A committee has been deputed to work out a plan of campaign, though not before a strong cleavage of opinion had become apparent among the delegates.

There's a history to the whole affair. The beginning goes back over more than a hand's-span of years, to the time when a similar step was propounded by leaders of the CEA. The germ lingered, and exactly a year ago burst anew into bloom with the formation of the Film Industries Cooperative Society.

The roar of challenge of FICOS, as the society soon was familiarly dubbed, inspired great enthusiasm in the breasts of down trodden showmen—an enthusiasm, though, of not sufficiently practical nature to be of great value. The roar died down to less than a whisper.

Recently the directors of the Society approached the CEA and offered the relics of its organization to that body. The action had the effect of reviving the scheme yet again, and a committee eventually was set up by the Association to determine what alterations in the constitution would be necessary to enable it to promote a cooperative trading system. The committee was further charged with the task of preparing such a booking plan and submitting other proposals for a reduction of film rental costs. It is that committee that is now instructed afresh.

The reason for re-emphasis of the request is the report of the committee, which begged the question, and proposed that "a vote of our members should be taken to decide: (a) whether or not they desire the association to promote any such scheme, (b) whether or not they desire any such scheme outside the association."

Differences Pronounced

In council, decided differences of opinion were expressed. There is no unanimity among exhibitors on the matter. The strength of the opposition may be gauged from the fact that it was led by Thomas Ormiston, one of the most prominent of the CEA leaders and a member of Parliament to boot, who, curiously enough, was prime instigator of the original trading proposal several years ago.

"The reason (for my opposition to the scheme)," said Mr. Ormiston, "is that I am satisfied that there is no support by any large minority, far from a large majority, of the members of the association that the association should itself be identified with any booking or trading scheme. If we take up a trading scheme, that will wreck the association as such, and will be—to my mind—the greatest calamity for our members."

In spite of this gloomy prognostication, the council voted to refer back the report to the committee with instructions for them to prepare a plan.

Sunday Show Movement Gains

As to the Sunday show matter, following the trade's big success at Croydon, when an earlier vote of the Council against Sabbath Day shows was reversed by a substantial majority, there have been further successes in areas which previously have confined themselves to six day showings. In Maidstone, small Kentish town, voters decided in favor of Sunday cinemas, and at a small East coast resort only 91 votes opposed the 480 recorded in favor.

For the sake of exhibitors who are counting on permission to use Sunday as a day of legitimate trading, it is as well, perhaps, that the public does not realize that the movement is attracting considerable opposition from within the trade itself. Many argue that they attract all the patronage they are likely to get during the six normal days of the week, and that they have as much right as the next man to a day's rest each week. Nor does the average exhibitor have any desire to profit by the sweating of his staff. The point that these gentlemen miss is that if the public in their districts wants to go to the cinema on Sundays the exhibitor must meet their demand or lose their custom altogether.

Fortunately the majority of anti-Sunday showmen prefer to sing their personal views and side with their brethren on a point of principle. As long as it is a general matter of fighting for freedom from restriction there will be, on the surface at least, unanimity in the ranks.

This enthusiasm is emphasized in a matter quite alien to the Sunday question. Exhibitors are drilling their troops for a keen fight for alteration of the entertainments tax system. It is obvious that cinema owners have learned their lesson, and are out to make their desires known in plenty of time before the Government introduces its next budget.

"MOVIES" CALLED "RIOTOUS LIVING"

Attendance at the motion picture theatre now comes under the head of "riotous living," according to the Southern Baptist Handbook for 1932, prepared by Dr. E. P. Alldergat and issued by the Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, at Nashville, Tenn. Four million Southern Baptists, according to the Handbook, are spending $131,500,000 yearly "wasting their substance on riotous living," of which between $25,000,000 and $40,000,000 is spent on the "movies." The entire nation, incidentally, is wasting $4,171,000,000 or those things which the Handbook classes as "riotous living." The four categories of expenditure thus listed, "enough to finance the whole program of Southern Baptist work," are tobacco—$46,200,000; movies—between $25,000,000 and $40,000,000; chewing gum and soft drinks—$20,000,000; beauty aids for women—$43,520,000.

Sunday Show Movement Makes Progress in Two More Towns, But Biggest Problem Is Lack of Unanimity of Exhibitors

Illuminated Planes Announce Picture

Fourteen airplanes are scheduled to fly in formation over New York City Thursday evening in a unique sky-writing event. Demonstrating an electrical invention for aerial illumination—a lighting system with a wind-driven generator—the planes will spell out "Silver Dollar" to announce the opening of that picture at the Strand theatre on Broadway.

The letters used will be 9 feet by 5 feet in size, each mounted on a wooden frame, with a double row of electric light tubes mounted on fiber which serves as an insulator. The tubes are about the width of a fountain-pen.

Distributors Named in Coast Anti-Trust Action

H. W. and M. C. Chotiner, Los Angeles circuit operators, this week filed suit in equity against RKO, Warner-First National, Fox, Vitagraph, Skouras Brothers, Universal, United Artists and Fox West Coast.

The plaintiffs charge major violations of the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust laws, declaring they were unable to obtain and exhibit first run pictures "within a reasonable length of time."

Distributors Win Point In Wisconsin Action

Paramount and eleven other film companies were granted a temporary injunction this week at Milwaukee restraining the Department of Agriculture and Markets of Wisconsin from enforcing an order for investigation of their licensing and contract practices. The decision said, "Everything complained of, if true, is clearly in the field covered by federal law."

"Baby Stars" Introduced

Hollywood members of the press and the Wampas on Tuesday attended a dinner and dance at the Los Angeles Biltmore, formally introducing the new "baby stars." Charles Ruggles was master of ceremonies.

MGM EARNED $2,965,975 IN 1932; SURPLUS INCREASES TO $7,470,151

Stockholders of Loew's at Annual Meeting Vote Approval of the New Personal Service Contracts for Its Officers

An expression of confidence in the management of Loew's, Inc., was voiced by stockholders assembled in annual session last week in New York. It took the form of a vote of approval of new personal service contracts for officers. This preceded issuance of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's annual financial report, which disclosed that nearly $3,000,000 of the $7,961,000 net profit reported two weeks ago by Loew's, Inc., parent company, for the year ended August 31, 1932, was earned by MGM, producing and distributing subsidiary.

Metro's annual financial statement, released to stockholders by David Bernstein, treasurer, reports net profit of $2,965,975 for the year, after amortization of films and other charges, and equivalent to $18.78 a share on 157,913 shares of $27 par value 7 per cent preferred stock. The company earned in the previous year $6,257,998, or $28.71 a share on 161,654 shares. For the 1932 fiscal period, an adjustment of $1,128,787 in value of productions in suspense, books and rights was charged against surplus account.

Operating Statement

The operating statement of Metro and subsidiaries for the year ended Aug. 31, 1932, follows:

Net operating income		$30,297,404.58
Miscellaneous income		802,124.82
		$31,099,529.40
Less:
Amortization of negative and positive costs	$27,560,374.58
Depreciation	514,831.36
		28,075,205.94
		$3,024,323.46
Federal taxes		58,348.50
Net profit after taxes		$2,965,974.96

Surplus at the end of the fiscal year was $7,470,151, as compared with $5,936,772 in 1931. The statement reflects the efficiency and progressiveness of the administration, both in Culver City and New York, which was evidenced in the favorable position disclosed by Loew's in its annual balance sheet two weeks ago.

Total 1932 income of $31,099,529, of which $30,297,404 was net operating earnings, and $802,124 described as "miscellaneous," compared with total income of $34,799,957 last year.

Amortization of negative costs and depreciation totaled $28,075,205 this year. In 1931 amortization and depreciation amounted to $27,863,899.

Total current and working assets are given as $26,687,721. Investments in affiliated corporations, deposits, property and deferred payments bring total assets to $41,817,917. Land, buildings and equipment, less $5,596,360 for depreciation, were evaluated at $11,090,266 on August 31.

Current liabilities of $3,067,024 are principally accounts payable. Other liabilities include $22,000,000 "due to Loew, Inc." Capital stock was represented by $4,263,661 in 157,913⅜ shares of preferred at $27.00 par, and common stock was listed at $3,100,000.

In setting forth the financial position of the company as of August 31, the certified accountants said:

"Cost of film has been amortized against rentals received during the year ended August 31, 1932, on a basis in accord with the company's experience prior to August 31, 1931 as determined by independent verification. Beginning with September 1, 1932, the company has arranged to revise its tables of amortization of picture costs to give effect to its experience during the fiscal year just ended, which indicates that a greater percentage of the total cost should be written off during the earlier earning life of the pictures than in former years. If the new rates of amortization had been applied to the inventory of released films at August 31, 1932, these inventories would have been reduced by approximately $2,500,000. Based on present conditions, we concur in the opinion of the management that inventory of released films as stated, even without making any adjustment, is below its net realizable value.

"The company's foreign subsidiary corporations and branches whose accounts are consolidated had combined net current assets of $1,661,037.58, of which $674,852.01 were represented by companies resident in Great Britain."

Following last Thursday's annual stockholders' meeting, directors met and voted a six-year contract for David Bernstein, vice-president and treasurer.

The meeting progressed as expected with practically no interruption. More than 1,100,000 shares were represented, one of the largest blocks ever participating in a Loew meeting. Film Securities' 660,990 shares were included.

Harley L. Clarke resigned as a director and was succeeded by Thomas N. Perkins, a director of American Telephone and Telegraph. Mr. Clarke, formerly head of Fox Film, held his directorship on the Loew board by virtue of his former control of Fox and General Theatres. The Fox holdings in Loew's were disposed of last spring. Other directors were re-elected.

White Plans to Ban Boston Play

Stanton White, recently appointed chief of the licensing division of the mayor's office of Boston, replacing John M. Casey, retired, on Sunday halted a collection at the door of the Barn Workshop, Boston playhouse, on the ground that the producers, the Ford Hall Forum players, had not obtained the necessary license.

The play "Strike," is based on the strike at Gastonia, N. C., in 1928. Mr. White declared the collection illegal, despite the declaration of the producers that the receipts were to be donated to the unemployed. He also expressed dissatisfaction with certain of the lines in the play, and indicated that he would consult the corporation counsel with a view to banning the play. He expressed his desire not to appear "hard-boiled" in the matter.

Organize Finance Company

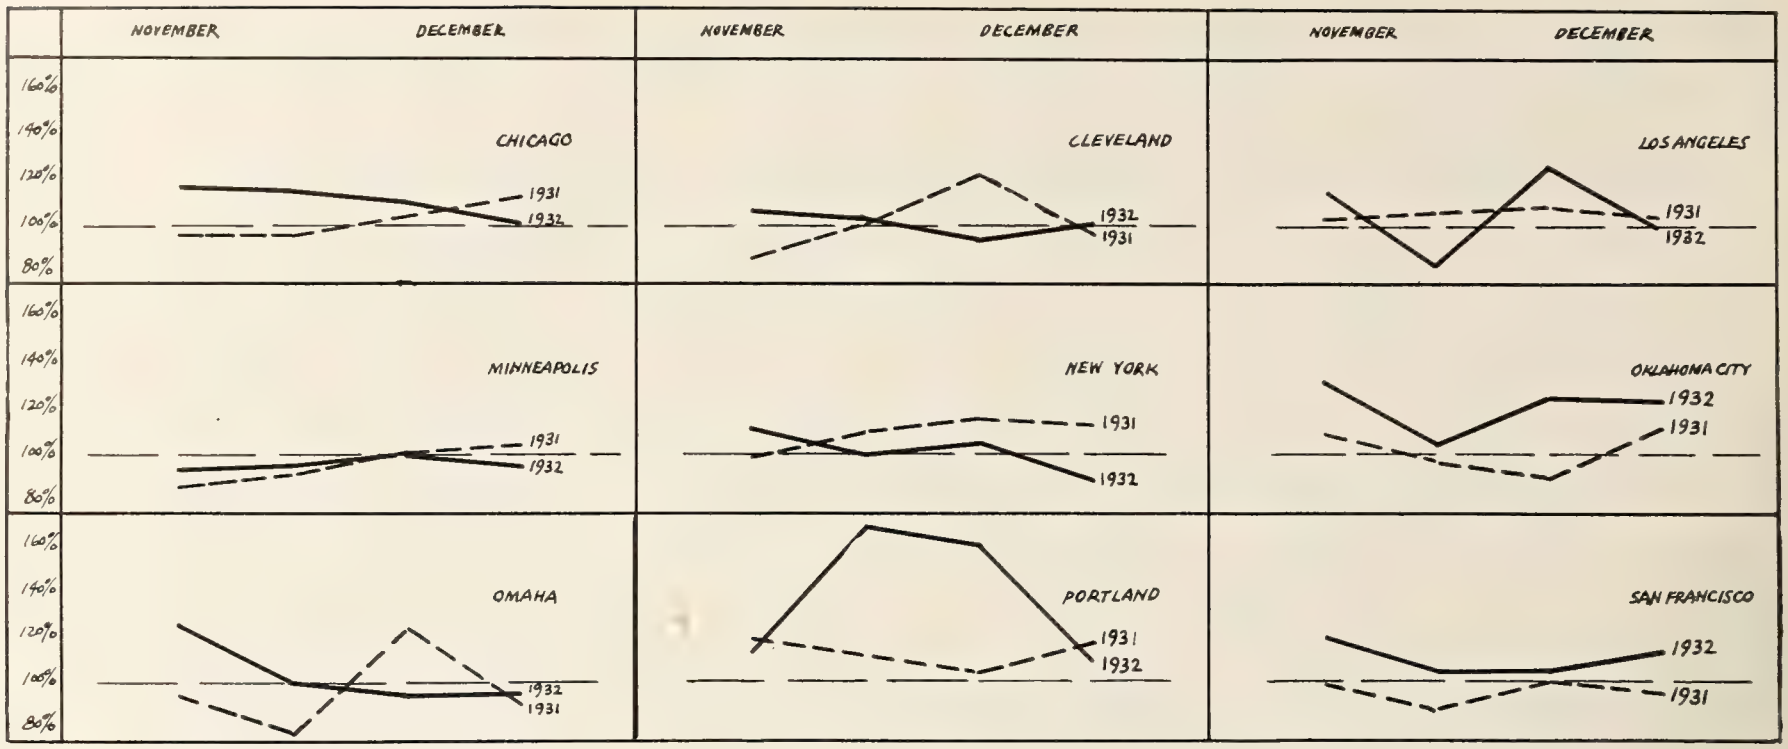
John Boyce-Smith, Howard Kingsley, John C. Murdock and John Rough, Jr., have organized a film financing company which will also serve as artists' representatives. Offices are in Hollywood.

Kahane to Coast To Clear Selznick Contract Problem

David Selznick's future status as executive in charge of Radio production will be determined within the week. It was understood from Hollywood that Mr. Selznick said last week he had resigned; B. B. Kahane, Radio Pictures president, said he knew nothing about it. In the meantime, Mr. Kahane left New York on Tuesday for Hollywood, to straighten out the situation.

Last Friday, in Hollywood, Mr. Selznick was reported to have said that he had wired his resignation to executives at the home office. He had returned to the Coast a few days previously after conferences in the east in connection with a new contract, which expired six weeks ago. Mr. Selznick and the corporation are understood to have been unable to agree on terms.

Meanwhile, Mr. Kahane, when interviewed Tuesday on The Chief in Kansas City, said, "If Selznick resigned I know nothing about it. I will resume negotiations with him and go over plans upon arriving in Hollywood." The new contract, he pointed out, hinged partly on financial considerations. "Mr. Aylesworth, president of RKO, has final say in the matter. Last week's directors' meeting did not take up the new Selznick deal because it is purely an operating problem," he concluded. Meanwhile, Mr. Selznick is continuing at Radio pending the reopening of negotiations with Mr. Kahane.



Mr. Selznick was reported to have said last Saturday that he would consider any propositions Radio makes for a new deal to head a unit or in another production capacity. Hollywood production circles were discussing reports that Radio contemplates installing a unit system at its studio.

Harold B. Franklin, in charge of RKO theatres, accompanied Mr. Kahane west. Mr. Franklin said he expects theatre conditions to become "stabilized" in six months.

Report MPTOA Not to Abandon 1933 Convention

The 1933 annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will probably be held in Milwaukee during February or March, reliable information from Kansas City indicates, contrary to reports that the MPTOA will not meet in 1933.

There is further indication that Ed Kuykendall, Mississippi exhibitor leader, will succeed M. A. Lightman in the event Mr. Lightman resigns as president after January 1, as he has already indicated is his intention. The executive personnel may be changed, it is reported, with the president serving gratis and the executive secretary taking over many of the present duties of the president.

The chart, based on the Motion Picture Herald's listings of weekly grosses, shows the relative changes in box office receipts for the indicated cities for the last two weeks of November and the first two weeks of December, this year and last. As the 100 per cent for each city for each year is taken the gross for the second week in November of that year. The solid line represents the given period in 1932, the dotted line the same four weeks in 1931.

STUDIOS' SHARE-A-JOB EXPERIMENT SUCCEEDS

20 Per Cent Increase Noted in Total Employment in Five Weeks of Test; 432 Given Work at Paramount

A 20 per cent increase in the employment of trained workmen at studios in Hollywood has resulted from the experimental plan, launched about five weeks ago, which provides for forty-hour working weeks for carpenters, electricians, scene builders and shifters and other lines of craftsmen and mechanical workers. Practically all coast studios have adopted the plan, which during the first 30 days of experimentation by Paramount gave employment to 432 extra men, who drew wages totaling $25,000.

While there is not yet sufficient material at hand for a more substantial resume of its actual effect, it is expected that thousands of additional workers will be employed to share to a considerable extent the annual studio payroll of $60,000,000.

The plan, which is reported to have found widespread favor in other industries, limits all craftsmen at present employed in studios on an hourly basis to a five-day week with a maximum of 40 hours of labor. Paramount officials said the other day that the studio's working personnel "has been rendered more efficient" as a result, with new employees being placed on the job before previous shifts are fatigued from overtime.

Union officials and studio labor representatives were said to have given their approval and cooperation to the studios in carrying out the program.

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce announced last week that $59,000,000 paid out during the year by various studios in salaries and wages was earned by 11,500 workers. Another $20,000,000 was expended for materials and supplies.

The studios have not yet effected a means of work-sharing for non-mechanical workers. Although it is not considered likely that the plan will involve to any great extent the efforts of players, directors, writers, cameramen and the like, many of whom are paid on a per picture basis, it is understood that means of extending work-sharing among non-mechanical workers are now being studied.

It was reported last week in political circles that when President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt takes office on March 4 he will sponsor shorter workdays and curtailed work-weeks as a means of unemployment relief.

Several major Coast studios are giving serious consideration to the possibility of adopting the economy plan now in effect at the Warner Burbank studio, by which shooting schedules have been cut to 14 days on all pictures except specials. Many studios have been undertaking production with only a few scenes of scenarios completed, while the writer provides material as production progresses.

The plan of Darryl Zanuck, Warner production executive, demands complete story preparation in advance of shooting, and the thorough cooperation of all departments prior to and during actual production. The plan eliminates delays and consequent added time and cost. The number of "takes" for each scene has been cut, reducing raw film cost.

Former Exhibitor Dead

"Jack" Vassil, 51, of Amsterdam, N. Y., former owner of the Strand theatre, Canajoharie, N. Y., was found dead last week.

Warner Answers Papers' Charge

Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., issued the following statement on Monday:

"On behalf of Warner Bros. I deny in the most unqualified manner that this company has had any connection with the arrest of Robert E. Burns in New Jersey.

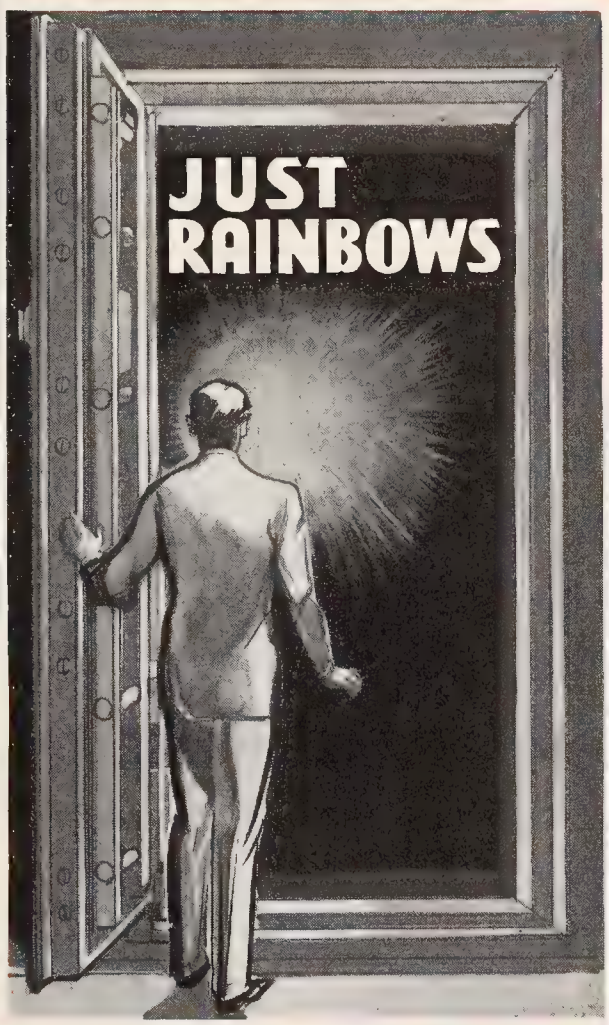
"Statements appearing in certain newspapers to the effect that the arrest of Burns was a 'publicity stunt' which has 'gone haywire' are utterly without foundation so far as Warner Bros. are concerned.

"In one of the newspapers the following paragraph was printed:

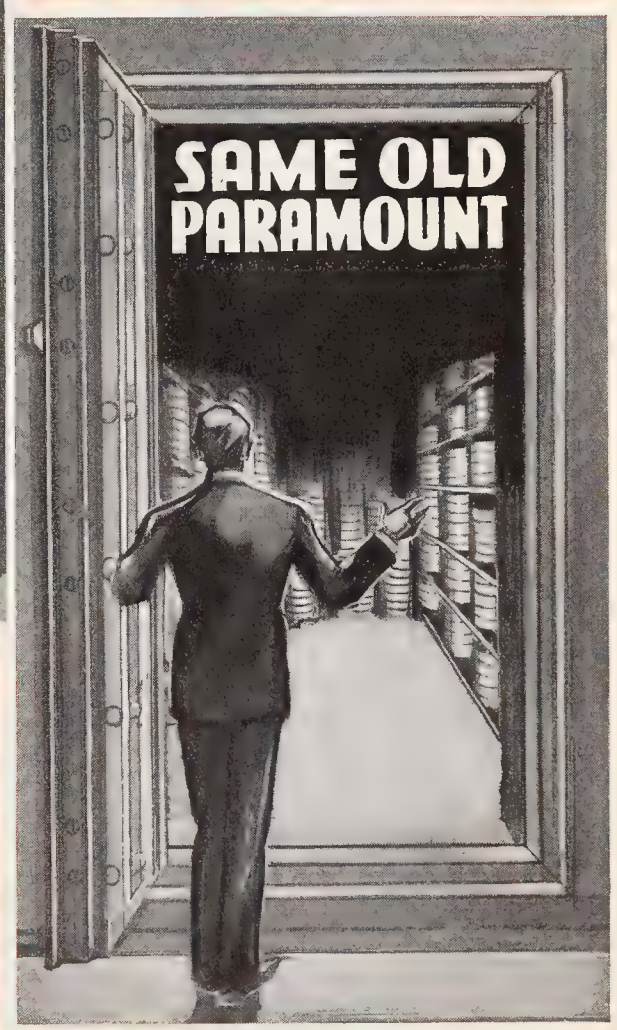
> " 'The movie, "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang," which was made from the book Burns wrote after two escapes from Georgia, where he was serving time for robbery on a road gang, is now being shown in Jersey and New York. It was produced by Warner Bros.—and Warner Bros.' publicity director happens to be Major David Weshner, who was appointed to Gov. Moore's staff a year ago.'

"In the first place, Major Weshner is not 'Warner Bros.' publicity director,' though he is an executive in the theatre department of this company. And neither Major Weshner nor any other Warner Bros. official has had anything to do with the demand from Georgia for Robert E. Burns's extradition or with his arrest and incarceration in New Jersey.

"Our attitude toward Burns, like that of most people who have read his book and seen the picture based upon it, has been one of friendly sympathy. But if there has been any 'publicity stunt' which has 'gone haywire,' it did not emanate from this company."



LaPorte in New Post on Paramount's Technical Staff



Abolishment of the maintenance department in Publix preceded appointment of Dr. N. M. LaPorte as an independent department head with technical sound duties. He previously had been research director in the maintenance department, under Eugene Zukor.

SCREEN GROWTH MARKED, SAYS HAYS

Points to New Story Values, Dramatic Vitality, New Fields of Entertainment Enterprise

Artistic growth of the screen has been marked by new story value, new dramatic vitality, new fields of entertainment enterprise, at the peak of the general economic retrogression, Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, declared in an address before the Indiana Star Bar Association Saturday at the organization's annual dinner.

Asking the question, "Where do we go from here," Mr. Hays declared the public need of entertainment has no saturation point.

Pertinent to the problem of reduction of unemployment, and the suggestion of economists that solution lies in expansion of cultural services "which will not produce goods to further glut already overcrowded markets," Mr. Hays pointed to "the new industries, new services, new markets and new employment opportunities which constructive leisure itself could create."

No Saturation Point

"The talking film, for instance," he said, "is one of the latest products of our technical laboratories. It has suffered like all other arts and industries, through the general, world-wide economic depression, but there is and can be no saturation point in the public need of entertainment, information or education.

"The problem before the motion picture entertainment industry as before other industries, is the problem of rebuilding and surviving during a period in which it is vitally necessary for the nation to readjust itself, not to the plane of depression, but to a plane of prosperity.

"Whatever further industrial readjustment may be made necessary by the conditions which face the motion picture industry, it is significant that new story values, new dramatic vitality, new fields of entertainment enterprise have marked the artistic growth of the screen even during the worst period of depression. The fundamental fact is that for the millions there is no theatre but the motion picture theatre; there is no drama but the drama of life on the screen; there is no other medium than the screen that can bring in such graphic form the best that art and literature and life have to offer, at a cost normally within the reach of the humblest family.

At Beginning of Development

"From the social standpoint the motion picture screen even now is only at the beginning of its development. It has still to show its great possibilities in the field of selective or higher entertainment, in addition to its vast service as a popular entertainment medium. It has still to make its mark as an educational agency in every school and college in the land. It has still to occupy the field of adult education. Constructive leisure, it is clear, would extend enormously the function of the screen in the fields of information, education and culture. But I cite the case of the talking film merely as an example.

"Consider the opportunities that would be opened to the whole field of educational and cultural effort by a developed era of constructive leisure. The public press would gain vastly in renewed importance. Books, magazines and other reading media would multiply through the greater opportunity of reading which leisure would afford. A new competition would arise to entertain, inform or educate a public with more leisure at its disposal."

Mr. Hays told the attorneys that "archaic laws" may result in making it seem more important, through "the force of a label or a judicial misinterpretation," to "protect the principle of alleged competition than the existence of competitors." Of this situation he said:

"We can afford no laws that do not aid business, make for greater employment, larger initiative, and add to the prosperity of the nation. This has never been more true than now. None can argue against the principle of fair competition in American industry. But there is fair competition that is the life of trade, and there is destructive competition that is the death of trade. And yet a single label covers them both.

Sees Mergers as Aids

"In some of our industries salvation may lie in the further combination of natural units. Such mergers or working agreements may be undeniably in the public interest, affect the savings of hundreds of thousands of stockholders, continue the employment of men and women whose jobs are now threatened, and tend to rejuvenate an entire industry. But what are the facts that we face? However constructive the plans that might be offered, the sign 'Do so at your peril!' faces business, whether it turns to law, legislation or government.

"The measure of fair competition lies in the opportunity that remains open to individual enterprise, small or large. It does not lie in the fact that competitors are encouraged to overcrowd an industry, to kill each other off in the struggle for existence, to destroy invested capital, throw men and women out of work and deepen existing depression. And yet so viciously misleading may be the force of a label or a judicial misinterpretation that it would seem more important to protect the principle of alleged competition than the existence of competitors."

The nation's "heart is in the right place," Mr. Hays said, with unselfish leadership rising to the demands of unemployment relief, with research laboratories "ready with developments that promise new industries and services."

"To lack faith in such a future is deliberately to deny our own strength, to be traitor to the courage and confidence of our fathers who hewed the roads and built with their own hands."

GAINS GOODWILL, APPEASES CHURCH

The Rialto theatre in Canton, Pa., points the way to a method of approach to the community which serves remarkably well a twofold purpose. In the first instance, it creates an invaluable amount of goodwill, and in the second it should admirably overcome any latent or active antagonism which the church interests of the community may have for the theatre. The announcement from the theatre, which is managed by George H. Bubb, speaks for itself:

"Attend church Sunday," it reads. "Everyone owes it to himself, his family, his church and his community to go to church on every Sunday. This duty accomplished, people feel that they are entitled to some form of Sunday entertainment. By request of the Merchants' Association and with the approval of the Borough Council, the Rialto will reopen tomorrow (Sunday) evening at an hour which will not conflict with religious services." The hour is noted as 8:45 p.m.

Denies Injunction to Restrain Distribution of RCA Stock

After dismissing a suit of the Torquay Corporation against the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse, and denying a motion of the plaintiff that the suit be remanded to the Supreme Court of New York State, Federal Judge John C. Knox also denied an injunction sought by the plaintiff, an RCA stockholder, to restrain G. E. and Westinghouse from distributing 7,500,000 shares of RCA stock among their stockholders.

Carolinas MPTO Adopts New Contract

The proposed new optional contract, explained to the convention by Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, and M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Owners of America, was adopted Wednesday by the MPTO of North and South Carolina, meeting at Charlotte, N. C.

Charles W. Picquet of Pinehurst, N. C., was re-elected president; Albert Sotille was named first vice-president, and Harry E. Buchanan second vice-president.

Burkey Files Motion for Retrial in Anti-Trust Suit

Attorneys for Walter O. Burkey, former exhibitor, who recently lost his Kansas City suit for $285,000 triple damages against 14 distributors and the Kansas City Film Board of Trade, have filed a motion in federal court for a new trial.

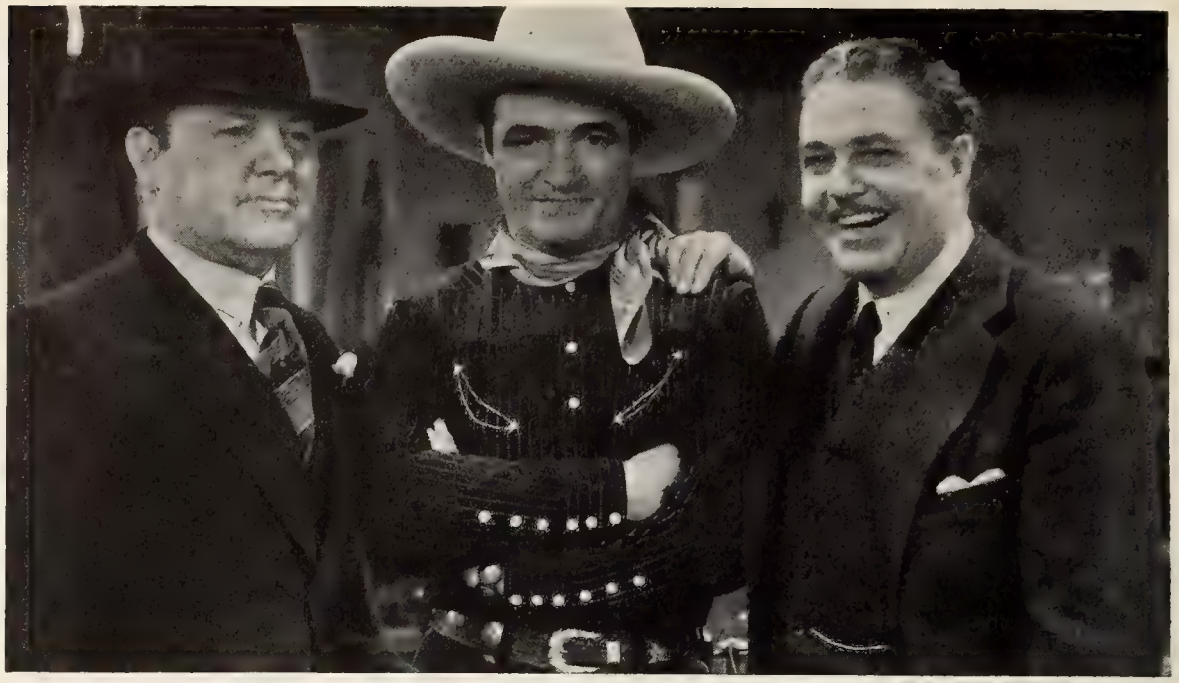
THE CAMERA REPORTS

PASSED TEST. Winna Winfried of Denmark, whom Sam E. Morris of Warners saw in Paris and engaged for the Warner London studio. Her first picture has brought her a contract.

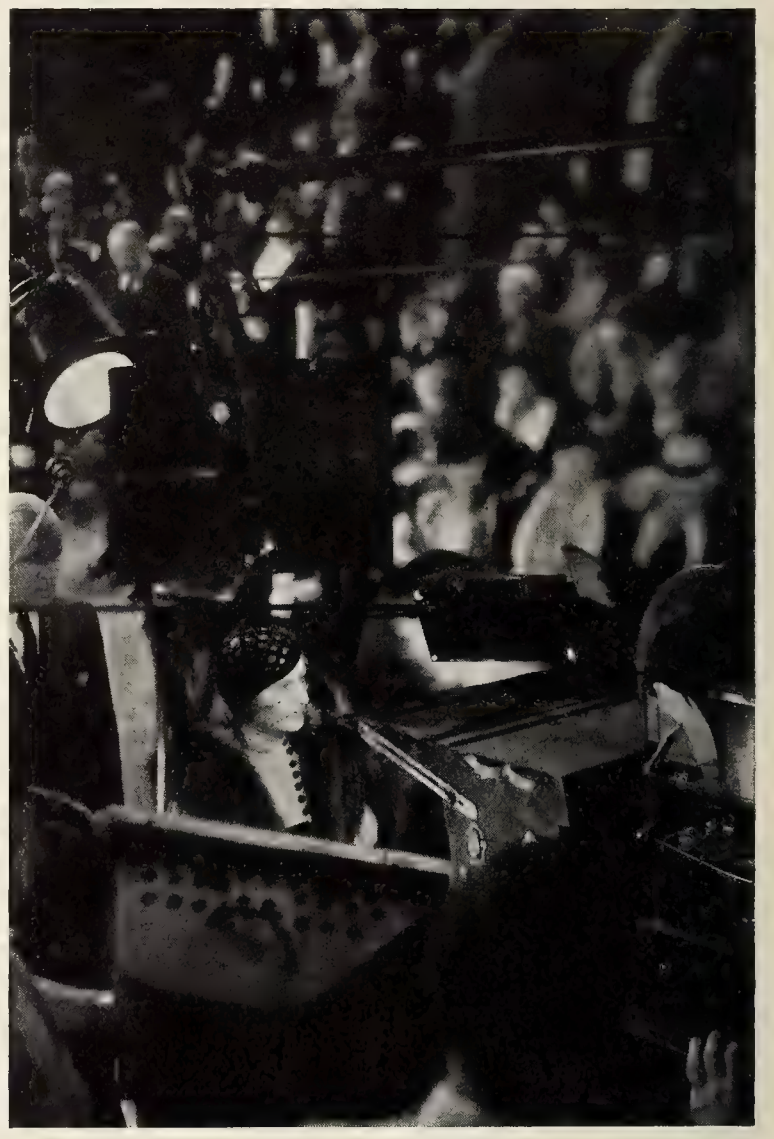
PREPARED. (Below) Urban Santone, cameraman, and Al Oeth, sound man, of Paramount News, as they "covered" the Hunger March to Washington, equipped to get their pictures in any emergency supplied by police.

CHRISTMAS CARD. Contrived by Bert Wheeler, Raquel Torres and Robert Woolsey of Columbia's "That's Africa." For themselves, of course. But serving very well for the sentiments of "Camera Reports" too!

WON BY SCREEN. Gilbert Miller, noted New York stage producer, who has signed to produce for Columbia.



NEW CROP. (Below) A group picture of the 15 American girls signed by Warner Brothers-First National at various times recently: (Downward, left to right) Renee Whitney, Donna Roberts, Jane Shadduck, Margaret La Marr, Ann Hovey, Barbara Rogers, Edna Callaghan, Loretta Andrews, Geraine Greer, Lynn Browning, Maxine Cantway, Pat Wing, Lorena Layson, Alice Jans, Toby Wing.



OF THE GOLDEN WEST. And one of the newer girls of that half-legendary region is Muriel Gordon. Miss Gordon has the feminine lead in World Wide's new Ken Maynard picture, "The Lone Avenger."

VETERANS UNITED. Moving on swiftly, the motion picture quickly leaves its past, yet now and then picks it up again, as at Universal when these old-timers met. Henry McRae, former actor, is now a Universal producer, while the perennial Tom Mix and William Farnum are together in Universal's Mix picture, "Flaming Guns."

VILLAIN. One whose diabolical schemes have won him a contract with Warners'. He is Harold Ruber, seen in "Match King."

CONFUSION THAT IS ORDER. Lights, reflectors, cameras, sound equipment, technicians—the maze of paraphernalia and humanity that makes a motion picture, blended by Bert Longworth at Warner Brothers, during the shooting of a scene for "Ladies They Talk About." Barbara Stanwyck, the star, is shown at center.

SERENADE. (Left) By no less a musician than Rubinoff, theatre and radio star. But then Betty Boop is no common person herself, as witness her fame in Max Fleischer's Paramount Talkartoons. Rubinoff and Betty co-star, as it were, in a recent one.

CONDUCTOR TO WRITE RAILROAD STORY. Why not? asked W. Ray Johnston—a conductor ought to know railroading! And so the president of Monogram Pictures signed John Johns, a New York Central conductor, to write the story of "The Return of Casey Jones." They are shown signing up in Mr. Johnston's office.

WATCHING DADDY. Or maybe just the birdie on the photographer's hat. At any rate Carol Ann Beery presents us with as fetching a child's picture as we've seen, as she perches on Jackie Cooper's lap at MGM while Daddy Wallace works in a scene for "Flesh."

NINE YEARS OLD UP. (Right) That's her age, they say, and she scarcely fills the little saddle. Yet the photographer had to be quick when Betsy King Ross rode her mount up to this barrier. Fox has cast her with George O'Brien in "Smoke Lightning."

LOOKING UP. Toward a new career, one guesses, interpreting this novel portrait of Phoebe Foster, recently signed by RKO Radio.

AWAITING CUE. Most any sittable place serves the tired screen player working overtime, and thus the photographer found Glenda Farrell, on call for Warner Brothers' "Grand Slam."

GOVERNMENT RED TAPE TRACED BY PETTIJOHN

Film Boards' Counsel Shows 23 Steps of Procedure on Exhibitor's Complaint If Government Control Were Adopted

by C. C. PETTIJOHN

Chief Counsel, Film Boards of Trade

All discussions, pro and con, about Government control of the motion picture industry have neglected to state specifically what the procedure would be under such control, in case an exhibitor had a complaint to make to the Federal Trade Commission or to any other board similarly constituted.

A brief outline of that procedure, based on past experience, might prove interesting, and will disclose more delay and red tape than is contemplated by some of the proponents of Government control.

Here's the Procedure

Under the current rules and practices of the Federal Trade Commission, which have been developed over a period of years to conform to the law as interpreted by the supreme court, a complaint would go through the following procedure:

1. The complaint is docketed and assigned by the chief examiner to an examining attorney of a branch office for investigation.
2. After calling witnesses and investigating the complaint, the examining attorney submits the information he has gathered, with a recommendation as to action, to the chief examiner.
3. The chief examiner reviews the record and, if he finds it complete, submits it to a board of review.
4. The board of review goes over the record, including the examining attorney's interviews with witnesses.
5. If it believes that a formal complaint is justified, it grants the proposed respondent (defendant) an informal hearing.
6. Then the case goes to the Commission. If the Commission decides there is no ground for complaint, the application is dismissed and the matter ended.

Up to this point the proceedings have been informal, confidential, and not matters of public record.

7. But if the Commission decides to proceed, the matter is transferred to its chief counsel, who assigns the evidence so far gathered to an attorney of his staff. The time consumed by this attorney in preparation of the complaint depends on the size of the record and the amount of work already on his desk.
8. After its preparation the complaint goes to the chief counsel for his approval.
9. His approval having been granted, the complaint goes to the commissioners, who either remand it for alteration or order that it be issued.

Next the Trial Attorney

10. When the complaint has been issued and served, the chief counsel assigns the case to a trial attorney. The respondent has thirty days in which to file an answer, unless he requests an extension, which is usually granted.
11. When the trial attorney has concluded his other work, he examines the record of the case to determine whether the case has been sufficiently developed to warrant a trial without further investigation. As all the preliminary work has been only for the purpose of giving the Commission "reason to believe" or probable cause, the trial attorney generally makes a further and more detailed investigation before trial.
12. When he is prepared, a trial examiner is appointed and a convenient time and place set for the hearings.
13. The Commission's evidence, involving examination of witnesses, introduction of exhibits, etc., is brought forth.
14. After the presentation of the Commissioner's case, respondent is given further time to prepare his defense, which is then presented.
15. After submission of evidence by both sides the trial examiner prepares a report for the Commission. Exceptions may be noted both by the trial attorney and by counsel for the respondent.
16. Attorneys for the Commission prepare their brief, which is served on the respondent's attorneys, who have thirty days to file their brief, unless an extension of time is granted. It usually is.
17. The Commission's attorneys may file a reply brief, after which the case is set for hearing before the full Commission.

At Last to the Commission

18. The case is submitted to the Commission, involving the record and the arguments of the attorneys, after which time elapses before the Commission's decision is announced.
19. The decision is in the form of an order, either of dismissal or to cease and desist from the practices complained of. (Often the case is remanded back for the taking of more evidence, or re-argument, or both.)
20. If the order is one of dismissal, the proceeding is ended. If the order is to cease and desist, the respondent may of right appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals upon filing printed copies of the record, including both testimony and exhibits.
21. Both sides again prepare and file briefs and present their arguments to the court, which, after due deliberation, may affirm, modify or set aside the order of the Commission.
22. From this decision either party can, on certiorari, appeal to the supreme court, where the case is once more briefed and argued.
23. In due time the supreme court hands down its decision, finally bringing the case to an end.

Just calmly and dispassionately, it would appear to me that something better than the above long-drawn out, complicated and expensive procedure could be devised somehow, somewhere, within the business to take care of "perishable property" rights.

No Date Set Yet for Independents' Meeting

No date has yet been set for the mass meeting of independent exhibitors, which was postponed after having been scheduled for December 16 at the Hotel Astor, according to Robert Robins, executive secretary of the American Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre. The society has just moved into offices on the thirty-first floor of 1450 Broadway, New York.

Mr. Robins said one of the principal purposes of the society was to eliminate service and score charges or to greatly reduce them. He denied that the group would in any way or at any time operate a central distributing agency for independent manufacturers.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Douglas Fairbanks returned to New York Tuesday from a round-the-world tour. He left immediately for Pickfair and a Christmas dinner with the missus. Doug visited many places and had a lot of fun, except on one occasion. While on a steamer between Batavia and Singapore, clear over on the other side of the earth, he suddenly decided he wanted to talk with Mary, so he put through a radio-telephone call. According to Leo Meehan's Hollywood Herald, which currently reports the incident, the phone bell rang at Pickfair one morning at 5 o'clock. A sleepy butler concluded it was a Hollywood gag when the speaker announced: "This is Douglas, I want to speak with Mary." To make matters worse, it was a new butler, engaged since Doug left, and, therefore, unfamiliar with "his master's voice." There were several hot and highly expensive minutes of conversation before Doug was able to convince the butler it wasn't a gag, but he finally got Mary, said "hello" and rang off.

Warner Brothers and John Bull last week engaged in a bit of high financing. On the day when the Kingdom of England, quite reluctantly, arranged with Lloyd's, of London, to insure a shipment of gold bars worth $95,000,000, to the United States for debt payment, Warners' home office wired Charlie Gilmour, at the Denver exchange, to ship at once one ton of silver from the mine at Leadville, Colorado. They plan to give away a chunk to every cash customer attending the "Silver Dollar" showing at the Strand on Broadway.

Mike Simmons, advertising impresario for Ray Johnston at Monogram, last week invited the trade press to have luncheon with Rex Bell. It was Mr. Bell's first venture into New York and Mike promised to show him a lot of curious sights, including what happens when some hungry reporters hear the dinner bell. A few hours before the crucial hour Mike went into hiding and asked his assistant to phone the boys and tell them the luncheon was off because their pet star had suddenly contracted influenza and would be unable to leave his room. Within 24 hours, however, Mr. Bell was on the high seas with his wife, Clara Bow, en route to Europe and a vacation, feeling great.

Radio is getting ready to tell in celluloid about the frantic preparation in the underworld in anticipation of the change from illicit beer-running to the free sale of the beverage—if and when Congress gets around to it.

Bartlett Cormack has already finished the story. Of course, all of this is good for the story.

Warner Brothers are not the least bit unhappy over the thousands of lines of free publicity which their "I Am a Fugitive" is receiving on the front pages of America's press in connection with the arrest in Newark of Robert Elliott Burns, fugitive from a Georgia chain gang whose experiences are related in the film, which he wrote.

WE have in hand a copy of the latest issue of The Daily Gencho Report, published in Tokyo, which tells about the Tokyo gendarmerie being quite annoyed over American News reel accounts of Japanese military operations in Manchuria, which they believe are rather prejudicial to the best interests of Japan. To say that Fox News is annoyed over the Japs' charges would be putting it mildly.

Japanese police are said to have paid a visit to the Fox headquarters in Tokyo to ask about certain Movietone shots, which, the Jap officials claim, were photographed under direction of the 19th Route Army of China during its engagements with the Japanese troops in and around Shanghai. Men, dressed like Japanese soldiers, it is said, cut off the heads of many Chinese plain-clothes soldiers and spies in order to show a false picture of the activities of the Japanese Imperial Army. That's the Japs' story. Truman Talley, in charge of the Fox newsreel office in New York, called it "deliberate and misleading propaganda." He said:

"Nothing could be further from the truth than the paragraph in the report which says the motive behind the Fox Movietone News presentations of incidents resulting from the recent Sino-Japanese clashes in Manchuria and Shanghai was 'to show the Japanese position in exaggerated militaristic colors.' The good faith of Fox Movietone News could have no better support than the fact that under its own trademark it released these pictures in Japan, exactly as it did in the 42 other countries in which it releases newsreels."

Mr. Talley also denied emphatically the release of any such pictures as those described where men dressed like Japanese soldiers cut off the heads of many Chinese plain-clothes soldiers and spies, and also where the seemingly Japanese soldiers commit atrocious deeds.

Fox Movietone News, according to Mr. Talley, holds this statement false and malicious and consequently prejudicial.

The advertisements listed the following pictures, all current during pre-Christmas time: "Flesh," "Three Loves," "The Devil Is Driving," "Red Dust," "Rain" (second run), "Kongo," "Maedchen in Uniform," "Jungle Killer," "Farewell to Arms," "Strange Interlude," "Virgins of Bali," "Sign of the Cross," "Trouble in Paradise," "Kid from Spain," and "Call Her Savage."

Mr. Maurice Daniel Kann digressed for a moment the other day from writing about the more serious side of motion pictures, in the Motion Picture Daily, to report the following:

"'It's got so I cannot address a letter to any one individual at the home office any more,' said one Canadian representative, 'and so I start my letters with, "To Whom It May Concern."'"

Edward H. Griffith, director, loves the spotlight—and don't we all.

Mr. Griffith finished "Animal Kingdom" recently, immediately thereafter sailing for a vacation in Europe, forgetting about the picture. While on the high seas he received a cablegram saying that the great and important powers of Radio and Rockefeller City, assembled in extraordinary session, decreed that "Animal Kingdom" should and would open Mr. Rothafel's new Roxy theatre on December 29. Because Radio produced the picture others in town were less surprised than Mr. Griffith that the first booking for the Radio house should go to RKO. SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Hypnotized

(World Wide)

Comedy

Girls and gags are the essence of this Mack Sennett feature length show, fun engendered by the most obvious as well as subtle comedy, strengthened by ludicrous thrills. The whole business, a combination of old fashioned laugh-making and modern technique, makes entertainment that should click with the vast majority of audiences. Probably a little too farcical for the elite, "Hypnotized" may or may not prove so hot in the bigger first-run houses. There its box office success will depend greatly upon the manner in which the picture is sold. But in other theatres where a little more friendly and less critical spirit prevails, it should be productive of some real box offices.

The story opens with an exciting horse race. A grand prize of $500,000 is up in the pool. The scene shifts to a traveling circus, where Bill Bogard, an elephant trainer in love with the star performer, Princess Mitzi, is notified that he won the prize.

Then on to an ocean liner. A hypnotist, Prof. Limberly, has grabbed Bill and Egbert as two likely dumb prospects for his European tour. The hypnotist gets the $500,000. A lion is the big hit, with Egbert and the Professor in the cage.

A new and eye-filling bunch of Sennett beauties are present throughout, permitting also the introduction of many snappy musical and dance numbers.

With "Hypnotized" being entertainment for the whole family—the kids will get just as many laughs out of it as the adults—interest—creating showmanship possibilities are many and great. It boasts the original team of Moran and Mack and such other noted mirth provokers as Torrence, Charlie Murray, Wallace Ford, Marjorie Beebe, Herman Bing and Alexander Carr. Yet the theme of the picture itself should carry the heaviest selling load. Surely the picture shrieks for all kinds of ballyhoo that ranges from special lobbies featuring a circus tent background to everything that your ingenuity can conceive which is atmospheric to the spectacle. That goes all the way from stage weddings to making use of comedy hypnotists, dressing men up in elephant and lion costumes, introducing gypsy musicians into a prologue, handbills offering $500,000 worth of laughs to everyone. Without kidding the picture, you can inject a clever line of satire and burlesque into your paper.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Employees Entrance

(First National)

Drama

Injecting a colorful punch of human interest into what ordinarily might be considered the unappealing background of a great, modern, super-efficiently managed department store, "Employees' Entrance" tells a story that is vividly dramatic.

Primarily the story is an elaborate character study, graphically illustrating what happens to those who come in contact with the cold-blooded, ruthless, domineering Kurt Anderson, either in a business or social way. At the same time it permits full play of all the old interest inspiring standbys—drama, romance, a different idea in thrills and just a few incidental, but startling, hints at sex. Tragedy is brought in, and there is that gripping punch of accomplishment against all kinds of obstacles.

Personified by Anderson, the story is a picture of straight-from-the-shoulder business efficiency. Because an old employee cannot keep the pace, he is fired and it matters not to Anderson that Higgins jumps from a window, nor that Anderson ruined a small manufacturer, nor that he brought a newspaper to the verge of bankruptcy when he yanked his advertising. Snarling, sneering, always cocksure, Anderson makes his business his god. Women he considers only for his moments of relaxation. Thus as the audience alone sees romance grow between Madeline (whom he is saving for one of those moments) and Martin, a young employee, whom he is training to follow in his footsteps, he impresses on the boy that women are only loadstones and that marriage will wreck any career. Thus their marriage must be kept secret from Anderson. The boy and girl quarrel and the girl becomes Anderson's overnight companion, an event that creates further tragedy, as Anderson lets Martin listen in on a phone conversation between himself and Madeline, which is followed by her taking poison and the boy taking a shot at his boss.

Then the story veers. In the depression, bankers see a chance to "get" Anderson. Just when it looks that he is washed up, he starts all over, forgetting Martin and Madeline.

Points to emphasize would appear to be the timeliness and general familiarity of its subject matter. Warren William's character is quite similar to the one given him in "Skyscraper Souls," yet all the others are essentially natural and human. The department store locale should make it easily possible to surround your showings with some unique showmanship. The title is more than usually alluring. It would not appear wise to seek any direct tie-ups with local stores. Yet there is ample room for contacts with store employees. In the cast are numbers of names in addition to the leads that are suitable for inclusion in advertising and on marquee. The name of Alice White should not be overlooked.

Because of two or three sexy sequences and bits of dialogue, it is essentially for adults.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Based on a play by David Boehm. Screen play by Robert Presnell. Photographed by Barney McGill. Release date, Feb. 11, 1933. Running time, 78 minutes.

Handle With Care

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

This story, which bases its chief hope for box office success on deep human interest, is essentially children's entertainment.

Briefly this is the story: Helen is left the care of two orphan children, Tommy and Charlie. Both are cute enough to inspire the interest of some mothers and tots their own age. For stealing milk to feed a raft of kittens, Tommy is up before the police lieutenant, where they come to the attention of a young district attorney, Bill Gordon. He finds out that their guardian is an old schoolday sweetheart and falls in love with her all over again. Numerous sequences show that Helen is employed in a department store to mind children of shopping mothers, but because the kids and their cats get on Bill's nerves the romance goes blooey. Then a gangster menace is introduced as the kids, trying to return Bill to their heartbroken aunt, get mixed up with a pair of mugs who are waiting to put Bill on the spot. The climax, and a good one, is a sensational roundup of hundreds of kids who come from all directions and besiege Bill's apartment. Little Tommy is wounded in a gunfight that ensues, which of course is the ideal medium of bringing Bill and Helen together again, giving the hero an opportunity to tell how much he loves youngsters, their pranks and their cats.

There is so much juvenile atmosphere in the picture that it seems a strong campaign directed straight at the youngsters will be the best selling medium. Copy emphasizing that fact, if cleverly handled, may excite some adult interest. Lines that will intrigue the interest of women-folk, mothers particularly, should not be overlooked.

DAVID O. SELZNICK, Executive Producer

Scenes in the picture suggest many forms of ballyhoo which will appeal particularly to child minds. As the picture is set for release during the Christmas season, a series of milk admission matinees would be appropriate. Likewise a pet cat contest would be in order. The exciting chase climax may suggest some novel ideas for big roundup of all the youngsters in your community. On the behest of Charlie, hundreds of kids swarm from all directions, a stunt that can be emulated with your theatre as the gathering point.

Children's attendance, if properly stimulated, will take care of matinee business. It will be necessary to add some strong extra attractions for adult patronage during evening shows.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by David Butler. Story by David Butler. Screen play by Frank Craven and Sam Mintz. Photographed by John Schmitz. Release date, December 25, 1932. Running time, 75 minutes.

The Death Kiss

(World Wide)

Murder Mystery

Here's a murder mystery story that's brimful of entertainment. Not the weird, thrilly, scary type, but an amateur detective yarn, so loaded with unanticipated surprises that it kept a preview audience on pins and needles and when the climactic solution came, suddenly but logically enough, they still were wondering how it all happened.

The story is centered in a Hollywood motion picture studio, a locale that permits the introduction of much unusual contrast. All the players are actors, directors, executives, writers, grips, stage crew. In a scene that calls for the star to be killed, he is really murdered. Immediately the hullabaloo is on. The publicity department wants to soft-pedal the news. The producer is in a turmoil as he foresees an investment ruined. The dumb cops are called in, and all the folderol of them overlooking evident clues, which are so obvious to the screen writer who writes detective stories, ensue regularly, but novelly.

Suspicion points to everyone—from the star, Miss Lane, to everyone who was on the set. The dumb dicks grab everything and the screen writer, Andrews, unearths new evidence frantically and with pathetic humor, making it the peg on which to hang an arrest.

Humor intensifies the mystery as Gulliver constitutes himself the self appointed aid of Andrews. Miss Lane, with whom Andrews is in love, is arrested. Clever but commonsense detective work on his part creates the impression that they know the killer. But surprising developments that ring in ideas that everyone likes to believe about Hollywood and its people quickly eradicate the sureness and further pep up the mystery. Then comes thrilling action, in which the sound testing apparatus plays an inconspicuous but important part, the real reasons for the murder are unfolded and the killer establishes his surprising identity by committing suicide.

With acting on the part of all of the glove-fitting cast and directing that accentuates the suspense, while taking full advantage of all the contrasting by-play—comedy, romance, excitement and oddity of location—the story possesses those elements that should appeal to all classes. It is always mysterious, yet it never becomes so intricately involved that it will be over the heads of the youngest children. They will see the two wise-guy detectives overlook things that anyone else should see. They'll know that the fiction writer will solve it. But how? There's your showmanship. You can tell the whole story down to the final couple of hundred feet and then dare them to put their finger on the murderer. The title, too, is punchy and intriguing.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Distributed by World Wide. Directed by Edwin L. Martin. Story by Madelon St. Denis. Screen play by Gordon Kahn and Barry Barringer. Photographed by Norbert Brodine. Release date, December 25, 1932. Running time, 70 minutes.

The Sport Parade

(RKO Radio)

Drama

There is an active flow of sporting sequences in this film which serves to give it a reasonably fast pace, but also tends to make it a rather episodic affair. Around the sports activity is woven the story of the college athletic hero who falls hard for the bright and shining offers of ready money after graduation and only awakens when a heavy romantic bump gets in its work.

Joel McCrea, he of the magnificent physique, is the athlete and the best box office name. Marion Marsh, handling the romantic end of the story, is another name which should be satisfactory in the lights. For support there are Walter Catlett and "Skeets" Gallagher, Catlett as the crooked promoter, Gallagher supplying the comedy. There are several sequences of wrestling in the picture, particularly the conclusion, which offers a climax of strength but not of particular appeal to the feminine portion of the audience.

McCrea and William Gargan are pals and a famed football combination at Dartmouth. At graduation, Gargan becomes the sports editor of a newspaper, McCrea turns professional. Finally down on his luck, he meets Gargan again, and is given a job as a sport writer. Thrown with Miss Marsh, the paper's artist, with whom Gargan is in love, McCrea falls in love with her, a feeling she returns. McCrea does his best to prevent it going too far, but Gargan feels he has been double crossed, and following a fight, McCrea leaves. Turning professional under Catlett, McCrea is mixed in the crookedness of Catlett's operations. He is supposed to throw a championship bout, but Miss Marsh points him in the right direction, and in a knock-down and drag-out affair which is packed with action, he wins and the three are reconciled.

This should be good for fair results at the box office, with a campaign stressing the romantic complications and the graduate-athlete ready money idea, thrown against a background of sports, and having some part of its setting, at least, in the sports department of a newspaper. Sporting goods stores in the community should be good for some valuable tieups. Where it may mean anything, it might be well to indicate that Corey Ford, humorist, aided in the preparation of the screen play, and Robert Benchley, another humorous writer, contributes some amusing comedy bits, as the sports announcer.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Dudley Murphy. Story by Jerry Horwin. Screen play by Corey Ford, Tom Wenning and Francis Cockrell. Additional dialogue by Robert Benchley. Sound recorder, P. J. Faulkner. Cameraman, J. Roy Hunt. Release date, November 11, 1932. Running time, 65 minutes.

No Man of Her Own

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

Just about everything that the ordinary picture fan looks for in screen entertainment is included in "No Man Of Her Own" drama, romance, comedy, strong build-ups, exciting climaxes, a fine line of human interest. The story is easily understood, yet clever directorial touches endow it with a novelty which, aided by exceptionally pleasing work by the entire cast, provides a sparkle that should appeal to both metropolitan and rural theatregoers.

The story concerns a big time crook, Babe, who is rusticating in a small town until the heat of one of his recent jobs cools off. In scenes that portray the friendly intimacy and curiosity of small town people, he falls in love with and marries Connie, who has been awaiting her Lohengrin for years.

Taking his bride to New York, we see her eradicating all traces of Babe's past life, particularly his relations with women, which gives Kay Everly an opportunity to put across some pleasing, if rather risque, business. Under the guise of a South American trip, Babe does a ninety-day jail stretch. The climax is one prolonged howl of laughter as Connie gets wise to the whole works, winding up with a load of action that presents Gable at his best.

The most important point of audience interest and showmanship possibilities is Gable. Naturally every campaign will make the most of that name.

There is an atmosphere of sparkling gayety surrounding the picture that will permit unusual exploitation. Yet selling it along the line that it is catchy, enthusiasm—arousing entertainment, with plenty of emphasis placed upon cast names and using some of the many gay lines in the dialogue, there should be much better than average box offices with "No Man Of Her Own."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Story by Edmund Goulding and Benjamin Glazer. Screen play by Maurine Watkins and Milton Gropper. Photographed by Lee Tover. Release date, December (exact date not announced). Running time, 76 minutes.

Excellent Novelty

One of the first of a new series of novelty musical shorts, under the title "Melody Makers," this subject is different, light and highly entertaining. It brings the composers of well known popular melodies to the screen, introducing them to the thousands who sing their pieces, and for whom the composers sing and play their most notable compositions. In this instance Sammy Fain, composer of "Was That the Human Thing To Do," "Let A Smile be Your Umbrella" and others, is featured. Norman Brokenshire, radio announcer, handles the introduction. A popular subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Santa's Workshop

(United Artists)

Appealing

Here, in about six and one half minutes, is a sweet little short. Done entirely in Technicolor, "Santa's Workshop" tells a cute story that has been told many times before, but never in the glamorous, appealing way it is presented here. Made undoubtedly for special Christmas showings, this Walt Disney Silly Symphony fills that bill nicely, even to the point of boasting about it on a par with the feature.

OSCAR NEUFELD PLANS NEW DISTRIBUTING UNIT

Pioneer Independent Exchange Operator of Philadelphia Heads Group Using Old First National System of Franchises

Motion picture interests headed by Oscar Neufeld are turning back to the old First National system of operation by exhibitor franchise holders for the basic structure of a new company to purchase and distribute.

Mr. Neufeld, a pioneer independent exchange operator of Philadelphia, explained this week that "the active people in the plan do not care to have their names divulged at the present time, and they are using me to arrange the preliminary organization. We will begin functioning just as soon as sufficient encouragement is given to us from the individual exhibitors that they will support such an organization."

Details of operation and immediate plans of the proposed company were not divulged, but it was learned that physical distribution would be placed in the hands of a nation-wide group of independent, or state rights exchanges, now functioning. Exhibitors participating would have a direct voice in production, it is undestood, and complete control would be held by them.

Variously over a long period there have been reports and actual discussions about such a plan of producing and distribution, taking as a pattern the original structure of First National, which was controlled and operated by a group of representative exhibitors, each of whom had rights to the product and its distribution in the respective territories.

Now Roxy Director

HOWARD S. CULLMAN

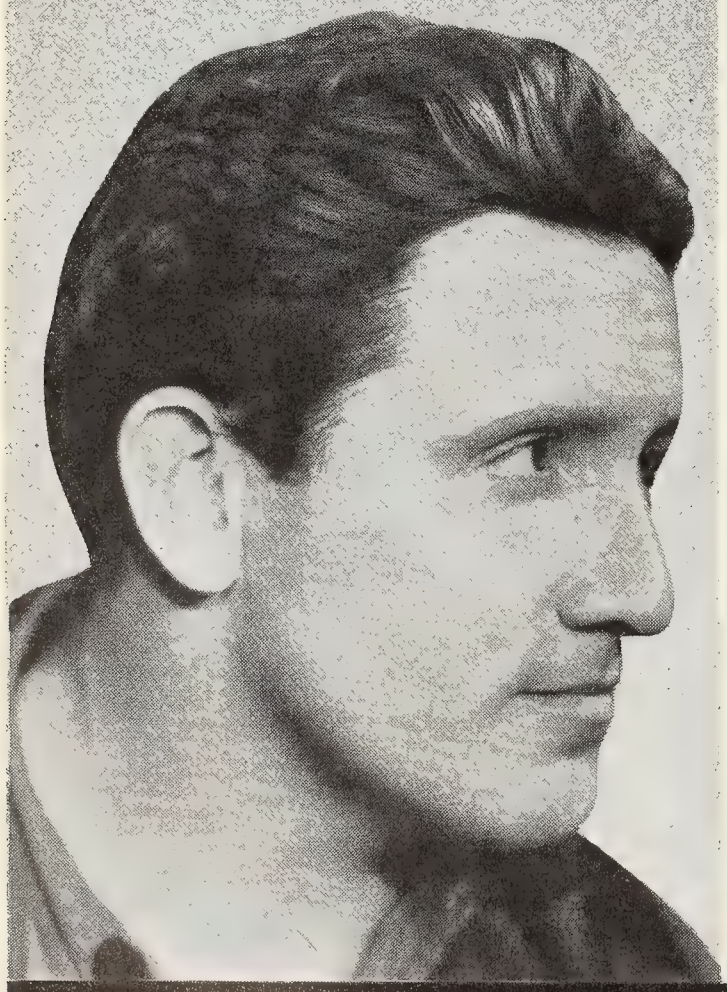
who has recently succeeded Harry G. Kosch as receiver of the Seventh avenue Roxy theatre in New York, by appointment of Federal Judge Francis Caffey, in his new connection makes an initial appearance in the field of theatre operation. His previous activity had found him in the posts of Commissioner of the Port of New York Authority, chairman of the board of directors of the Beekman Street Hospital, treasurer of several Democratic campaigns and an executive of a tobacco concern, of which he was one of the founders.

He moves, temporarily at least, into the realm of the motion picture and entertainment from work in business, politics, philanthropy. He is credited with having brought the Beekman Street Hospital from the verge of bankruptcy and a $400,000 mortgage to a sound financial condition and an endowment of approximately $1,000,000. Through Alfred E. Smith he entered the councils of the Democratic party in New York State, and in his capacity as Port Authority Commissioner recently supervised the completion of what is reputed to be the world's largest building, as to cubic content, Inland Terminal No. 1.

Cutler Succeeds Robertson On RCA Board of Directors

Bylaws of the Radio Corporation of America were amended at the regular monthly meeting of the board last week so as to reduce the number of directors to a total of twelve in accordance with a recent federal court decree.

Following the meeting, David Sarnoff, president, announced the election of Bertram S. Cutler, of New York, as a director. The resignation of Andrew W. Robertson was accepted. Mr. Cutler has been affiliated with the Rockefeller interests for many years and is a director of several New York banks, insurance companies and other corporations.



British Actors Equity Votes for Closed Shop

By an overwhelming vote of 1,040 to 12, members of the British Actors Equity Association voted recently to make the closed, or Equity, shop effective in London theatres beginning January 1.

The Association announced that after the new year it will include "Equity slips" in all London contracts to protect members until the new standard contract is prepared. Of the 750 actors now appearing in London, only 123 are not members, Alfred Wall, Equity secretary, declared.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The aggregate of theatre receipts from 109 houses in 20 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended December 17, 1932 equaled $1,136,003. The total for the previous calendar week, ended December 10, was erroneously recorded last week. The correct total, from 113 theatres in 20 cities, was $1,287,429, indicating a decrease of $151,426 for the week. During the more recent seven-day period no new high individual theatre records were recorded, while eight new low individual figures were shown. This compares with no new "highs" and five new "lows" for the preceding week.

DEAR HERALD:

This is where everything stops and nothing commences. A few more turns of April Shower's wheels and we will be in the salt water of the Gulf of Mexico. This town may some day become quite a city should the Government deepen the channel from the bay out in the Gulf so that deep water vessels can come into the harbor, which, it is said, the Government is going to do. This will be a wonderful thing for the Rio Grande valley, as it will give this country direct transportation by water to the eastern markets for their produce, a thing this valley has sadly needed.

In Alamo we called on Mrs. Lula Blow Ross, who at one time was on the New York stage. She has a granddaughter, Betsy Ross, who is in Fox's "Canyon Walls," a Zane Grey story which is now in production.

Shine Mason operates both theatres in McAllen for the Paschall circuit out of Dallas. This circuit was formerly Publix but recently has been taken over by Mr. Paschall. About all of the theatres in this valley belong to this circuit. We found Mr. Mason a delightful gentleman who took every pains to give us such information as he could regarding conditions in the valley. He was opening with "Bring 'Em Back Alive" when we called and he had two large lions in a cage in front of his theatre and these cats had the streets blocked all ways. It was a real ballyhoo that certainly attracted attention to his theatre.

W. S. Wade is the manager of the Rialto and Arcada at Harlingen, two other theatres belonging to the Paschall circuit. We had but a few minutes to visit Mr. Wade but those few minutes were very pleasant ones. He knew us as soon as we stepped in the office door and he called us by name, notwithstanding he had not seen us since we called on him some five years ago in Oklahoma City, and then only for a few minutes. A man with that kind of a memory will not forget any details necessary to make his theatre a success. We'll place our dough on Mr. Wade and Mr. Mason for winning the penants in theatre operation any time.

Yesterday we drove down to Boca Chica. They call this place a town but we don't know how they get that way. It has but a few shacks built on the shore of the Gulf close to where the Rio Grande runs into the Gulf.

We went down there to do a little surf fishing but the Gulf was so rough we couldn't do it. By the side of the road that runs down to Boca Chica from Brownsville we saw a marble tablet on which was this inscription: "On this site was fought the last battle of the war between the states on May 12th, 1865, 33 days after the close of the war. Erected by Texas Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, 1931."

This proved to us just how little we knew of the history of the Civil War. This is the first time we ever knew that there was a battle fought on Texas soil during the Civil War. There may have been a lot of 'em but we never read of 'em. What anybody would want to go clear down in the southeast corner of Texas among the cactus and mesquite to fight a battle for is more than we can understand. There was no darn sense in fighting anyhow, especially away down there where there was nobody around to watch the scrap, for at that time there probably wasn't a white man closer than San Antonio.

At Alamo we met an old friend of "Fishy" Phil Rand of Salmon, Idaho. Mr. W. T. Wittenburg, who not long ago lived at Salmon, was able to give us the lowdown on Phil, and what he gave us was pretty low-down too. He didn't say that Phil was a hossthief or anything like that, but he did say that he was mayor of the town at one time and a member of the school board and that was a plenty, for we've been both of 'em.

What Phil ought to do is to sit down and write Mr. Wittenburg a letter and address it to Alamo, Texas, for he is one of the leading citizens of this Rio Grande valley and stands ace high in the community, but Phil is not likely to do it, he won't even write the HERALD half as often as he should. That shows you how lazy he is.

Here's a sign we read in a garage: "Fabor De No Molestar Durante Horas De Tabajo Este Es Para Todos." Read it and win a premium, but do so at your own risk, we guarantee nothing. No, that isn't a translation. Here it is: "Don't Bother Mechanics During Working Hours. No Exception." When we read that Mex sign we wondered why they didn't say so in the first place and not mess around with a lingo like that.

Yesterday we drove across the Rio Grande at Brownsville to Matomoros, Mexico, and we want to advise you that if you ever get within a thousand miles of Matomoros turn around and go back. It's the squalliest looking town for a city we ever saw. If there is a street with more than twenty feet of pavement we failed to see it, and we drove over about all the town.

The streets in this town are narrow and none of them is paved and they haven't been worked or maintained since 1492. You can hit any sized rut you want to and you are no sooner out of one rut than you are in another. The residences look like cowsheds and in the business district about every other building is a bar, and you can get stuff there that will lift your hat off or put you to sleep in two minutes. The restaurants serve wild game the year round. We went into one and ordered a dinner of fried chicken and we ordered a glass of beer to see how it tasted and then we ordered another to see it we were still alive. We were but we were surprised. We met a Pawhuska Indian in there from Pawhuska, Oklahoma, and he was putting on a party, and what he told those Mexicans was worth listening to. He was a wealthy oil buck from up in Oklahoma and he made those Mexicans talk United States. He wouldn't stand for their lingo. He said to one fellow, "The hell you no savvy, you talk United States when you talk to me."

Well, that's Matomoros, and we don't want any more of it. The old U. S. looks plenty good for us.

telling the complete story of the motion picture in Radio City that portion of the celebrated Rockefeller Center named Radio City is itself a stupendous project in a modern colossus. The motion picture has its great theatres elsewhere than in this New York City development, but here are concentrated and co-ordinated all of the facilities for modern entertainment, conceived monumentally, and the theatre, the mechanisms and methods devoted to motion picture exhibition in Radio City have thus acquired an extraordinary interest . . . In response to this interest Better Theatres is giving the motion picture in Radio City extraordinary attention. The features prepared were introduced in the December 17th issue, in anticipation of the opening of Radio City the last week of the year. Most of these features, however, including much special descriptive and technical material, will be presented in the issue of January 14. In addition to articles on architectural design, the RKO Roxy will be fully pictured in a special enamel-paper insert, while other features will treat of technical provisions, equipment and furnishings.

Radio City comprises that portion of the Rockefeller Center development in New York City adjacent to Sixth Avenue. In the other direction, it runs the full extent of the whole project, from 48th to 51st Streets. The remainder of Rockefeller Center, extending to Fifth Avenue, is to be devoted to office buildings and public or semi-public park areas. In corporate operation, Radio City represents the interests of the Radio Corporation of America, which has its main office building here; Radio-Keith-Orpheum, which has its own office building besides two theatres, Radio City Music Hall and the RKO Roxy; and the National Broadcasting Company. The cost of the entire project is reported to be $250,000,000.

THE BLONDE CAPTIVE: (Native cast)—They panned me for a whole week after I ran this. Absolutely nothing to do it. Played Nov. 29-30.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

THE BLONDE CAPTIVE: (Native cast)—Watch cut for this baby, it is not a talker, but, like "Bring 'Em Back Alive," it is lectured all the way. Had quite a few walk out on it before the finish. I would not want to show another like it. If you run this, screen it and then decide if you want to cut out the turtle egg laying scene. Running time, 60 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

BY WHOSE HAND: Ben Lyon and Barbara Weeks—Lyon furnishes plenty of thrills as a reporter in this one. Patrons liked it. Running time, 64 mintues.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo.

THIS SPORTING AGE: Jack Holt—Not the kind of a picture for Holt. The poorest thing I have ever seen him in. Played Nov. 22-23.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

TWO FISTED LAW: Tim McCoy—Not until the farmer's spending power returns will star western pictures make any money with us. We used to depend upon these western stars to build up our week-ends, not any more. And when you come right down to it, when you've seen one you've seen them all. Played Dec. 2-3. Running time, 57 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND: Lee Tracy and Constance Cummings—A great show and every theatre should play it. Business will depend on just how hard you go after it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

THE WESTERN CODE: Tim McCoy and Nora Lane—McCoy is a fine western star and furnishes good entertainment. Running time, 64 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Very well liked. Above average. Played Nov. 20. Running time, 80 minutes.I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Here's box office for the small towns. There is no such song in the picture, but it's good nevertheless.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THE CROONER: David Manners—This picture did not go over for me and I personally think it not so much. Played Oct. 28-29. Running time, 68 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

CROONER: David Manners, Ann Dvorak and Ken Murray—Drew better than average. Excellent music and songs and clever story helped to boost second day. Especially liked with the younger couples. Played Nov. 6-7. Running time, 70 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

CROONER: David Manners—Good entertainment but people didn't like it so good. Too much radio stuff that you hear at home. Running time, 68 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

DOCTOR X: Lee Tracy, Fay Wray—Quite a scary picture. Everybody liked it but were scared to death, dreamed about it. Played Nov. 18-19. Running time, 76 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young—It's all right in a way, but some small towners criticized it from the baby angle and the screams in the hospital were a bit too loud.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STRANGER IN TOWN: David Manners and Ann Dvork—Patrons like these two together. Fine, give us more of them. Did a fair business. Running time, 66 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Zita Johann, Dick Arlen and Edward G. Robinson—Intense drama of fishing industry that drew average. Liked generally, especially by men patrons. Robinson excellent in his character. Some rich comedy in it. Better than average picture. Played Dec. 2-3. Running time, 77 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Warren William—This is a fair picture in every respect.—Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Fox

CHANDU THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Bela Lugosi and Irene Ware—Mystery and comedy. Here is a lot of grand hokum that should hand your patrons laughs and thrills. We ran this on our bargain night and did a fair business. My patrons liked it fine. Running time, 64 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

CHANDU THE MAGICIAN: Edmuind Lowe—Good mystery picture. The kids will eat it up. Played Dec. 6.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

FIRST YEAR: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Janet Gaynor pull decreasing unless they put her in known and liked titles.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers and Ben Lyon—This is a good show and we did a good business, although we ran it on our bargain night. Running time, 63 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen—Good comedy, hokum type. Played Nov. 30.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marian Nixon, Ralph Bellamy—We played this picture against "Grand Hotel" and did a fair business. This is just the type picture for the small town. It's great entertainment and will please 100 per cent.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM: Marion Nixon—Very disappointed in drawing power of this and had so many complaints about it's not being like the book. It is not the super-special Fox claims it is. It is just a nice ordinary picture in our estimation. Worth playing but not worth raising prices on as we did. Played Nov. 1-2. Running tme, 80 mnutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—Good picture and good moral. Played Dec. 1-2.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—I consider this Rogers' best picture. Played Dec. 4-5.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

WEEK ENDS ONLY: Joan Bennett and Ben Lyon—Charming Joan Bennett has always been more of a favorite here than her more widely advertised sister, Constance. This picture is one of her most delightful. Lyon is also extra good. Business above average on this. Played Nov. 7-8. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett and Charles Farrell—A swell program picture with Bennett and Eugene Pallette stealing the picture and Farrell very much miscast although playing his part very satisfactorily. WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett and Charles Farrell—Very nice little program picture—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

Mascot

PRIDE OF THE LEGION: Rin-Tin-Tin, Jr.—This was an excellent picture with gangsters, action and love interest. Okay for any house in America, regardless of the gangster theme.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Mayfair

PASSPORT TO PARADISE: Jack Mulhall—Well liked. Mulhall O.K. Average business. Played Nov. 18-19.—Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa. Miner town, country patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper—This is a great picture but it seems that the public wants something to laugh at instead of crying. Played Nov. 27-29. Running time, 85 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: (All star)—This picture has seen its days at the box office. Right now, unless it was bought cheap, it's no good. People panned it who saw it at high admission prices, so it hurt business.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: (All star)—Not a small town picture. Played Oct. 9-10-11.—C. R. Cook, Missouri Theatre, Maryville, Mo. Upper class patronage.

KONGO: Lupe Velez, Walter Huston—A gruesome picture with a cast that deserves better things. Huston, as cripple who practices the art of black magic, drags a white girl down into degradation. Swell fare for a small town theatre! Brutal scenes all the way through, one that is not fit for either adults or children to see, then they compared it to a "Trader Horn" and a "Tarzan." The inference all the way through the picture after the degradation of the girl, in revenge on her father, is that one more man in her life won't make any difference, and that in the dialogue. MGM should be proud of this one and the "Freaks" that they put out the first of the season.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

NEW MORALS FOR OLD: Robert Young—This is a waste of celluloid as it was nothing but a picture. Played Nov. 1-2. Running time, 78 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler and Polly Moran—Universally liked by Dressler-Moran fans. Appealed to all classes. Well received. Played Dec. 1-2-3.—C. R. Cook, Missouri Theatre, Maryville, Mo. All classes patronage.

RED HEADED WOMAN: Jean Harlow—Although Harlow is a vivid personality, and gave a magnicent performance, the theme has been abused and worn out. We should like to see her in a picture of her own, with a sparkle, a glow and a little human tenderness. Played Sept. 18-19-20.—C. R. Cook, Missouri Theatre, Maryville, Mo. Mixed patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer—Box office natural. Universally enjoyed by all; especially attended by those who had seen or read the play. Played Nov. 20-21.—C. R. Cook, Missouri Theatre, Maryville, Mo. All classes patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer—Some won't like it but most will. Played Nov. 23-24. Running time, 100 minutes.—I. W. Rawley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—After "The Passionate Plumber" this is poor entertainment. There is absolutely no laughs in it. The dialogue is forced and the efforts for laughs are forced. This one will not add to the popularity of Keaton. Very poor. Schnozzle in this one is a flop, not a new idea in his work.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

UNASHAMED: Helen Twelvetrees—It is a shame that MGM would release such a picture. Played Nov. 9-10. Running time 78 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: Lionel Barrymore—This is a remarkable picture but it is not a family picture, good for adults, not much for women. Played Nov. 16-17. Running time, 92 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

Monogram

AIR EAGLES: Norman Kerry, Shirley Grey—A little of everything in this one. Average attendance. No criticism. Circus and airplane well acted. Little too old. Played Nov. 25.—Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa. Farmer and miner patronage.

GIRL FROM CALGARY: Fifi D'Orsay—Bad recording and photography makes it hard to judge what it could have been, as it was pretty poor stuff.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LAW OF THE SEA: Ralph Ince—A sea picture with plenty of action. Ralph Ince plays the heavy masterfully. Little better at box office. Played Dec. 3. Running time, 7 reels. Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa. Farmer and miner patronage.

POLICE COURT: Henry B. Walthall—A story of father and son love, well acted but did not bring in the average customer and we failed to satisfy our few, as the record (or sound) on the same was not very good. Played Dec. 10. Running time, 60 minutes.—Arch Catalano, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa. Farmer and miner patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Irwin, Leila Hyams, Bing Crosby and other radio stars—A marvelous picture. They talked about this for a week after. Wonderful music. Recording excellent. Played Nov. 6-7.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams and radio stars—Offers good advertising possibilities and show will please everyone.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—Average. We believe audience reaction the best of any Dietrich picture ever played here. Played Dec. 4-5-6. Running time, 85 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—This could have been a swell show if they had left out a lot of the police chasing stuff. Attendance fair. Played Nov. 20-21. Running time, 85 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

DEVIL AND THE DEEP: Gary Cooper, Tallulah Bankhead—Some good action aboard sinking submarine but rather sordid story. Unworthy of these stars. Played Nov. 26. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen—Patrons getting kind of tired of this kind of picture. Attendance fair. Played Oct. 9-10. Running time, 80 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—This one drew better than their previous pictures and seemed to go over better as the whole house was in a continuous uproar. Can heartily recommend this one. Played Oct. 24-25. Running time, 68 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Another fine picture from Paramount. Perfect sound and photography. This boy, Cary Grant, is great. The ladies are wild about him.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Light but pleasing fare. Last year it would have been a hit. Business above average due to good title. Played Dec. 6. Running time, 70 minutes.—I. W. Rawley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll and Cary Grant—Just a program picture with no reason for its existence.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette McDonald—Airy inconsequential story made good entetainment by beautiful singing and music. No offensive boudoir scenes. Played Nov. 27-28. Running time, 100 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie and Marian Nixon—For its type, certainly a very interesting picture. All our men like it and many of the women as well, even though it is primarily a man's picture from beginning to end. Played Dec. 3-4. Running time, 75 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre. Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie—Below average. Well liked. Played Nov. 25-26. Running time, 74 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Too long between Lloyd pictures. Lloyd has been forgotten. Box office flop. Played Nov. 13-14.—C. R. Cook, Missouri Theatre, Maryville, Mo. Rural patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Failed to draw. Pleased those who came but no one seemed interested in Lloyd, so receipts went plenty low. Excellent entertainment indeed. Much better than his last picture. Played Nov. 13-14-15. Running time, 95 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—Fair picture, easy to sell with its good names. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1. Running time, 73 minutes.—I. W. Rawley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft and Constance Cummings—A nice show for the flappers on Tuesday. Will please but has no exploitation possibilities.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—Below average. Very well liked by those who came. Played Nov. 21. Running time, 74 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Lila Lee, Clive Brook, Frances Dee, Charles Grapewin, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles—A wonderfully entertaining little picture. A bit of everyday life with everyday folks. Best courtroom scene for months and, gentlemen, don't miss the work of Charles Grapewin, as "grandpop." For that matter, each character was almost perfect. Played Dec. 2-3. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook and Frances Dee—Nice program picture and will please.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: George M. Cohan and Claudette Colbert—Excellent picture and has advertising possibilities.—C. L. Niles. Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan—This is a fine football mystery, the football boys and school children liked it fine. Played Oct. 30-31. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

70,000 WITNESSES: Richard Arlen—This is a great football and murder mystery combined in a new angle that people enjoyed very much. However, business was just average. Played Nov. 14-15. Running time, 69 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

VANISHING FRONTIER: John Mack Brown and Evalyn Knapp—Another excellent western and should make you money on Saturday.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

AGE OF CONSENT: Dorothy Wilson—This is a dandy little picture but nothing to draw them in with. Played Nov. 11-12. Running time, 63 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Eric Linden—This is a fair program picture. Will get by.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Dorothy Wilson, Eric Linden and Richard Cromwell—Failed to draw. Comments said it was too suggestive. Not popular story in small towns. Played Oct. 30-31. Running time, 61 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore and Billie Burke—Barrymore's name means box office. Say nothing about Burke. It's an excellent picture. Needs exploitation and will satisfy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore—Below average. Men stayed away but women came and liked it. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1. Running time, 70 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—In spite of critics this was a good picture. I did advertise it heavily. It out-grossed "Grand Hotel."—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—The fight between the snake and tiger was worth the price alone. Good small town stuff. Played Nov. 10-11.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Above the average western. Business fair. Played Nov. 4-5. Running time, 58 minutes.—I. W. Rawley, Ward Theate, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Like all Keenes. Very well liked. Played Dec. 2-3. Running time, 56 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—Just another western—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Made a poor report on this picture before I had seen it properly. I think this the best picture I've run for 6 months and every exhibitor should run it. It is timely and has drawing power. Played Dec. 4.—R. V. Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—Drew better than average business for two nights and seemed to please 100 per cent. Personally I thought it below the standard of their former releases, but the customers liked the football scene very much and it went over big. Played Dec. 4-5. Running time, 74 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—This pleased my patrons to perfection and hope they will tun out more like it. Played Oct 2-3-4. Running time, 67 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theate, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey—Not up to standard for these boys. Disappointment here. Played Nov. 24-25.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Pulls the children and with them comes the balance. Our matinee better than average night. Recommend it will satisfy and make you money and oh how scarce they are.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Richard Dix—Not up to Dix's standard. RKO is producing very few box office pictures so far. I hope they wake up to that fact and give us some real pictures.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzie Green—Very good picture. Played Nov. 20-21.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Fay Wray and Joel McCrea—Just couldn't get any business on this horror show. Must have been too shivery for they kept away from it. Fans seem to know more about advance pictures than we do. Played Nov. 9-10. Running time, 77 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea—Can't see this. Absolutely impossible story. Nothing to it. Lay off. Played Nov. 15-16.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez, Karen Morley—Works of the leads very good but picture overrated so far as drawing power is concerned. Radio publicity did not seem to help, at least in our case it did not. Story only fair. Played Dec. 4-5. Running time, 77 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez and Karen Morley—An excellent mystery show but for some reason or other did no business for us.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Ricardo Cortez and Irene Dunne—Some told us they were very disappointed in the picture. Played Dec. 7-8. Running time, 60 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE HOLLYWOOD: Constance Bennett—One of the big flops of the year for us. This might have been high-class stuff in the big towns but here in the sticks it was what the boys and girls call a very rotten picture. Did not please 50 per cent of those who saw it and I'm still hearing about how they disliked it. Running time, 88 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

Tiffany-World Wide

THE LAST MILE: Preston Foster and Howard Phillips—Had many complaints on this one and quite a few walked out on it before the end. It's a red meat story and will not appeal to women of any class. We ran it on our weak night for lowest admission charged during the week and then it failed to get by. Better look at it before you show. Played Dec. 6. Running time, 74 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry—We shied away from this a long time but I'me here to say it sure has drawing power. We gave it a good program of short subjects and had lots of compliments on the show. James Kirkwood and Beryl Merier are both worthy of mention in your advertising. Played Nov. 24. Running time, 57 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Ufa

MONTE CARLO MADNESS: Hans Albers—They only tried to make another Chevalier out of this foreign star but failed miserably. My patrons like musicals but they must have snappy and funny songs to please and not opera. Producers have forgotten how to make a "Gold Diggers" or a "Whoopee." The musical shorts are usually better than the musical pictures of the few there are.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse heatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks—Good billing qualities and will please.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

WHITE ZOMBIE: Bela Lugosi—A horror picture that will get some money. C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. Small town patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien and Ralph Bellamy—Very good air picture. Played Nov. 27-28.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen—It's a good picture but not so much box office in small towns. I believe producers are overdoing the football angle.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen and Gloria Stuart—Here is one sweet football picture. Many here thought it the best ever made. It drew like a big picture drew in 1929 and gave satisfaction to all. Go out and howl about this one for you have a show when you put it on. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—Drew better than average business. Should be adults only. Women swelled the attendance and comments excellent on the picture. The stars unusually well liked in this. Played Nov. 20-21-22. Running time, 90 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—This is a fine show for the grownups and not much entertainment for the kids. Attendance good. Played Nov. 13-14. Running time, 84 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne and John Boles—Good picture. Played Nov. 23-24.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

DOOMED BATTALION: Tala Birell, Victor Varconi—Was a flop. Too drawn out. Beautiful shots in picture, however.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Mix always brings them in for me on Saturday. This one will make the kids yell and the old folks feel like it, for it is full of action. Running time, 63 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Okay for westerns but westerns are not clicking for us. Played Nov. 26.—H. S. Kreighbaum, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Family patronage.

MY PAL THE KING: Tom Mix—The Tom Mix pictures are better than average westerns. Worth better than average draw.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres and Maureen O'Sullivan—A very fine little picture that failed to get film rental for us in two days, but pleased the few who came to see it. I think that picture fans are fed up on those wisecrack newspaper yarns. If you can get them in, this one will please. Played Dec. 7-8. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Average patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres and Maureen O'Sullivan—Drew better than average, but not as well liked as some other similar type stories of newspaper columnists. It's brilliant entertainment though and was well liked here. Played Dec. 4-5. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Bois Karloff—It has its moments but not as good as expected as a whole. Business average. Played Dec. 2-3. Running time, 72 minutes.—I. W. Rawley, War Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell—This might go with some but it was a terrible flop. Played Oct. 5-6. Running time, 63 minutes.—C. C. Kuafman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy and Mary Brian—Well liked. Funny. Holds the interest throughout. Tracy has a winning personality and ability. New type of peppy and snappy story. Drew more business than usual. Heard lots of comments made that brought in business because of these comments. It was a hit for patrons as well as for our box office receipts. Played Nov. 23-24. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

MAN WANTED: Kay Francis, David Manners—Not a picture for family audiences. Kay Francis does some clever acting but does not draw for my theatre. Played Nov. 25-26. Running time, 63 minutes.—C. C. Kaufman, Gem Theatre, Colusa, Cal. Family patronage.

RIDE HIM COWBOY: John Wayne and Ruth Hall—Excellent. Played Nov. 25-26. Running time, 59 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—This is a pleasing box office picture in every respect.—C. V. Martina, Playhouse Theatre, Clyde, N. Y. Small town patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—Made an ideal Thanksgiving offering and more fans for Arliss. Average attendance. Played Nov. 23-24. Running time, 72 minutes.—I. N. Kuhl, Rivoli Theatre, Seward, Neb. General patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss and Mary Astor—Very well liked but just average business. Arliss fans pleased especially. Story simpler than "Millionaire" but holds interest very well. This will help his next appearance. Timely type story and easily understood by all. Clean and wholesome family entertainment. Played Nov. 18-19. Running time, 75 minutes.—R. E. Falkenberg, Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD: Constance Bennett—My patrons like Bennett and she is a great little actress. Attendance good. Played Oct. 23-24. Running time, 71 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. General patronage.

WINNER TAKE ALL: James Cagney—A knockout. Small towns should eat this up. Be sure and use their trailer on this. Cagney is great. Played Nov. 17.—C. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

A VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS!

SPIRITS THIS CHRISTMAS may not be running as high and handsome as in days of yore, but optimism is still the crowning feature of most real showmen. They must be, to go through what they have gone through during the past three years and still greet an audience with smiles on their faces.

"Peace on Earth"? Sure, providing you can take it on the chin time and again and still stand up for more. "Good Will To Men"? Why not? It won't get you to first base carrying grudges and harboring a feeling of animosity against this, that or the other guy.

IN PROSPEROUS DAYS, when the customers flocked to the box office in such numbers that even the S.R.O. sign could not stand up under the strain, we could all afford to lie back and smile the smile of a successful exhibitor or showman. Today we find a far different picture. Business is so low that we even hate the thought of standing around the house; the emptiness gets on our nerves; the thought of losses takes the form of ghosts and they fly around that vast empty auditorium with dirty smirks on their elusive features. They taunt you, call you evil names; they remind you of the halcyon days when we patted ourselves on the back and claimed most of the credit for profitable operations.

SURE, WE'RE GOING through a critical period. You've probably heard that so often that you're growing tired of it. But there is one thing to be said in favor of ye critical period: It will eliminate the make-believe showmen from the real goods. We've watched premature managers jumped from doormen and ushers to the head of the line long before they were seasoned for such promotion, but some foolish efficiency expert dubbed such changes economy.

It proved to be punk economy and cost most theatre owners a sock of dough before they awoke to the fact that they had sacrificed money-making showmen for cheap nincompoops. Then they made a more or less mad scramble for real showmen again. But the damage done was not to be undone overnight. It is going to take time, and lots of it. And it will also take a lot of patience on the part of the theatre owners to give the better managers sufficient time to re-establish those theatres which sank deep into the red while being handled by key-carrying head porters.

CERTAINLY WE'VE ALL been having tough times. But to be able to stand up and fight against the almost impossible is an achievement worthy of shouting about and those who can stand the terrific strain of pulling those palookas out of the red and back into the profitable class will, we hope, not have fought in vain. They will be entitled to their full share of the glory and credit that is theirs by reason of a successful, hard task.

So, if you have a job, no matter what your own particular opinion of that job may be, at least be thankful that it is a job. If the salary is below what you deserve, just try to live within its limited scope. It will be a swell lesson and one that will count for future savings when salaries start to take an upward trend again. To many showmen, high salaries did not mean savings in proportion. They spent every cent they made, and sometimes a bit more. The result was that they were never able to realize the necessity for putting aside a few dollars against such times as we have been passing through and they have felt the pinch of want and the worry of what would happen to them and their families if that pay envelope failed to materialize at the end of each week.

ENJOYING A MERRY CHRISTMAS does not necessarily mean throwing away hard earned dough and getting soused in the process. You and your family can have a most enjoyable Christmas on very, very little if you are as optimistic at home as you have to be at your business. Instead of buying the kids a half dozen different, foolish toys, you'll buy them something practical. Instead of celebrating with the boys in the back of a speakeasy, you'll blow the family to a real, old-fashioned turkey dinner.

If times are tough, just remember they could be lots tougher and for every showman at work there are four or five unemployed.

YOU'RE NOT THE ONLY guy who has found out there is a depression. Maybe you were fortunate enough to get by for a long time without really believing it. It's Christmas; try to be thankful for whatever you have and spread a little sunshine amongst those who are not so fortunate. Maybe a year from now we will be looking back on the depression as a bad nightmare. We hope so.

A Merry, Merry Christmas to every Round Tabler and showman on earth.

TAYLOR AND ESPEDAL MADE FINE DISPLAY BASED ON SEQUENCE

Among the many fine displays inspired by "Smilin' Through" was one planned by O. T. Taylor, manager of the D. & R. Theatres Company, Aberdeen, Wash, and executed by Erling Espedal. We believe the accompanying photo will convey a fair idea of the attractive "build-up" carried out from the gate scene in the picture. It was handled in this wise because the paper contained no full-length figures, and time was too short to paint any. The picture was played two weeks ahead of national release, which accounts for the "World Premiere" sign over the side gate.

We have had several occasions to present examples of the interesting work turned out by Taylor and Espedal. The former personally plans all pretentious displays, while credit for execution of lobbies, etc., goes to the latter. Incidentally, Taylor at one time in his business career conducted "Stage and Pit" for the old "Moving Picture World," and many of our Club members will recall his department. Now he's camped right out on the firing line for fair. We'll be looking for further news from him concerning activities on the D. & R.

LEE IS NOT KICKING OVER SHOWBUSINESS UP IN TOWN OF BATH

An optimistic note sounds from the upper regions of New York State, where in Bath, H. C. Lee manages the Babcock Theatre. No. S. R. O. signs out at every show, or anything else so disconcertingly interesting, but just good, steady theatre trade; and the same conditions prevail throughout town. Which, as Lee observes, is a whole lot better than having business up one week and down the next.

Maybe the five acts of vaudeville he's giving them every Wednesday help matters along, although there is no evidence in data at hand to back up that theory. One thing we can tell you all, though, is that the extra show makes H. C. and his boys do some fancy hustling, since he has to handle the stage along with other duties. The acts have been good and patrons are well satisfied, we hear.

Just a couple of notes from up around Bath: The last time we reported on the activities of Lee he was down in Corning helping Walter Savage get the Skouras house there opened up. Now Walter Smith, the former manager, is there, while Savage is managing another house over in Oswego. At any rate, Lee is back attending to his own work and that's enough to keep any one man pretty busy. We'll be watching for more news from Lee.

WHAT! NO OPPOSITION?

It's a hell of a business, Jake!

Yeah?

Yeah!

So well?

So well I'll tal yuh: 'Member when I took over that 600-seat palooka late last August? All run down at the heels; and I got a bargain, s'help me. Only cost a few hundred to paint her up and clean out the chewing gum. The spot looked like a winner. Figured to open Labor Day to a good start. Well, right off the bat it looked like folks in that town didn't like the idea of stayin' home holidays, an' me with a special double feature bill at the lowest rate anyone ever handed 'em. Everybody who had anything that could roll, from a flivver on up, went out and burned up gas instead of comin' to the theatre, like they should have done. Okay for that! Then the world series was broadcast, an' that kept 'em home; then the football season came on, and a lot of saps went and gave up 4.40 to see real games instead of comin' to look at "The Spirit of Rugby," greatest film you ever saw.

When football ended, along came Thanksgiving, Xmas, New Year's. Do you think you could get 'em away from the holiday spirit? Don't ax me! Even put on turkey giveaways, toy mats, special midnite shows and God knows what! Then a nearby opposish' decided to slash prices and I had to meet him or give up the ghost. Packed houses but small profit. The weather got tough—snow, sleet, rain an' everything else they had stored away up high. Then Lent came due, an' you know what that is! Lot of conservative old fogies in town an' it was a great gag for 'em to stay home and save money. Got through Lent and then the baseball, circus and carnival season started; took another wallop. Next, the weather got hot, an' do I have to tell you what showbusiness is in summer! So here I am back where I started, Jake.

So well?

Wal I'll tal yuh: Business might be worse. I'm on my way to the real estate office to take up my option on renewal for another year. What can I lose?

Quite a striking 40 x 60 blow-up resulted from the combined brains of Louis Frisch, former publicity director Monty MacLevy and Harvey Fleischman, manager of the Embassy Theatre, Brooklyn, in their successful efforts to exploit "Hells Highway."

It was Frisch's idea to tie the picture in with the vast amount of newspaper publicity given the sweat-box tragedy in a southern convict camp several weeks ago, and to also prepare a special trailer for a follow-up. The 40 x 60 picture here was used throughout the Randforce circuit and became the centre of much attention from patrons and passers-by. Both Fleischman, of the Embassy, and Manager Pincus, of the Cross Bay, made up special dummies and sweatboxes for the occasion.

Since Monty MacLevy contributed the above to this department he resigned his position with Randforce as manager of the Savoy and publicity director for the circuit to accept supervision of the Round Table Circuit, a group of houses on Long Island. However, the Randforce men are still carrying on as of old and we hope, even though Monty is no longer with them, they'll find a way to send in news of what they're doing to sell shows.

WILLIAMS CASHED IN BY HELPING GROUP OF AMATEUR FILM MAKERS

Is every Round Tabler aware that the Amateur Movie Makers of America is an organization of national scope; that it is represented in practically every city of any size; that the association is naturally akin to the local motion picture theatre group, and that it wouldn't be a bad idea at all to contact the head of your local club with a view to effecting a closer relationship between club and theatre?

Tony Williams, manager of the DeWitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., took all of this into consideration and in addition to putting himself and theatre on record with the Movie Makers, secured a nice news story in the local paper re the making of a local film for entry in the nation-wide contest in Hollywood. Williams reviewed the film and cooperated in its local showing.

MANAGER CONNER IS STILL CAMPAIGNING FOR TOWER, CHICAGO

Just when we were wondering what had become of M. Conner, manager of the Tower Theatre, Chicago, the Club reporter turned in a report on a recent campaign he made for an eight-day run of "Air Mail," which accounted for better than average business.

As part of the advance work he posted a three-sheet in the lobby two weeks in advance. His method of doing this is to make a metal background the size of a three-sheet, so that the paper adheres most smoothly. On each side of the easel are attached "wings" of compoboard, in this instance painted red, white and blue. The wing masking pieces were large enough to hold six upright stills. The playdate was placed across the top. This scheme provides a very colorful and attractive lobby easel. Another two-week advance effort consisted of distribution of 30,000 folded pluggers, carrying ad on back. Incidentally, during run of film the 24-sheet cutout was moved out front for display over the box office. Five other 24's were posted in choice spots on the South Side.

Not being in a position to secure loan of material from air lines to make an atmospheric lobby, he resorted to use of the 24-sheet, cut out around the letters and plane. The two circles in each corner of the 24 were also cut out and mounted for a tie-in with the display. For additional atmosphere 35 model planes were secured from exhibits at the National Hobby Show, which had just finished showing at one of the large hotels. These planes were constructed by South Side boys, a number of whom flew models around the lobby every evening during the engagement. The boys were exceptionally expert in their art and furnished spectators much amusement. An air-mail collection of scorched and burned letters salvaged from crashes also captured considerable interest from patrons.

Exploitation among schools was taken care of by distribution of 5,000 pluggers on the picture and a matinee party which, with the cooperation of a large, nearby department store, went over in a big way. The store furnished a number of Air Mail pilot helmets for give-aways and also gave a display window and an inside counter.

We're mighty glad to get in touch with Conner again and hope that the foregoing is a sure sign that he is again back on the active list. He and the Tower have always stood for interesting exploitation and we're certain all his fellow members will welcome his return to the fold.

Richards Again On Job

E. V. Richards, president of Saenger Theatres, New Orleans, who has been ill of late, is reported back at his desk.

HARVEY PROMOTED LOT OF PRESENTS FOR LUCKY CHILD

Some fortunate baby over in Bristol, Conn., where E. J. Harvey manages the Warner Theatre, fell heir to a lot of useful gifts from local merchants by virtue of being the first baby born after 3 P. M. on a certain Sunday which marked the first showing of "Blessed Event."

This all came about through the promotion of a full page cooperative ad by Manager Harvey. He not only sold the newspaper the ideas, but sold the ads as well, thereby obtaining for himself free space to the amount of $42 worth. All the merchants stated in their ads that they would give jewelry, shoes, dresses, a baby carriage and many other gifts to the "Blessed Event" baby.

We are glad to hear through the HERALD representative that Harvey is in such good spirits these days; and who wouldn't be, with merchants and patrons in a mood so receptive to good shows that even the thought of raising admission rates is beginning to assert itself. Okay, E. J., let's hear what else is going on over your way.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Starting at the bottom rung of the ladder, Laurence J. Doran virtually grew up with the William Smalley Theatre Circuit, up in Cooperstown, N. Y., excepting a couple of years he spent in a Wall Street brokerage office. However, he and Wall Street decided to call the bout a draw and he returned to show business.

Laurence Doran

Doran did about all there is to do around theatres before taking on the duties of advertising manager for the circuit. After a fling at this end of the game he came back to Cooperstown and settled down as manager of Smalley's Theatre, where we find him today.

He was born in Cooperstown and educated in the High School there and Blair Academy. He entered showbusiness at the age of 21 and is apparently in it for the balance of his active life. He left it once, as we stated above, but never again. Doran is a member of the Elks, National Exchange Club and a K. of C. Unless there's been a change since he filled in his biography form, he's still a single man.

CO-OP AD FEATURED CAMPAIGN MADE BY HARRY C. STOWELL

A tie-up with a radio dealer, whereby a half-page cooperative ad was secured from him and the balance of the page sold to other local merchants, was one of the features of the campaign on "Big Broadcast" by Harry C. Stowell, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Middletown, N. Y.

Note that one-half of the lower portion of the page carrying the radio-theatre ad plugs the attraction, and that practically every one of the eight smaller ads in the upper part bear the headline "Big Broadcast." In return for the space Stowell gave the radio dealer a foyer display of radios four days in advance. Credit cards furnished by the dealer, tying in the radio and picture, were placed on top of each model. The dealer also furnished one of the large combination models for the playing of records secured through a tie-up with a music store. Two radios were also placed at either side of the stage, alternately spotted from the booth two minutes before each performance. An attractive young lady distributed heralds paid for by the dealer.

A further plug which proved effective was use of a public address system also promoted through the tie-up with the radio jobber. "Mike" and equipment were placed in one of the offices and the horns hooked up on the marquee. For three days in advance the picture was sold by announcements and records of musical numbers from the picture over the system. During run of picture this stunt was used to the utmost 20 minutes before the matinee opened.

It cost the merchants approximately $150 to effect the above tie-up, while Stowell only had to kick in about $4 for his share of the deal. It proved a most effective selling aid.

Frank Newman Recovering

Frank L. Newman, Sr., division manager for Fox-West Coast Theatres in the Pacific-Northwest, is now at his home instead of a local hospital, where he has been confined for the past three weeks as the result of a major operation. Until he resumes his duties in two more weeks or so, Frank Newman, Jr., in charge of the Paramount Theatre, Seattle, will supervise the local division.

FINE DISPLAY MADE FOR HARVEST MONTH BY MANAGER BROWN

Harvest days may be over for Jessie dear and 1932 but they'll be around again and readers can then capitalize on the novel display fashioned by William Brown, manager of the Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The photo on this page will convey a fair idea of a portion of Brown's campaign on "Harvest Picture Month." The word Harvest was made with carrots; Picture, with potatoes, and Month, with large onions. Titles of coming attractions were painted on compo-board cutout to resemble a variety of fruits and vegetables, such as sweet potatoes, oranges, pumpkins, squash, etc. The entire display was further enhanced by trimmings of real vegetables, supplied gratis through a tie-up with one of the largest markets in the neighborhood. In return for the fruit and vegetables the theatre made up a pumpkin which carried the credit names. All the display cost the theatre was $5.

We hear that the display described above was one of the best attention-getters ever used by Brown and we're sorry that its appearance was delayed so long after the Harvest season. However, tuck it away for next year and thank Bill for remembering his fellow Club members. We'll be telling you all more about his work in future issues.

HARRY HARRIS USED ONE-SHEET MEDIUM FOR PERSONAL OKAY

Club members privileged in the matter of getting out their own teaser one-sheets will be interested to learn that Harry Harris, manager of the Exchange Cinema, Lincoln, England, recently used this medium to express his personal approval of a picture.

With red ink accentuating title, the word "personally" and playdates, his poster read as follows: "If You Do Not Agree That 'The Melody of Life' Is a Great Entertainment and a Beautiful Contribution to Human Idealism, Tell Me Personally as You Leave the Exchange Cinema During Monday, Nov. 21st, Week. Yours Faithfully, H. B. Harris, General Manager."

Harris is a firm believer in the use of the teaser one-sheet, as we've had occasion to point out several times, and the one described above certainly was distinctive. We've observed use of the personal slant in many forms of newspaper advertising, letters, etc. but this is, to all appearances, the first time the one-sheet has been used to that end. If the idea appeals to any other Round Tabler, vote Harry Harris a few words of thanks for passing the information along.

WE OFTEN WONDER! By LOU SYLVESTER

IF THIS WILL BE THE NEXT BIG ORDER

PAT McGEE AND HIS STAFF GAVE PATRONS HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE

One of the most spectacular shows in the theatrical history of Oklahoma City was recently pulled off by Pat McGee and his staff at the Criterion Theatre when they pulled a Hollywood Premiere for "Big Broadcast."

The newspapers, radio stations and merchants cooperated to the fullest extent with advance and current publicity. In addition to Pat's efforts, credit for the success of the stunt goes to Gene Neal, publicity, and Bert Stern, Frank McCabe, Paul Ketchum and James Burge, house managers in the city.

Flags and pennants decorated the front for the occasion and two 5,000-watt sun arcs were mounted atop the marquee and played into the sky before and during presentation. Other lamps were grouped opposite the theatre to flood the front with a brilliant light while the premiere was on.

Formal announcements and invitations were sent to approximately 300 of the city's socially elect and special sections in the theatre were reserved for their accommodations. As the guests arrived at the theatre they were assisted to alight from autos by a uniformed footman and their names announced to the assembled throng over a public address system. As they were ushered into the lobby they were again announced over a special radio hook-up by a man who acted as master of ceremonies for the occasion.

In addition the musical presentation and show arranged for the evening a Fashion Parade was carried out through cooperation of a local merchant. A run-way was erected from the center of the stage over to the center section of seats for a distance of about 50 feet, over which several smartly dressed members of the city's younger set promenaded. The novelty of a roving microphone, carried by a radio announcer among the audience, was introduced as he conducted cross fire of repartee with prominent people present.

A tie-up made with the state distributor of a well known radio set allowed the dealer a week's display of product in the lobby and yielded the theatre use of two huge sets at either side of the stage, through which the entire presentation was played back over the radio station hook-up. The radio concern also carried large cooperative ads in the local newspapers, as did the sponsor of the Fashion show.

The premiere drew such an over-flow crowd that a second print of the current film offering had to be procured and shown at the Capitol Theatre, located two blocks west of the Criterion.

Telegrams, telephone calls and letters from considerable distances away attested to the widespread popularity of the premiere and McGee and his associates are to be congratulated for putting it over in such a big way. They're a live bunch of showmen and we'll be on the lookout for news of a lot more stunts these fellows are using to boost the box office.

Jameyson Scores With Campaign

It is reported that the brilliant campaign waged by Howard E. Jameyson, Fox-Midwest district manager at Wichita, Kas., on "Life Begins," in his territory, will be used by other theatres on the circuit.

WATCH YOUR STEP!

Managers who contemplate any form of contest, prize competitions or schemes of any kind in connection with which the mails are to be used are advised to ascertain whether such matter is admissible to the mails in view of the fact that the postal laws prohibit the mailing of matter relating to schemes or enterprises for the award of prizes or distribution of money or property by lot or chance, drawings, guessing contests, lucky number contests, etc., and should submit to their local postmaster details and full particulars of such schemes in order to avoid violation of the lottery laws.

WRIGHT USED WOODEN MONEY TO ANNOUNCE SLASH IN ADMISSION

Maybe some of you Round Tablers have scoffed about the reported use of "wooden money" out in the Great Northwest? If so, we're here to tell you that there's a piece of it lying right in front of our eyes, sent the Club by Jack Wright, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Le Grande, Wash.

As in many other sections of the country, business conditions have not been so hot out Jack's way, what with three major financial flops and consequent results. So he arranged with a local wood-worker to issue a number of small pieces of "wooden money" as tokens for reduced admission. On one side was printed: "Good for 15c. at the Liberty Theatre on a 35c. Ticket (dates); Good for 10c. on a 25c. Ticket." The reverse read: "Made by Goodnough Carpenter Shop. We Make Anything in Wood From Money to Mansions."

In other words, Jack took the above means to find out if a lowered admission would click. All cost was taken care of by the carpenter shop in return for the credit on the one side. Though we have yet to hear that conditions are on the upturn out Wright's way, we're passing his gag along as one which ought to get attention when used in connection with a number of publicity stunts.

Niagara Exhibs Raise Rates

Exhibitors of Niagara Falls, N. Y., recently met in the office of Herman Lorence, manager of the Strand and Cataract Theatres there and signed an agreement to raise admission rates 5 and 10 cents over the present scale. The change is to go into effect at once.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

All the way up the ladder, from manager of "bill boys" to city manager of three theatres, briefly sums up the career of Kermit E. Ward, at present in charge of Publix-Kincey interests in Sumter, S. C.

Kermit E. Ward

Ward was born in the vicinity of Rocky Mount, N. C., Sept. 30, 1902, and was educated in Rocky Mount grade schools, Cary High School, Cary, N. C., and a private business college. The theatre held a fascination for him, and at the age of 15 he received his first schooling in the art of showbusiness as head on the bill posting department. He then took a fling at the booth, holding down the job of relief projectionist, and, later one, became chief projectionist and assistant manager of three houses. Following that assignment he was made city manager of three theatres in Rocky Mount and held the job until the Kincey Circuit took over management, when he was transferred to Goldsboro and, ultimately, to his present post.

He is married, the father of a three-year-old girl, and a member of the Kiwanis Club. We believe it can safely be stated that Ward will be a showman for the balance of his active business life.

START THE NEW YEAR RIGHT WITH THIS B. O. PROSPERITY CAMPAIGN!

Many Fine Slants Included in This Resumé of a Tried and Proven Drive, With All Details for You to Follow!

Hugh Borland, former manager of the Armitage Theatre in Chicago, sent us the campaign book from which this was written. There were many slants that could not be incorporated but we feel certain that most managers will understand how to work them out without our going into minute details covering them. We suggest that you read this through with a definite idea of putting it over yourself.

LOCATED in a community thickly populated by trade workers sorely beset with reverse business conditions, and faced with a steady decline of patronage at a twenty-five cent top, Hugh S. Borland, former manager of the Armitage Theatre, Chicago, had the choice several months ago of either reducing his rate of admission or evolving a plan to keep his house out of the red.

Hugh S. Borland

Realizing the tremendous handicap attached to raising the price of admission when once it had been lowered, he decided on the latter course and the "Armitage Prosperity Drive," virtually an elaborate cooperative "two-for-one" deal between theatre and merchants' association, became the tonic that brought relief to a trying situation.

Two adults admitted for twenty-five cents was the keynote of the policy which was to be kept in effect until conditions warranted a return to the straight twenty-five cent rate. Better a crowded house at half-rate, reasoned Borland, than one with thin, scattered attendance. As a matter of fact his plan, which we are about to relate in detail, not only kept the house out of the red but yielded a nice profit shortly after it went into effect.

Plan Cautiously!

Mapping out his campaign with the same care usually given inauguration of events such as Greater Movie Season, etc., Borland arranged for special advertising, special trailers, merchant tie-up, ballyhoos, special lobby display and front and climaxed all effort with a Grand Opening. 20,000 heralds were distributed; 70,000 "Prosperity Tickets" were printed especially for the occasion; 500 special window cards were advantageously placed, and 500 special one-sheets were posted in choice spots.

The "Prosperity Tickets" were made up in series from A to G, each of the 10,000 lots done in a different color in order to check returns from the various neighborhoods. The tickets were distributed from three sources: 1—Ten tickets, accompanied by a well written, explanatory letter, were circulated through the mailing list. 2—Distribution through merchants, together with display of "Prosperity" cards in windows. 3—Good looking girl stood in lobby for first week and handed out tickets. She wore a band reading, "Take A Ticket And Be Happy."

The heralds were distributed the day before and on opening day of the campaign through boys sent out to the various neighborhoods. They shouted: "Extra! Extra! Big Prosperity Drive Now On! This Prosperity Edition Free—This Extra Special Free! Read All About The Big Entertainment Prosperity Drive That Will Rock Chicago." two of the ballyhoo boys were assigned to each crew, the balance of the boys making the house-to-house coverage. To expedite distribution a map showing streets to be worked was given to each crew manager and their efforts checked by Borland and an usher in an auto while work was in progress.

All programs used during the campaign carried cover copy on the Drive, as you may see from the accompanying reproduction of one. The special heralds were four page affairs, measuring 16½ by 11¾, with "Drive" copy on front cover; institutional copy, merchants' ads and attractions listed on second page; more institutional copy, ads and attractions on the third, and a listing of participating merchants on the back cover.

Opening the Campaign!

The first pre-announcement trailer carried the following copy: "The Thunderbolt Has Struck!—With the Greatest Entertainment Scoop In Armitage History! During this time the Armitage Theatre will bring Happy Days back again by being the first theatre in Chicago to have an Entertainment Prosperity Drive.—Merchants cooperating with the Armitage Theatre in this Prosperity Drive of Greater Entertainment for Less Money will display Cards in their windows and gladly give you Armitage Prosperity Tickets Free for the asking.—One Of These Prosperity Tickets And 25 Cents Will Admit Two Adults.—One Person Sees a Free Show.—These Prosperity Tickets Are Good Any Evening Except Saturdays, Sundays and Holidays.—This Prosperity Drive will enable everyone to see every change of program with a decrease in their weekly entertainment expenditures.—This New Idea Will Be Inaugurated At This Theatre (date). Watch and Wait for (date) And See A Free Show During the Armitage Entertainment Prosperity Drive, That Will Take Chicago By Storm. This Will Be A Permanent Policy Until This Period of Depression Is Over."

Revamp This Campaign to Suit Local Conditions and Then Tie In the Merchants and Newspaper for Extra Business!

The second pre-announcement trailer read as follows: "Armitage Prosperity Drive Is Now On!—And Is Setting the Whole Neighborhood Afire With a New Prosperity Slogan.—'Go To the Armitage And Chase Away Your Entertainment Depression.'—Let's All Form A Chain Of Armitage Prosperity Boosters.—by distributing Armitage Prosperity Tickets among our friends and acquaintances, telling them to tell their friends and acquaintances about.—this New Prosperity Drive Of Greater Entertainment For Less Money.—so that they may get their share of Joy and Happiness from this Prosperity Drive that is chasing away Entertainment Depression from Hundreds of Movie-goers Daily.—This Will Be A Permanent Policy Until This Period of Depression has Passed.—Patronize The Armitage Theatre—We Think Of Our Patrons First—In Spite Of This Depression."

Street Ballyhoo Effective!

For a street ballyhoo a wagon was transformed into an old time, pioneerman's covered wagon, with the following copy painted in red on each side: "Happy Days Are Here Again—Armitage Prosperity Drive Is Now On!—See A Free Show—One Prosperity Ticket and 25c Will Admit Two Adults At The Armitage Theatre." This bally stopped at busy intersections in various neighborhoods and explanatory announcements were made by an usher who played the role of soap-box speaker.

The merchant tie-ups included drug stores, wherein a 30 cent "Armitage Prosperity Sundae" was made up to sell for 15 cents and plugged by appropriately printed paper strips on fountain and windows, and a general cooperative "Prosperity Week" campaign sponsored by the Business Men's Association and other merchants. During the first week of the campaign the stores all ran big ads in all local neighborhood papers, calling attention to the "Big Prosperity Week Sales" to be held in connection with Armitage Prosperity Drive. Paper strips with the following copy were pasted in all windows of stores participating in the campaign: "Big Prosperity Week Sales Now On!—Buy Now! Look At These Values!—Your Money Does Big Things—This Week Come In And Look Around—There's No Obligation."

For an advance lobby display a one-sheet card with a cutout "Thunderbolt" was placed in an attractive frame, with crepe

ROSENTHAL'S FINE SHOW-SELLING!

IT may be a little late to report "Crooner" exploitation but there's no telling when the following idea, used by Robert Rosenthan, manager of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Albany, N. Y., might pop up as a great gag for another picture.

The accompanying photo of the big megaphone, masked singer, etc., only tells half the story. This was the setting for a Crooner Marathon Contest, staged atop the Strand's marquee and won by a hardy crooner who crooned for fifteen and one-half hours without missing a single off-note. There were ten entries in all and the stunt stopped thousands of passers-by. It meant box-office to Rosenthal.

The other photo will convey a fair idea of the realistic bally he arranged on "Horsefeathers." Note the make-up of the Marx Brothers impersonators, which, to us, looks mighty good. Apparently the coop on the back of the truck was made to resemble a dog-catcher's outfit, for there's a small sign on the side reading, "We're going to the dogs," and there's a couple of objects inside that resemble two urchins.

One more note on Rosenthal's activities, before we thank him for again resuming contributions to this department. He gets a great effect on short titles by stepping up to exceptionally large proportions the display letters used on the marquee sides, which, when illuminated, makes a big flash on the rather narrow thoroughfare in front of the theatre. Okay, Bob, and let's hear from you again in the near future.

One thing more: note the "crooning time" clock, which indicates when the next feature show begins. This gadget is becoming a popular means of passing on this information to passersby.

JOHNSON HAS FOUND HIS WAY 'ROUND IN REYNOLDSVILLE, PA.

We can easily see that Fred E. Johnson, former circuit theatre manager who went independent a short time ago as skipper and operator of the Adelphi Theatre in Reynoldsville, Pa., hasn't forgotten any of his early lessons in showmanship.

On the front page of a local paper we have before us, appears not one but two news stories involving Fred and the Adelphi. One is headed "Matinee Will Benefit the Needy" and forthwith proceeds to advise the populace that "a can of this or a pound of that" will gain youngsters admission to a special Saturday matinee to be held for benefit of the needy.

The other story was headed "School Night at the Theatre" and enlightened the public on High School and Football Night" at the Adelphi, when the local team was due to be entertained in conjunction with the showing of "All American." It was stated that the performance was in the nature of a benefit for the Athletic Association, with the school receiving a percentage on all tickets sold outside the theatre. Students helped to plug sale of the tickets.

Which, as we pointed out above, is evidence that Fred is getting acquainted with the citezens of his newly adopted town. This is about the first peep we've had from him since Reynoldsville became his new address, owing to the fact that his time has been occupied with the many duties attending a change of theatre management. We know Fred will come through as of yore just as soon as he gets his feet on the ground again.

Locating in a strange city and the vast amount of campaigning necessary for re-establishment ought to make an interesting story. We'll look for details later.

BORLAND'S PROSPERITY CAMPAIGN!

paper pasted over the thunderbolt opening. A 100 watt lamp was used with flasher for lighting effect. In the copy arranged around the cutout thunderbolt the word "Beware" stood out in large, red letters, such As: "BEWARE—A—Thunderbolt Will Strike. Watch Our Screen Next Week For A Sterling Announcement!"

The following copy in green letters was used on a black velvet background: "Become a Regular Armitage Prosperity Moviegoer By Asking Your Merchants for Prosperity Tickets." The transoms over the entrance doors carried the following: "The Doorway To Entertainment Prosperity." Round hangers with the following variety of copy were hung under the canopy: "Armitage Prosperity Drive Is Now On—Greater Entertainment For Less Money—Chicago's Greatest Show Bargain—Always A Good Show At the Armitage—Perfect Sound, Comfort and Service—Best Pictures From Leading Studios—Perfect Vision From Every Seat—Perfect Hearing From Every Seat—A Warm Welcome To All—Neighborhood's Joy Spot."

On opening night canopy and building were decorated with flags, pennants and hangers. Two revolving searchlights, which were used at night and seen for many miles around, were promoted free of charge from the local Curtiss flying field. A parade staged by the merchants association assembled in a designated spot and marched en masse to the theatre, where a band played until the show started. Merchants and officers of the business men's organization were guests of the theatre and after the first show the president of the association made a speech from the stage, congratulating Borland for staging the Prosperity Drive, and expressing his enthusiasm for the bright neighborhood business prospects brought about by the move. Next morning the papers all ran front page stories, along with flashlight photos taken the night before showing the president of the Business Men's Association and the Manager of the Armitage shaking hands.

At this writing the Armitage Prosperity Drive has been in effect for several months and, as far as we know still is, if Borland's threat to continue it to the "end of the depression" has been carried out. What is more to the point, however, is that he found his theatre in a bad jam and solved the situation with the campaign outlined above. It appears to us that he exercised a great deal of painstaking work in mapping out his campaign and left few stones uncovered. Many two-for-one schemes have been brought to our attention but rarely one so comprehensively planned and executed. We feel sure that other Club members, similarly situated, will profit from Borland's experience.

LARRY CONLEY USED EFFECTIVE FRONT ON JERSEY CITY THEATRE

Larry Conley of the Warner Bros. Stanley Theatre in Jersey City recently used one of the most effective fronts that has been seen there in a long time. During the run of "Tiger Shark" the entire front of the theatre featured "deep-sea" stuff, including a ship's bridge with wheelhouse, bells, and all the trimmings, done in marine colors of blues, greens, silver, yellow, etc. There was a glass aquarium around the box-office with a large assortment of tropical fish on display, borrowed from a local pet shop. Tropical plants added a fine touch to the idea.

Atop the box-office was the actual reproduction of a ship's bridge. The doorman, instead of working from the sidewalk, walked up and down the bridge, giving the wheel an occasional spin. Foghorns and ship's bells were blown and rung at frequent intervals. Life preservers, ropes, lifeboats, etc., were all genuine props. A constant flow of "rain" kept washing over the glass-enclosed wheelhouse to further the illusion of the ship on the high seas. Props that were not real were made of heavy compo board.

The outer sides of the lobby were representative of the ocean, cleverly painted on heavy board. Framed by real hawser hopes, two transparencies were used on the extreme ends of the front.

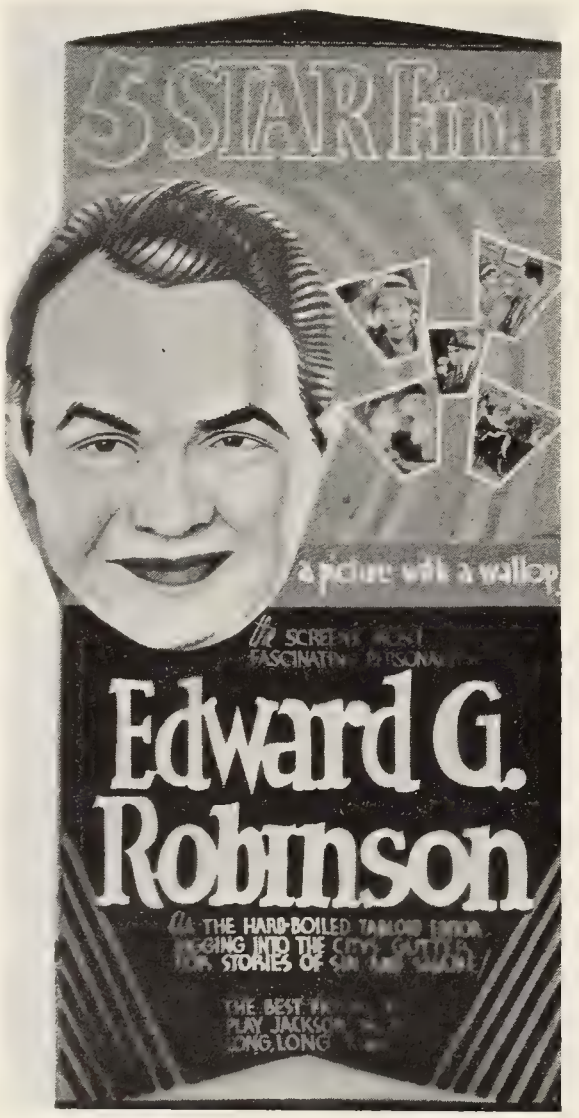
Going further still, the ship's bridge was given a rocking motion. The marquee was done in the same nautical fashion. The marine atmosphere was also used in the lobby, where a splendid display of deep-sea fishing equipment supplemented an elaborate display of stills of Robinson, Arlen and Johann in dramatic scenes.

A very clever touch added to the display was the use of the following optical illusion: a parrot was placed "under water" by the use of a special glass compartment in the aquarium, creating the illusion of the bird actually living under water—a special record in parrot talk urged passersby to purchase tickets and was connected with the public address system to further mystify the public. This stunt secured excellent results in attracting crowds. The entire front and lobby scheme was given a large share of credit for the excellent business done by "Tiger Shark" at the Stanley. And, the proof of the pudding lies in the fact that the police had to be called out to handle the Saturday night crowds.

ATTRACTIVE WINDOW DISPLAYS ARRANGED BY MANAGER McFALL

A number of very attractive window displays were arranged in connection with his campaign on "Red Dust" by C. McFall, manager of Shea's Buffalo Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

The tie-ups included a window in an exclusive shirt shop for Clark Gable sweaters; four windows in Liggett Drug Stores, calling attention to story of picture in "Movie Mirror"; jewelry store windows featuring Hamilton watches and Gable stills; two windows featuring Cadillac car and Jean Harlow, and special windows in millinery stores using hat still of Harlow.



POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Here are two impressions of Bill Robinson from the artists' point of view. Both are unusually good and provide distinct lines of approach according to the artist's conception of how this star should be sold.

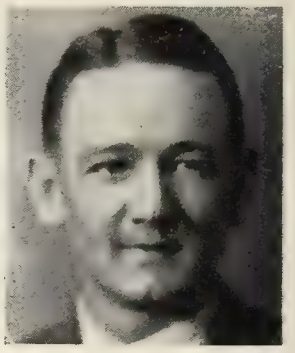
The one above is from the ever-dependable Will Wills of Syracuse and points north in New York State, while the one below comes from the prolific art shop of D. Newton Perkins of the Majestic Theatre in Jackson, Miss.

These contrasts in art work when associated with a particular star should be a welcome addition to the poster art series. Let's have some more like these from other contributors.

NETH PRESENTED AD IN NEW STYLE WHEN PLUGGING NEW FILM

Real Neth, owner of the Grand Theatre in Columbus, hit upon a new idea in presenting his advance advertising on "Cabin in the Cotton." Instead of running a four-column display ad, he used four different one-columns daily, spotted throughout the amusement page. Each ad sold a different angle of the picture. In this way Neth got across, not only every salient selling feature of the picture but also made sure that Columbus knew that "Cabin in the Cotton" was going to open at the Grand. Spotted the way the one-column ads were throughout the page, there was mighty little chance of a reader missing all four ads. The fine opening day business enjoyed by the picture showed that Neth's idea had borne fruit.

LAWRENCE STILL ON THE JOB DOWN SOUTH IN PARIS, TENNESSEE



We hear that our friend and Round Tabler, H. L. Lawrence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., is still batting out the old ball at a lively clip, despite general business conditions in his section of the country. Among his latest efforts were turkey give-aways and a "Big Double Show" consisting of a "Society Revue" on the stage.

According to the dope, he's not only tried every known scheme but many that are unknown to show business to keep out of the red. Some day, when the spirit moves him and there comes a let-up in duties, maybe he'll sit down in front of the old typewriter and knock off a history of what it took the past several months to put the Capitol over. We believe Lawrence will have some interesting slants to convey through these columns to his fellow Club members.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Jack Johannsen had the same thought in his head when he picked out the theatre for a career as many another man before him. He liked the game.

So in he went, hook, line and sinker at the age of 18 years, as usher at the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., and kept at the job until he was promoted to the doorman's job at the same theatre. From doorman he climbed to the assistant manager's post in the Modjeska and eventually was placed in charge of the house.

Jack Johannsen

He is at present in charge of the Imperial Theatre in Augusta, which is plenty proof that he hasn't lost any time getting somewhere in this business. He has stuck with Publix Theatre Corporation ever since he started and a responsible job is his reward for faithful service.

Johannsen was born in Augusta on April 4, 1909, and educated in Christian Brothers and Academy of Richmond County, Augusta. He would again choose show-business, he sincerely believes, should he have to start all over again.

JESSE CLARK'S GANG DOING GOOD WORK IN GULF-TAMPA HOUSES

We are pleased to report, through the courtesy of Howard Jaudon, that the fellows who uphold the fortunes of Gulf Theatres down in Tampa, Fla., have, as usual, been rendering an excellent account of themselves.

For instance, take the clever stunt worked out on "Air Mail" by J. L. Cartwright, J. D. Woodard and Ben Blackmon, all of the Victory Theatre. This stunt, which originated with the Universal home office, was worked out advantageously in Tampa through cooperation of the Eastern Air Transport Company officials, who donated transportation facilities when the attractive young lady was delivered to the theatre. The accompanying photo shows her being taken out of a mail bag by the postmistress. Newspapers came through with generous publicity, radio stations arranged interviews for Miss Elsie Williams and the best hotels extended accommodations during her stay in the city.

Newspaper tear sheets testify to the fine results obtained from a stunt worked on "Little Orphan Annie" by Jesse L. Clark, J. L. Cartwright and Jaudon. They tied up with the paper to have children admitted to a special matinee for one nickel and a comic strip of "Little Orphan Annie." A line-up of 3,000 kids caused Sid Landers, manager of the Park Theatre, to remark that "he'd never seen anything like it in his life."

The Victory management also put over a successful Fashion Show tie-up with a prominent dress store a short time ago that returned excellent results to all concerned. The stunt included an orchestra and radio broadcast each night and all display ads and art in the newspapers gave the theatre a whale of a lot of free space.

The other photo shows the attractive display built, we believe, by Jaudon for "Big Broadcast." Note the central figures and the aerials at either side.

It's gratifying to be in touch again with fellows down on the Tampa firing line.

INVESTING IN REFUND INSURANCE!

One of the manager's bugaboos is the fear of a breakdown of his electric current. In many parts of the country this is a regular occurrence and little progress has been made by appealing to the companies serving the theatre.

Where a theatre enjoys the protection of emergency battery or generator equipment, this danger has been entirely eliminated. But, unfortunately, the great majority of houses are not so equipped and must plug along hopefully praying that the juice will stay on.

A recent investigation disclosed the interesting fact that in many towns and cities there are two separate and distinct feed lines running through, or under, the street. The electric company might agree to run the second line into your meter room providing you install a hand-operated or automatic throw-over switch whereby current is switched from the dead line to the live one in the event of a breakdown.

This angle is worth investigating and talking over with your local electric company, as something can certainly be worked out to help overcome the heavy burden of admission refunds whenever the service is interrupted.

JAKE ROSENTHAL ON SICK LIST; WRITING POEMS FOR COLUMNIST

We are informed by Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, that the reason we haven't heard from this popular and energetic Round Tabler is because he's been on the sick list. No details beyond those few words, so we can't advise his friends whether he's been suffering from just a mild set-back or something more serious.

However, we see by a tear sheet that Jake's still crashing the columns of the "Chicago Tribune." Under a head entitled "Dumbell Pomes" follows: "Most People Think We'll Never Get Out—Of Our Present Gloomy Pickle—Until We Are Able to Buy a Foamy Glass—Of Beer for Just a Nickel—Jake Rosenthal."

Okay for your sentiments, Jake; we're right with you. Maybe if you had a big schooner alongside right now you wouldn't be feeling so tough. At any rate, here's hoping that you'll be yourself again soon.

Boy Scout Tie-Up

Word has gone out from World-Wide that "Drum Taps," a recently released western film featuring Ken Maynard will receive support from every Boy Scout Troop in the country on account of the picture's direct relation to organization activities.

MODESTY FORBIDS! or A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME!

Every now and then a letter blows into the Club office from some Round Tabler in which the writer modestly states: "I have put off sending in an account of my work on account of not having done any outstanding or original piece of exploitation. . . ."

Bosh and nonsense! And more of the same! If all of our members waited for something entirely original to send along, we'd never get these pages filled. Nine times out of ten, stunts can be traced back to another source, as most of you know. It's not originality so much as the way new ideas are adapted to old ones.

Modesty is highly commendable, even in these days, but don't be so modest—you fellows who have been holding back until you get a stunt good enough to make old P. T. turn over in his grave. Let's hear what you're doing! "CHICK"

DE PISA USED TWO EFFECTIVE SELLING SLANTS ON PICTURE

Two natural angles of exploitation were taken advantage of by Joe M. De Pisa, publicity director of Loew's State Theatre, Boston, when he campaigned "Mr. Robinson Crusoe."

Having in mind the remarkable radio receiver constructed from cocoanuts and sea shells by Mr. Fairbanks, he tied-up with a large department store for a big window which featured both product and picture.

Since the National Organization of Boy Scouts put its official endorsement on the picture, De Pisa also played up that angle by special letter, etc., and succeeded in effecting a large turn-out to one of the shows.

It's been some little time since we've been in touch with De Pisa's work and we're glad to see his name back among Round Table contributions, even if we did have to turn to the U. A. home office to find out what was going on at the State. What do you say, Joe?—shoot along some news once in awhile.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Eleven years is rather a tender age to become initiated into the mysteries of showbusiness, but that's just when L. W. Bevel, at present manager of the Princess Theatre, Harriman, Tenn., entered the game.

L. W. Bevel

He started as an advertising boy with a theatre concern in Franklin, Ky., remaining with this outfit for five years and then going to Bowling Green, Ky., where he took over a house on his own. Following a fling at owner - management, he went with Publix for three years in the Bradenton, Fla., district, after which he returned to Dyersburg, Tenn., and joined the Crescent Amusement Company. He was later transferred to Harriman, his present location. In addition to the Princess Theatre, Bevel has managed the American, Bowling Green; the Palmetto, Palmetto, Fla.; the Wallace, Bradenton, and the Frances and Capitol, Dyersburg, Tenn.

Bevel was born in Franklin, Ky., in 1907, and educated in the schools of his birthplace. He's a married man and belongs to the Rotary Club, W. O. W. and Royal Arcanum. He has no regrets about choosing showbusiness as a career.

ALWAYS ROOM FOR SOME MORE!

C. S. "DOC" CREWS

is the skipper of the Fox-Cabrillo Theatre 'way out in San Pedro, Calif., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our organization. "Doc" is one of those hustling showmen out on the West Coast who goes out and sells shows, so we believe we can count upon him to furnish his share of merchandising ideas to this department. We'll be looking for 'em, Crews, and will await with interest your next letter to Club headquarters. Please convey our best regards to all other Round Tablers out in your section when you meet.

has charge of the big Paramount Theatre, Fox-West Coast house out in Seattle, Wash., and we're certainly glad to record that he's another addition to the constantly growing ranks of this great army of showmen. Unless we're greatly mistaken, Frank, Jr., is the son of the well known Frank Newman, Sr., widely known theatre man from the northwest, and there's no reason to think that he isn't a chip off the old block. Many others in addition to ourselves will be interested to hear what he is doing to step up trade at the Paramount, and if he'll drop us a line now and then we'll see that the information is passed along. Frank should be in a position to contribute some mighty interesting articles to Club pages.

is still another Fox-West Coast man to join this week's crop of new members and he has charge of the Fox-Egyptian out in Denver, Colorado. There's lots of keen competition out his way and that's what it takes to stir up plenty of good ideas on show-selling. Shoot along some of them, Lewellen, so that the rest of the fellows will know what you are doing to boost trade.

is another assistant manager to fall in line with the many other assistants already enrolled in this organization and this is our way of letting him know that his fellow Round Tablers are glad to have him with us. He hangs his hat over in the Rialto Theatre, Hartford, Conn., and we hope that both Kearnes and his boss will find time to keep the Club posted on what they are doing to boost trade these days.

is located in the M-G-M Paris office, where he has the considerable assignment of handling exploitation and publicity for his company in Europe. With all that huge slice of the world to comb Paul ought to have a lot of interesting exploitation material to contribute to this department, so we'll await his future communications with interest. His application for membership in this organization is further indication of the Round Table Club's international scope.

has joined the ranks of the many assistant managers enrolled in the Round Table Club and this paragraph is an acknowledgment of his application. He has been helping W. H. Grist, manager the Paramount Theatre in Lynchburg, Va., and came there from Charlotte, N. C., where he held down the job of chief usher. Grist assures us that Eason is a capable assistant and we're glad to have him with us. As to his boss, we've received word that he was recently made city manager for Publix-Kincey in Spartanburg, S. C., and that Hugh Smart, of High Point, succeeds him. Good luck to all.

CLIFFORD H. SWICK was chosen by William Smalley, head of the Smalley chain of theatres in upper New York State, to take charge of the recently opened New Smalley Theatre in Norwich, N. Y., and we're mighty glad to include his name on the Club roster. Swick is an experienced showman and prior to taking his present assignment was associated with a theatre operating company down in Pennsylvania. Last Spring the old Smalley house in Norwich was destroyed by fire, with the result that Swick has a fine new theatre to operate. Lots of luck to him, and we'll be interested to hear what he's doing to boost trade.

is the house manager of the St. Albans Theatre, St. Albans, L. I., N. Y., under Monty MacLevy, and he's another recent addition to the Round Table Club. Like many other men who run houses in the various neighborhoods of New York City, it takes plenty of live wire ideas to compete with large scale circuit theatre opposition. We're sure that Bonney has some good tips up his sleeves to pass along to his fellow members and we'll be on watch for his next communication.

manages the Rialto Theatre, a Warner house over in Hartford, Conn., and we also take pleasure in acknowledging his application for membership in the Round Table Club. He also likes the idea behind our organization and promises to do his best to help keep this department full of interesting slants on showbusiness. That's the proper Club spirit, Gallagher, and we'll be on watch for your share of contributions. Shoot 'em along at the first opportunity.

Kelly has followed this department for some time, and now he, also wants to help the good work along with a few contributions from his section of the country. Meet the rest of the Round Table army, Kelly, and let them know that you are going to help keep up the good work. We'll be awaiting your next communication.

CARL F. WHEELER

is one of Bill Smalley's lieutenants on the Smalley Theatre Circuit of Cooperstown, N. Y., and we are indebted to Supervisor H. L. Richardson for sending his application along. Carl manages the Smalley Theatre in Delhi, N. Y,. and there's no reason to think he won't do as well as many of the other Smalley managers have done in the matter of contributing show-selling information to this department. We'll be looking for word from Wheeler.

hails from out in Bloomington, Ill., where he manages the Castle Theatre. He's another new member of the Round Table Club and we want him to know that he's a welcome addition to the ranks. DAVID GROSSFIELD hails from up in Rochester, N. Y., where he carries on as skipper of the Roxy Theatre. His application for membership in this Club has also been filed and now we're asking the rest of the gang to step up and give Dave a hand. He is another showman in sympathy with the work being done by this organization and now proposes to come through with his share. That's the proper spirit, Grossfield, and now let's hear more from you.

hails from down south in Gladwater, Texas, where he manages the Liberty Theatre, and at this writing he, too, becomes a full-fledged member of the Club. Welcome to this great army of showmen, Jack, and let's hope you will also contrive to find enough spare time to keep Club headquarters informed on what's going on in showbusiness down your way. Shoot along your ideas and we'll see that the good ones are passed on to the rest of the gang.

is the manager of the Fox-McDonald Theatre out in Eugene, Oregon, and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his host of fellow Club members. Step up and meet the gang, Ray, and let them know they can count on your full support by regularly sending along news of what you and your associates are doing to put over shows out in Eugene. They'll be wanting to hear from you, so shoot in some of your ideas at the first opportunity.

hails from out in Clay Center, Kansas, where he manages the Fox-Rex Theatre, and we also take pleasure in acknowledging his application for membership in the Club. Floyd advises us that he always reads Club pages, which is a sure sign right off the bat that he's interested in the work that's going on. Let's hope he will contribute his share.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

REVUES

Earl Lindsay's (8) "Gaieties of 1932"
Baltimore Hippodrome

Here is a nice tab dancing, singing revue that, if speeded up a bit, would probably go over big. In its present form it did fairly well. Jack Beekman and Cecil Blair are featured, the first as master of ceremonies and singer, the second as featured dancer. Another boy does some fast stepping and got the best applause. Five girl dancers are pretty and can dance well. One part is a novelty presenting girls in dances from a book opening in back drop, each girl for a special song, as "Gypsy Sweetheart," "Harvest Moon" and "Robert E. Lee."

Carter Boys' Revue
New Orleans State

Two pretty blondes and a brunette, whose dance steps are the only high spot in the act, make this routine palatable. The Carter boys dance and tell gags in that fast manner which makes clear enunciation impossible and consequently causes the audience to believe the routine is a new type of puzzle.

DANCERS

Gaylene Sisters (2)
Buffalo Buffalo

These two blondes, almost identical in appearance, present a variety of Oriental, acrobatic and precision dances. With the "Bombay" dancing girls for chorus work, exotic costumes and attractive drapes, they won hearty applause.

Adler and Bradford (2)
Detroit Fisher

This talented team of toe adagio dancers are to be commended for the restraint employed in their act. They have personality and charm and base the appeal of their performance upon its grace and skillful rendition, rather than any particularly bizarre and energetic exhibition of fast stepping.

Sylvia Sharp
Cincinnati Albee

Clever toe dancer. Also does routine of various other steps including an old-fashioned dance which went over big. Excellent wardrobe, and a refined, dignified turn throughout.

Ben Omar
Cincinnati Albee

This acrobatic tap dancer knows his stuff and has no difficulty in selling it to the customers. A whirlwind finish sends him off to thunderous applause.

Reinstating Vaudeville

Vaudeville will be reinstated at the RKO Albee, Cincinnati, December 24, with a Friday instead of a Saturday opening.

Tries Vaudeville With First-Runs

As an experiment to see if patrons care for stage attractions at intervals with first-run pictures, Clarence Laws, manager of the United Artists theatre, Berkeley, Cal., is presenting vaudeville numbers one day a week.

The initial program consisted of five stage acts, with the bill headed by Jackie Souders and his orchestra of ten. This director has been with Fox West Coast Theatres for several years and recently completed an engagement at the Fifth Avenue theatre in Seattle. His orchestra provided the stage entertainment at the Fox Grand Lake theatre in Oakland for a year.

The stage acts at the United Artists theatre are being drawn from San Francisco and Oakland presentations.

Pick Radio City Organist

Dick Leibert, last heard at the Brooklyn Paramount theatre, has been chosen solo organist for the new Radio City Music Hall, opening December 27. Mr. Leibert was selected after S. L. Rothafel (Roxy) and Erno Rapee, musical director, had listened to auditions of nine organists. He is only twenty-five years of age. A feature of Mr. Leibert's work at the Music Hall will be a daily evening concert between 8 and 8:30 in which he will offer classical interpretations of popular music.

Arthur Gutow, former Publix organist in Detroit and Chicago, is to share time with Mr. Leibert. Mr. Gutow has quite a reputation as an organist.

Due to an unfortunate misunderstanding, Lew White, who was slated for the new Roxy, which opens December 29, is succeeded by Betty Gould and C. A. J. Parmentier. Miss Gould is a former Paramount organist, while Mr. Parmentier has been one of the organists at the old Roxy since its opening.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

The Yuletide spirit has got me, Pal . . . and all I can do is shout A RIGHT MERRY CHRISTMAS.

ED. DAWSON

COMEDY

Trado Twins
Detroit Michigan

These young men clown and dance their way through an act that is marked by fast stepping and a riot of good, clean fun. The merriment reaches its highest pitch when the twins appear, one atop the other, in the guise of a very tall man and go through all sorts of funny stunts. The youngsters, especially, like this act.

Smith, Rogers and Eddy (3)
San Francisco Warfield

These three fall guys have an eccentric act made up largely of falls. They tumble from all sorts of positions and land in all sorts of shapes, mostly outlandish. When they dance, the steps end in a fall and the same happens when they try acrobatic work, all bringing laughs.

Flo Lewis
Buffalo Buffalo

The pudgy little red-haired star of the revue "Bombay," with her infectious giggle, naive dialogue and peculiarly fetching type of delivery, captured the audience's attention at once. With Leo Karlyn as foil, her attempts to ride in a miniature automobile drew quantities of laughter and applause.

SINGERS

Morton Downey
New York Capitol

Downey opens to a friendly audience with "The Daughter of Peggy O'Neil" as an Irish lad should sing it, and follows with "I'll Never Have to Dream Again," answering a fine reception with "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." In honor of his new-born son, Downey offers an original song entitled "Welcome Stranger." Downey's songs should find favor with any audience.—H. P.

Three Pickens Sisters
Baltimore Hippodrome

Two microphones are used, one at a settee with the three singing "Dinah Lee" and "Paradise," followed by a solo of "Say It Isn't So," and then the three singing "Sentimental Gentleman From Georgia." For encore came their version of "St. Louis Blues." Their voices sounded like musical instruments and were liked.

Frances Langford
Buffalo Hippodrome

An attractive girl, exquisitely gowned and with a personality that doesn't require the microphone to create an illusion, Miss Langford makes a big hit with her throaty contralto rendition of popular numbers. She could have had an encore.

Henry Dunn
Detroit Fisher

Mr. Dunn sings "Without a Song" and "Here Lies Love," and for this is applauded most heartily. As usual, though, he makes far too many gestures.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Leo Weber and Johnny Winters

Salem Paramount

Here are two young fellows who have hit on a really new and original idea in a stage presentation. Both are former organists of note, who have created followings in many cities throughout the country. They have formed a novelty and singing act that should make them in demand in every vaudeville and presentation house that has an organ installed.

Their act is presented on two small organ consoles on which are attached microphones, through which all their announcing and singing are done.

They open with a good rendition of "Midsummer's Night Dream," at the finish of which they go directly into a novel demonstration in song of their instruments. Next comes an exceptionally good offering of "Fit as a Fiddle," instrumentally, from this into a special arrangement of "Put Out the Lights," with a vocal duet that gets a good hand. They follow this with radio impressions of Amos 'n Andy, Bing Crosby, Ed Wynn, Rudy Vallee, and a laughingly funny two in one broadcast. They close with a special arrangement of "Tiger Rag," with applause following that rated their encore. The encore, a specially written verse to "Just Couldn't Say Goodby," drew lusty applause. The important fact of this new team is their good material and the showmanly way they sell it. They are not just two organists on the stage, but a first class act with a new idea.—E. D.

SONG AND DANCE

Rosette and Luttman (4)

New York Valencia

This is an entertaining turn that offers attractive types of dancing together with some fairly good harmony and scat singing by two blonde misses. The act works in two settings, with the singers filling in while principals change attire. Rosette and Luttman, accompanied on the piano by one of the girls, open with an exotic oriental dance which is a combination of ballet, acrobatic and adagio work. This is done to the catchy melody of "Three Shades of Blue," and draws a good response. The sister team do fairly well with their harmonizing of "Sentimental Gentleman from Georgia," and are followed by Luttman, who does a snappy eccentric strut routine to a good hand. Miss Rosette, to the tune of "Manhattan Serenade," does an outstanding ballet routine consisting mainly of pirouettes and "petite tours" which audience liked. The act closes strong with the singing of "Minnie the Moocher" by the sister team, for the first chorus and then a snappy rhythm and strut routine by Rosette and Luttman.—E. D.

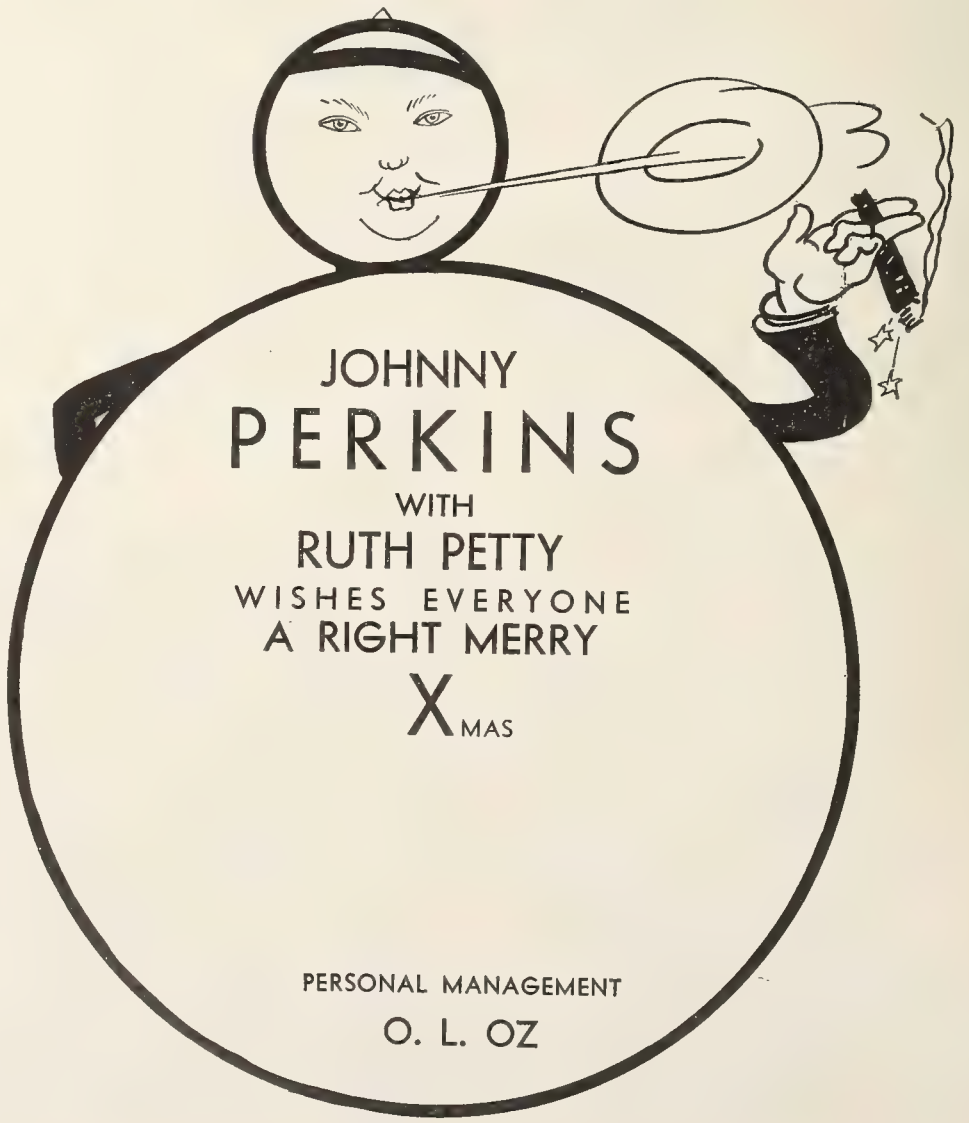
Bert Frohman (3)

Brooklyn Metropolitan

This personable and entertaining young fellow, a former m.c., has a song and dance act that goes over well with audiences. Frohman also has with him a male pianist and an attractive, mad-cap, "dumb" girl named Madelon Killeen, who proves to be an entertaining and versatile performer.

Bert opens the act with a chorus of "Making the Best of It All," in which he sings special lyrics. Madelon interrupts and for a time has the audience in convulsions at her comedy, though it would be more entertaining if reduced one half. She acts so "dumb" that the audience are surprised when, in a most pleasing voice, she sings "You're My Everything," and follows with a well done high kick dance routine, both of which gain good applause. For closing, Bert nicely sings "Somebody Loses—Somebody Wins," to a good reception.—E. D

Radio City Orchestra on Air



The Roxy Mammoth Symphony, Radio City musical organization, on Christmas Day will inaugurate a series of Sunday radio broadcasts from the stage of the Music Hall at the center. S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel will direct the group, which will be led by guest conductors. The program will be broadcast over a nationwide NBC-WJZ network. Several chorus groups will participate.

Returns to Boston House

Sid Reinherz has returned to lead the Met Collegians in the lounge of the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, following an extended radio tour. The group plays for the dancing of patrons in the lounge.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) this week presents another of his always interesting organ novelties, to which the audiences are accustomed to sing everything including his theme song, "Voice of RKO."

Bernie opens with one of his original and special verses to the popular tune, "Please," which served to introduce the solo and tell of requests. After a short oral greeting and talk, Bernie played "Please, Mr. Hemingway," and "Everyone Says I Love You." Then in commemoration of Joyce Kilmer, composer of "Trees," Bernie played this number as the audience joined in singing. A group of three songs, "Contented," "I'll Follow You" and "Never Have to Dream" followed. None of Bernie's solos is complete without an old-timer, so he offered "Whispering" and "Blue Heaven," which the audience sang lustily. His original current news events to the tune, "Say It Isn't So," led to the usual tremendous reception.

KENNETH LEA (Elyria Capitol) has changed his style of organ presentations and is now presenting two numbers, which he plays in concert style, and to a much greater response from this discriminating audience.

For this week's offering, Lea opened with that popular tune, "How Deep Is the Ocean" and played it in beautiful style. For the closing number he played "You're Telling Me" in a fast, peppy tempo. Better applause than usual with community singing greeted Lea at the finale.

LES HOADLEY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) presents for his organ number "Okay Audience," opening with a political piece set to the tune of "This World Was Made for Fun and Frolic." Others selections included "Sing a New Song," "Whistle and Blow Your Blues Away," "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," with words flashed large and small to be sung loud and soft, and "Please."

BOB DEMMING (Buffalo Century) had them all singing again with his "You're Telling Me" and introducing "We Just Couldn't Say Good-bye" and "Shanty in Old Shantytown." He also gave the customers a grand time mixing up their vowels and consonants in "tongue-twisters" about "Peter Piper" and "Sister Susan," to the tone of "Comin' Through the Rye."

MARY DOBBS (Denver Isis), the only organist being used in a grind house in Denver, is mighty popular with her audience, as proved by the generous applause. The Isis is a 15-cent Fox house, and that organization is to be congratulated on keeping its music up to so high a standard. Miss Dobbs played "I'll Never Have to Dream Again," the vocal part being carried by Geo. Getsey. Miss Dobbs has complete control of the organ, and regularly presents solos that get across nicely.

TECHNOLOGICAL

FILM DENSITY PROBLEM NEARING SOLUTION

By F. H. Richardson

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 152.—(A) When is the normal capacity of a water pipe or an electrical conductor said to have been reached? (B) How does increasing or decreasing diameter of water pipes or electrical conductors affect their resistance to water or current flow? (Recently a "student" of the "school" entered protest concerning the asking of simple, elementary questions, which, said he, "you very well know every projectionist understands." Certainly, but this "school" is not alone for the experienced projectionist. For them it presents the opportunity for review in the more simple things, and for real study in others. But we must remember, gentlemen, that once we were ourselves beginners, just as many others are today. We did not then understand the "simple things." New men enter the profession every day.. They have the right to learn.). (C) How does increasing or decreasing the length of a water pipe or an electrical conductor affect its resistance? (D) If the interior surface of a water pipe is made rougher than it was, resistance to flow of water is increased. What is analogous to that in electric conductors?

The Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers had a most interesting and lively session at its last meeting. Present were Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president, and Sylvan Harris, general manager, of the SMPE; Harry Rubin, chairman; Jessie Hopkins, secretary of the committee; William Kunzmann, P. A. McGuire, J. J. Finn, Herbert Griffin, George Edwards, J. O. Baker, J. E. McRae, L. Francis, Rudy Meiling and myself—fourteen in all—and all men representing important organizations.

The matter of making further screen measurements to arrive at the average screen illumination used in theatres of various classes was considered. The subcommittee, headed by me, was instructed to proceed. It is proposed to ascertain the average theatre screen illumination and then attempt to induce producers to put out only prints of a density which may be projected best at that illumination value.

It is of course understood that any print may be run in high-class theatres where maximum screen brilliancy obtains, and in theatres where the illumination is not so high, therefore perfection cannot be had by this plan, but certain it is that if it be carried through, great benefit will be derived. Today many if not all studios have relatively small screen images in their screening rooms. They print to a density which shows up maximum at that brilliancy, forgetting that such high illumination is used in few if any theatres, whereas in a very large percentage of them the screen illumination is so much lower that only poor results can be had with the prints received.

There has been complaint that in many prints received by projectionists, the black changeover dot has been well nigh invisible in dark scenes. This matter was taken up with producers, the committee suggesting that in such scenes the dot should be surrounded by a white circle. A letter was received from Warner Brothers admitting that the complaint was justified and that orders had been issued that in future the white circle would be added in all Warner prints. The committee instructed Secretary Hopkins to communicate with Warner Brothers, expressing the appreciation of the committee for its prompt action in the matter.

Herbert Griffin made report that in compliance with instructions from the committee he had made up a complete list of tools required for use in repairing projectors. I questioned the advisability of encouraging projectionists to undertake the repair of the more delicate, vital parts of projectors. There was considerable discussion on this point. A silly rule, promulgated by the late Local 306 regime, that no projectionist be permitted to do any sort of work in the nature of making repairs, was cited. The consensus of those present seemed to be that while it is seldom if ever advisable for projectionists to undertake repair work for which they have neither the expert knowledge nor the tools, it nevertheless is the duty of projectionists to "keep the show going" and to make any temporary repairs necessary to that end, and to make certain permanent repairs as well, especially when located in isolated places.

The committee also discussed the matter of perforated screens, the unanimous opinion being that the necessity for them is at least questionable. Some, including myself, voiced emphatic objection to them, declaring it to be their opinion that as good or better results may be obtained with unperforated screens, with horns placed either at top or bottom thereof, or both. The opinion was expressed by me that the unperforated screen had been tried only with horns located at the sides, whereas that was a wrong location, from any one of several points of view.

I proposed, and the committee as a whole appeared impressed by the reasonableness of the idea, that in theatres having but one floor, the horns should be located immediately at the top of the screen. With theatres having balconies it might be well to place horns at the bottom as well, angled upward to take care of the balcony, or possibly vice versa. That would be a matter to be determined by experiment.

The Projection Practice Committee certainly is doing good work and its work also is beginning to bear fruit. Chairman Harry Rubin and Secretary Jessie Hopkins are both entitled to much credit for the excellent manner in which the work is directed and carried on.

Cowan to East to Further Research of Academy Group

Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast, left Los Angeles last week for a tour of three weeks to the east, during which he is visiting Chicago, Rochester, New York and Washington in connection with the program of the Academy's technical research council.

Mr. Cowan will confer with equipment and supply manufacturers and theatre executives with two major projects of the council in mind—standardization of the length of film reels and improvement in the quality of release prints. Mr. Cowan will also arrange laboratory tests in connection with subcommittee work on a proposed silent camera and the correction of distortion in theatre projection.

Studios were asked this week by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to insure a closer observance of Uniform Aperture Practice adopted in February of this year. Particular stress has been laid upon having cameramen handle composition so that projectionists in theatres can "frame" from the top without losing any pictorial value. The Academy's reminder was sent to studio executives and technical department heads.

The Academy also has announced the appointment of Major Nathan Levinson as chairman of the 1932-33 papers and program committee of the Technicians' Branch.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

THE BIGGEST MECHANICAL FACTOR IN TODAY'S MOVIES

EASTMAN Super-sensitive "Pan" has caused such widespread changes and improvements that it easily rates as the biggest mechanical factor in the excellence of today's motion picture. On the foundation supplied by this film, cameramen, directors, actors, and laboratories have been able to build a motion picture art as far ahead of old techniques as movies on the original Eastman "Pan" were ahead of color-blind photography...Eastman Super-sensitive "Pan" finds its fullest possible expression with the gray-backed base on which it is now supplied. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
